of his troops might endanger the whole, and therefore made it a principal point to preserve his army as much as possible, and with the advantage of the passes, and the affection of the country people, to distress and disable his adversary, which he effected with much skill and wisdom, and maintained the honour of the arms of Spain with great reputation; and at last, when the King his Master was forced by the weight of the Alliances against him, to relinquish the Island, he brought a gallant army back into Spain (1).

Whilst the troops were arriving, and the vessels to transport them getting ready, Admiral Byng assisted at several Conferences with the Viceroy of Naples and General Mercy, about the intended descent on Sicily. All agreed, that Syracuse was out of the way, but it was not so easy to determine, whether it would be best to land at Palermo, or near Melazzo. Palermo was judged safest, and would not only make them Masters of the capital City, but also of the fertile Province of Mazzara, from whence they might easily draw provisions and necessaries for the subsistence of the army. But Melazzo was most expeditious, as it would press the enemy closer, and bring matters more quickly to a decision; and this opinion prevailed. But, when they came to examine into the state of their military stores, they were so deficient in a train of artillery, that the Admiral yielded to supply them with cannon, powder, and ball from the Spanish prizes, rather than suffer time to be lost for want thereof.

All things being at length got ready, the army embarked, consisting of ten thousand foot, and three thousand five hundred horse, all choice troops, and the flower of those, that had lately served victoriously in Hungary. The Admiral sailed from the Bay of Baie, the 22d of May, N. S. with eight men of war, and above two hundred transports; and, on the 27th in the evening, arrived before Melazzo, from whence General Zumingen came off, and advised Count de Mercy to land in the Bay of Patti, about twenty miles westward, the coast to the eastward being all guarded by the enemy. Upon this, so good a disposition and order was made, that, the

and having no small frigates with him, he converted the Los Hospital ship into a frigate, and, putting twenty guns and one hundred men into her, sent her, under the command of Captain Prothero, in quest of the said privateer. The Captain fortunately met with her off the Island of Copraia, and after a smart engagement took her. She had one hundred and thirty men, most French, of whom fifty-six were killed, and nineteen wounded, with the loss only of two men in the Los, and four wounded. The Admiral directed the prisoners to be sent to Thoulon, and delivered into the custody of the Intendant; and he wrote to the English Ambassador at Paris to represent those proceedings to the Regent, to whose justice he left the prisoners. Another ship was fitted out at Venice, with fifty guns, and two hundred and fifty men, all Venetians, except three Spaniards, and eight English; and having taken a Spanish commission at Malta, which Signor Patinbo had lodged there for her, she went a cruising on the coast of Spain. The Admiral, being informed of it, sent the Orford and Rupert after her, the latter of which, meeting with her off of Peniscala, engaged and took her by boarding, having killed sixty-one men, and wounded twenty-nine, with the loss only of one man killed and three wounded.

(1) The City of Naples was at this time full of General Officers, and persons of high quality and distinction, and abounded in all the pleasures of that delightful climate. The Viceroy was studious of making the place agreeable to the Admiral, as much out of affection, as politeness. On the festival day of St. Januarius, he appointed him a box near his own, to behold that famous ceremony. The blood continued long without liquifying, at the approach of the head of the Saint. The vast concourse of people began to shew signs of concern: They fell first to praying, afterwards proceeded to groans and lamentations; and, at length, such a confused murmuring and uneasiness was perceived among them, that the Viceroy, being apprehensive of some ill consequences, sent Count Hamilton to the Admiral, to beg he would not take it ill, if he desired him to retire, not knowing what effect it might have upon the populace, if they should take it into their heads to attribute the failing of the miracle to the Saint's being displeased at his presence. The Admiral had no sooner quitted his box, and was stepping into the Viceroy's Coach, but he heard a prodigious shout of, è fatto, è fatto, it is done, it is done; and such joy and exultation appeared in every countenance, as if they had been delivered from some terrible calamity.

1719. the next morning early, all the foot landed in less than two hours, and most of the cavalry by three in the afternoon, having only lost two horses in the voyage.

Upon the landing of the Imperialists, the Marquis de Lede decamped with precipitation, and marched, without halting, to Franca Villa, a strong post, thirty-two miles distant, in a mountainous Country, and from whence three roads led to Palermo, Messina, and Syracusa. Count de Mercy arrived, by easy marches, at Melazzo, and found in the Spanish camp some cannon, with ammunition and utensils of war, which the haste of the Spaniards had left behind.

Whilst matters were preparing here for the further operations of the army, Count Seckendorf was detached with a body of two thousand five hundred foot, and one hundred and fifty horse, to reduce the Islands of Lipari to the Emperor's obedience, which he effected, after some resistance, in four days time. This conquest was absolutely necessary to keep open the navigation between Naples and Sicily, which had been disturbed by the armed vessels of those Islands. Lipari, the principal Island, is said to contain eight thousand inhabitants, a bold people, addicted to pillage, and the best mariners in those parts.

It was now under deliberation, whether the army should go and besiege Messina, or follow the Spaniards, who were strongly intrenching themselves at Franca Villa. Messina had a numerous garrison, and was well provided for a long siege, which might waste away the summer, whilst the Spaniards got in the corn, now near ripe, and kept the magazines of the Island in their possession. It was therefore determined to march towards the enemy, and to endeavour to bring them to battle. The hasty retreat they had made from Melazzo animated Count de Mercy so much, that he did not imagine they would make any great stand at Franca Villa, but that he should trample them under foot (which was his expression) when he came up with them. The way to the enemy lay through a barren mountainous Country, and it took up so much time to get together a few mules and horses for carriage from Calabria, that the army did not move from Melazzo till the 17th of June, N. S. amounting to about twenty-one thousand men. They suffered a most painful march of three days, through wild unknown roads, broken up, and rendered almost unpassable by the enemy, conducted by ignorant guides, and climbing over craggy rocks and precipices, the soldiers oppressed with the weight of their ammunition, and six days bread, which they carried, besides their arms, with a fiery sun burning over their heads, and harassed and assaulted all along the heights and eminences by the armed peasants of the Country, mixed with some Spanish foot; but arriving, the 19th in the afternoon, on the top of the mountain of Tre Fontane, they discovered the enemy incamped below, in the valley of Franca Villa. At the sight of their camp, a shout of joy ran through the whole army, in hopes of coming to a decisive action, which seemed to promise favourably to them, it not being imagined, that the enemy could post themselves in a bottom, with so much advantage against an army defending from higher ground upon them.

The situation of the Spanish camp was in this manner. The rapid river Cantara, whose banks are of a steep quick rock, from six to eight feet perpendicularly deep, and runs through the valley of Franca Villa, was in their front. Their left was on the rising grounds about Franca Villa (the town lying behind in their center) and extended to a high mountain, where they had placed some armed peasants, and a few foot. On the other side of the river (but joined by a bridge to the town of Franca Villa) was a steep rock, with a convent of Capuchins upon it. Here they placed five battalions of their best troops, in as many rows of intrenchments cut into the rock, one above the other; and at the point of the rock was a small battery of two pieces of cannon of three pounders. On their right they had carried on a fortification of large stones, like a wall, all along the river, as far as a high rocky hill, which had a convent on the top, as advantageously fortified, as that of the Capuchins; and, close behind the hill, the steep river Castiglione runs into the Cantara, by means of whose confluence, and the neighbouring mountains being guarded by armed peasants, the Spaniards were secure from any danger in their rear. It was unfortunate to the Germans, that not one deserter, nor even a peasant of the country (who were all up in arms in favour of the Spaniards) came over to give them the least information, so that they knew little of the strength and advantage of the enemies post, till they came to action, and were within musket-shot of their trenches.

Count de Mercy made a disposition for attacking the enemy that evening at three different places. He detached all the first line of foot, consisting of sixteen battalions and twenty-three companies of grenadiers, with three hundred Hussars, under the command of General Zumjungen, to an adjoining hill on the left. He had under him the Lieutenant-Generals Wallis, Wachtendonck, and the Prince of Holstein. Upon that hill General Zumjungen was to separate his men in two bodies, the one under the command of Wallis, consisting of eight battalions and eleven companies of grenadiers, being to descend on the right, whilst Zumjungen did the same on the left with eight battalions, twelve companies of grenadiers, and the Hussars. All the horse and second line of foot, this consisting of twelve battalions under Lieutenant-General Seckendorf, and the horse under Lieutenant-General Count de Eck, consisting of thirty-five squadrons, including three companies of horse-grenadiers, and as many carabiniers, were at the same time to descend from the mountain of Tre Fontane, and join the other bodies below. Before all this could be effected, night came on, which obliged them to put off the attack till the next morning; and at break of day the second line of foot being got down, and meeting with ten or twelve squadrons of the enemy in the valley, they obliged them, as they advanced, to retire towards their intrenchments. When the army was got down to the places appointed in the valley, Count de Mercy perceiving, that the enemy possessed several considerable posts on a hill to his right, from whence they would flank him in his attack, he ordered Lieutenant-General Seckendorf, and the Prince of Hesse-Cassel, with six battalions, to endeavour to dislodge them from thence, and then to defend and rejoin the army in the general attack, which the 1719.

Generals

The battle of Franca Villa.

1719. Generals Zumjungen and Wallis were ordered to defer till they saw Seckendorf engaged, and descending towards them. The hill being very steep and difficult, and the enemy being very advantageously posted, Seckendorf was obliged to make many windings, which took up much time to get up to them. In the mean while the enemy, seeing that detachment, sent more foot thither, which made Count de Mercy strengthen him with four battalions more; so that it was four in the afternoon before they all arrived on the top of the mountain. Seckendorf, having his ten battalions together, drove the enemy down from thence to their intrenchments; and, if night had not come on too soon, it was thought he would have been able to have forced his way into their lines, which at that place were weakest, and most easy to be penetrated. At the same time four companies of grenadiers of Wallis's body attacked a post of the enemy on the back of the same hill, and drove them thence, whilst the rest of the grenadiers (being seven companies) sustained by the battalions of the same body, and the regiment of Dragoons of Auspach, attacked a small intrenchment, which the enemy had made across the valley, and, having carried it, they advanced on towards the rock of the Capuchins, which they attacked about six in the evening, being reinforced by two battalions of Leffelboltz, which Count Mercy had drawn from the left to sustain them. Here was very warm and bloody work, the Germans being exposed to a continual fire from the several trenches of the enemy on the sides of the rock. During this attack, Count d'Eck, with the carabiniers and horse-grenadiers, followed by the regiments of horse of Liege, Hanover, and Portugal, traversed the valley within half musket-shot of the enemy, and placed himself to the left of Zumjungen, the plain there appearing large enough for the horse to act, and to sustain Zumjungen's attack, and penetrate with him into the enemies intrenchments. But this motion of the horse crossing Zumjungen in his march, did very much retard his attack, so that it was late before he attacked three castles, which stood near the river, within eighty paces of the enemies lines, which he took, not without loss of men. Here the Prince of Hessein was mortally wounded, and, being left on the field of battle, he sent to the Marquis de Lede, who caused him to be carried into Franca Villa, where he died three days after. While Zumjungen was disposing his troops to attack the intrenchments, by the way of a mill, which lay on the river opposite to the castles, he perceived the Hessian battalions on the right following by mistake the two battalions of Leffelboltz to the rock of the Capuchins, which disappointed his design, for it was night before they returned. Count de Mercy animated his troops every where by his presence and example, heading himself the two battalions of Leffelboltz at the attack of the Capuchins, and after having one horse killed under him, and two disabled, he was at last himself dangerously wounded in the reigns with a musket-ball. Night coming on put an end to the action, and left things undecided, except that the Germans maintained some small posts they had gained, which served to straiten the enemy in their camp. In this action the Germans had eight hundred and forty-six men killed, and two thousand four hundred and forty-nine wounded; amongst the latter

Admiral Byng's second son very dangerously, who served as a volunteer. The Spaniards had about one thousand five hundred men killed or wounded. 1719.

Count de Mercy, having withdrawn his wounded men in the night, ranged his army in order to renew the attack next morning; but, the action of the day before having convinced the other Generals of the strong situation of the enemy, and perceiving the soldiers extremely dispirited and dejected with their hardships and ill success, they, with much difficulty, prevailed upon him not to persist in that resolution, but, by extending to the left, endeavour to cut off the enemy from Messina, and open a communication with the English convoy, which (according to agreement) was to rendezvous in Schifo-Bay near Taormina, a sea-port town, about three hours distant from Franca Villa, with the transports laden with provisions, ammunition, baggage, and other necessaries, which the army stood in extreme need of. Here was a contingency of great hazard and danger, which gave the Germans much fear and uneasiness. For it might have happened, that the winds had hindered the convoy from passing through the Faro. Or, if they should have gained their passage into Schifo-Bay, Taormina and all that coast was possessed by the enemy, and it was possible, that the ships might not be able to open a communication with the shore. Or still, if both these points succeeded, the establishing a correspondence between the sea and the camp, through an hostile Country, was another work of hazard and difficulty; and a disappointment, in any one of them, was the inevitable ruin of the whole army, who saw themselves near the end of their provisions, without any other possibility of getting more. But they were soon delivered from their fears, by hearing, that the convoy was safe arrived in Schifo-Bay; that the sailors had taken and destroyed a small sort of two guns, which had endeavoured to molest their anchoring; and that the guns of the men of war had dispersed a body of troops, which the Marquis de Spinola had sent from Messina to the sea-side, to oppose them. Upon this reviving news, Count de Mercy sent General Wachtendonck, with three thousand foot and five hundred horse, down to incamp on the sea-side, where the ships lay at anchor, and ordered the roads, which were hardly passable, to be repaired, under the direction of Engineer-General Schmettau; and, having got some field-pieces from the ships up to the camp, he greatly annoyed the enemy, who lay beneath him. This communication was too important for the Marquis de Lede not to endeavour to interrupt it; and, amongst many skirmishes that daily happened, a party of seven hundred Spanish horse fell in with the bread-waggons and mules, that were returning from the sea-side, laden with provisions for the camp, and guarded only by three hundred horse. The defence, which the Germans made, was reckoned a gallant action. A small party of foot, that happened to be in the neighbourhood, hearing the fire, and coming up to their assistance, they put the Spaniards to flight, and conducted the waggons and mules safe to the camp.

When Count Mercy parted from Admiral Byng at Melazzo, to go in quest of the Spanish army, it was the Admiral's design to return to Naples, and put things there in motion for an intended 1719. intended expedition to Sardinia, which the Duke of Savoy had much at heart, and was no less pressed by the Courts of England and France. But reflecting within himself, that the impetuous temper of the German General, and the contempt he saw he had of the enemy, might possibly bring about some occasions that would want his assistance, he tarried a few days on the coast, in uneasy expectation of the news of the success of their march from Melazzo. The armed peasants had cut off all communication between Franca Villa and Melazzo; so that the first misdoubt he entertained, that things had not gone well, was from hearing the firing of the guns at Messina and at the Faro, and seeing great illuminations made along the coast. Soon after he perceived the Neapolitan galleys rowing out of the Faro, and the General of them, coming on board, gave him an imperfect account of the action, but enough to satisfy him, that it had not been fortunate; upon which he immediately embarked two battalions from the garrison of Melazzo, and about a thousand recruits, who were just arrived there, and sent them, the same day, under a convoy, through the Faro to Scio-Bay. In the evening he received letters from Count de Mercy, informing him of the particulars of the whole action, with the great difficulties he laboured under, and uncertainty what to do; earnestly pressing him to come to the camp, that they might confer and consult together. Upon this, the Admiral sent his first Captain with his own ship and two others to Naples, by whom he sent a letter to the Viceroy, giving his opinion, that all thoughts of an expedition to Sardinia should be laid aside for the present, and the troops, which could be spared from his Government, sent immediately into Sicily, till whose arrival all things there would be at a stand; and that he had sent his officers and ships to promote that service. He then embarked on board the General of the galleys, laying aside the ceremony of his flag and character, and, in his way to Scio, Count de Ligneville came to him in a Felucca, bringing fresh letters from Count de Mercy, which expressed his great impatience to see him. Being landed at Scio, General Wachtendonck renewed the same intreaties, which the Admiral's zeal did not want; who, accepting that General's horses, and forgetting for a while his own station and element, set out under a strong escort, attended by Captain Matthews and his eldest son, and passing through roads strewed with dead bodies of men and horses, that had fallen in skirmishes the day before, between the sea-side and the camp, he alighted at Count de Mercy's tent in the evening, where a guard of Grenadiers being drawn out for his reception, one of them was shot through the head by a musket-ball from the enemy's camp, at the door of his tent, and fell down dead at his feet. He found the General very weak and faint with his wound, the ball still remaining in his reins; but, as he had a magnanimity of spirit superior to his condition, it did not hinder them from entering into conversation on the melancholy situation of their affairs. The General 'made great complaints of Zumjungen, to whose slowness in marching, and coming so late into action, he attributed his ill success. He said, he himself was still of opinion to make another attack upon the enemy, rather than decamp and retire; but that his Officers in general were against it; and in that case he saw nothing left for them to do, but to go down, and join the forces at the sea-side, and march into the Country about Catanea and Syracusa, for their better subsistence. That he had wrote for two battalions of Savoyards to be sent to him from Syracusa, which, with the troops the Admiral had sent from Melazzo, would repair his loss of men: but that the loss of his Officers was irretrievable; for, besides many killed, a considerable number of the best and principal were wounded, and incapable of present service.' After many propositions and schemes started and discussed between them, without any being concluded on, the Count desired the Admiral to stay in the camp that night, to be present at a Consultation of general Officers next morning. The conversation being ended, the Admiral went to see his son, who (as was mentioned before) was wounded in the action, and whom he found languishing in his tent, in a way, that gave little hopes of his recovery, not so much from the malignity of the wound (though that was in a dangerous part) as from the unskillfulness of those who attended him, the German army being very ill provided with surgeons and medicines (1).

Such an universal dejection had reigned throughout the army, on account of the ill success of the late action, and for the loss and disability of so many brave Officers, and they had such continual apprehensions, that the fiery temper of their General would order them on another attack, that their joy on the arrival of the Admiral was inexpressible. They looked on him as their deliverer, who alone, they thought, could extricate them from their present difficulties and misfortunes, and influence their General with cool and prudent counsels. In the morning early he visited General Zumjungen, the second person in the army, whose sedate deliberate temper had procured him great esteem and confidence among the soldiery. He complained much 'of the General's rash impatience, in not giving time to all the troops to come up; which

1719.

(1) Mr. Corbet observes here, It may be wondered, that the Emperor is so well served in the courage of his troops, when so little care is generally taken of their preservation in accidents of wounds or sickness. Surgeons and medicines are few and bad in their armies, and there is little difference between being wounded and killed in action, except that of a lingering or a sudden death. After the battle of Franca Villa, the wounded men were laid on the ground, with their ammunition-bread set by them, and left exposed to the sun and fortune. The General himself had only his own Valot de Chambre to dress his wound, and attend him. It was a moving spectacle to the Admiral, to meet with great numbers of poor wretches in his way up to the camp, some endeavouring, with the support of their wives or comrades, to crawl down to the sea-side, in order to get a passage over to the hospital at Raggio; others unable to go on from pain or faintness, falling down on the earth, and left to die there. This is a great blemish of their service, and gives handle to the maxim which their enemies would fix on them, that they account it cheaper to get a man than cure one, and so give themselves little concern for his recovery.

1719. if he had done, and had delayed the attack till next morning, they would have had the whole day before them, have judged better of the measures for carrying it on, which would then have been disposed in another manner, and with more reasonable expectation of success; and that this was not his own single opinion, but that of all the other Officers. He bewailed the little regard the General gave to the advice of his Officers; and intreated him to oppose any overture he might make at the Consultation for another attack, which he feared was not out of his head, and what he (the Admiral) only had credit enough to dissuade him from it.

The principal Officers of the army being met in the General's tent, the first point he put in question was, Whether the enemy should be attacked again? The Officers keeping a long silence, and directing their looks to the Admiral, he addressed his speech to the General, wherein he 'reminded him of the warning he had formerly given him not to despise the enemy, whose numbers and resolution he now experienced to be otherwise than what he expected. He said, that he had viewed the situation of the enemies camp, the night before; and, though he did not pretend to much judgment in the operations of land service, yet it seemed to his plain understanding, that for one army to attack another equal in number, under the shelter of strong and almost impregnable intrenchments, was rather an undertaking of despair than discretion, and could not be attended with any reasonable hopes of success.' All the other Officers declaring themselves of the same opinion, that question was laid aside. It came next under deliberation, What the army was to do? The General's opinion was, 'That it was insufficient for a speedy conquest of the Island, in regard the enemy had as numerous an army, with all the strong holds and magazines in their possession, and the affection of the people on their side. That, as they could not continue where they were, it was his opinion, they should march into the fertile Country about Catanea, and endeavour to make themselves masters of Augusta; or else canton themselves about Syracusa for their better subsistence, till new and effectual supplies of troops were sent from Germany.' To this the Admiral replied, 'That he was so much of his opinion, that they wanted a further reinforcement of men, that, upon the first news of the ill success of the battle, he had wrote to the Viceroy of Naples his sentiments accordingly: That indeed the Courts of London and Paris did earnestly press the carrying on the enterprize against Sardinia; but, when they should come to be informed of the state of affairs, they would probably consent to have the army, designed for that expedition, pass first into Sicily, which, as things stood, he thought the nearest way to the conquest of both Islands. That, after his departure from them, he would immediately go to Naples, and labour that point with the proper Courts, with all the earnestness and application possible. That, as to their marching in the mean time into the Country about Catanea for subsistence, he apprehended, it would give the world a worse opinion of the late action than it deserved, and make it be concluded, that they had been defeated and disabled; which would blemish the credit of their arms, and give too much spirit to the enemy, and to the Sicilians in their interest. That being now joined by the recruits he had sent them, and the battalions from Syracusa being daily expected, they would be in a condition to act offensively, and advance the Emperor's affairs: That Augusta was out of the way, and not worth their attention, and delaying their time there was drawing the war into unnecessary length; but that the way was open to Messina, the besieging of which City would support the character of their arms, and the taking of it make the reduction of the rest of the Island easy. That, as to what regarded the fleet, the experience of the last winter in keeping two squadrons, one within, the other without the Faro, to block up the ships in Messina, and secure the passage of the provisions, which the army at Melazzo drew from Calabria and Apulia, had determined him never to hazard again the destruction of his Master's ships on a sea-service of such evident danger in that tempestuous season, without having a port to shelter or befriend him. That the reduction of Messina was their mutual interest, as his ships would then clear there, and be more at hand to assist them; and, the cause of the blockade being removed, he should be able to send a detachment to cruise on the coasts of Spain, which would straiten the enemy, and obstruct their sending succours into Sicily.' This remonstrance had the weight it deserved, and not only convinced, but gave great satisfaction to the General and his Officers; especially after his removing an objection of their being in want of cannon for battery, by agreeing to spare them out of the Spanish prizes twenty-seven cannon of twenty-four pounders, twelve of eighteen, and as many of twelve pounders; with a proportionable quantity of powder and ball, to enable them to begin the siege, and promising to solicit strongly at Naples for remitting to the army all things necessary for carrying on that important service with success.

The Conference being over, the Admiral took his leave, the General and all his Officers expressing the greatest esteem and affection for him at their parting, and, being escorted down to the water-side, he embarked in the nearest man of war, and, without regard to his own dignity of moving at the head of a fleet, sailed away with two ships only, and after an impatient passage of eleven days, a time tedious to a mind active and charged with important affairs, he arrived at Naples, where the first thing he heard, with great surprise and concern, was, that his friend Count Daun was removed from the Government, and departed for Vienna, though his time was not expired, and that Count de Gallas was come thither in his room. The displacing at that juncture a man so experienced in military affairs was a step very inconvenient to the Emperor's interest, and an unhappy effect of Court faction; for, though the new Viceroy was a man of undoubted worth and honour, and had sustained the character of Ambassador at the Courts of England and Rome, with proper dignity and magnificence, and in quieter times might have filled his Government with great sufficiency and applause, yet, not being bred a soldier, it was not to be expected, he could so readily comprehend the springs of motion in armies, or foresee every provision necessary for military operations, the timely supplies of which are the surest foundations of success in war.

After

1719. After the first civilities, the Admiral, entering into conferences with the Viceroy, painted out to him in very lively colours the state of the Imperial army in Sicily, 'where the event of things, he said, had not answered the sanguine hopes they had flattered themselves with, on their landing on that Island; that, instead of trampling over the enemy, they had received such a shock themselves, as very much humbled their spirits and expectations, and had been so far from making impression on an army favoured and assisted by the Natives, that they were reduced to think of their own preservation, being intangled among barren mountains, depending on a precarious subsistence from the sea, and in a Country, where every man they saw was their enemy; and finally, that, without a reinforcement equal to another army, the conquest of that Kingdom was impracticable.' The Admiral, having proceeded thus far, was cautious of touching on the army, that lay in the Milanese, designed for Sardinia; for, by the last letters, the Courts of England, France, and Turin, were still very pressing for that expedition: But he demanded of the Viceroy, Whether the Emperor had any considerable number of troops in Italy, besides those designed for Sardinia? To which he replied, he believed not: The Admiral asked, Whether, if those troops designed for Sardinia were immediately sent over to Sicily, they could soon be replaced by other troops from Germany, to go on that expedition? Which the Viceroy doubting, he then spoke out his opinion plainly, 'That the expedition to Sardinia ought to be laid aside for the present: That the carrying on both undertakings together would end in the failure of both; and that the shortest way of getting both Islands was by conquering one first.' The Viceroy replied, 'That the proposition was so much for his Master's interest, that his concurrence with it was not to be doubted, but that he feared, he was not at liberty to divert those troops, without the consent of the other Courts in Alliance; and prayed the Admiral to make the proper representations thereupon to them, as he would do himself to the Emperor.' The Conference being over, the Count de Ligneville, whom Count de Mercy had sent with the Admiral to Naples, was dispatched away to Vienna, with instructions to lay before that Court the state of their affairs in Sicily, and the measures proposed for retrieving them.

Naples seemed to be, at this time, the center of affairs in Europe. All the powers in the Quadruple Alliance, as well as those, who had any concerns with them, had Ministers there to watch over their respective interests, and drew their measures from information of what passed there. The Admiral went with the Viceroy to visit the Marquis de Brille, the King of Sardinia's Minister; and shewing him the weak condition of the Imperial arms in Sicily, and that the expedient of sending the troops designed for Sardinia thither, was the effect of invincible necessity, and not a pretence for postponing his Master's interests, which the Courts of England and France had as much at heart as those of the Emperor, he convinced that Minister of the reasonableness of the measure, who, at his request, represented the matter in a true light to his own Court, and obtained his Master's concurrence.

During the Admiral's stay at Naples, the Grafton brought in two Genoese ships, which she had taken off Palermo, with six hundred Swiss recruits on board for the Spanish army, who were committed prisoners to the Castles. The Lenox ran a third a-shore, with about two hundred more soldiers; and burnt her, but most of the men escaped.

There being nothing more to do at Naples, till the sentiments of the several Courts were known, upon the proposed alteration of measures, the Admiral determined, in the mean time, to pass over again into Sicily, hoping to find the army before Messina, in which case his assistance would be wanting. He had then a strong feverish disorder hanging on him, which had reduced him to a very low condition; a little rest seemed necessary for his recovery; but his heart was with the army, and his health had no part in his thoughts. The Viceroy too was ill in bed of a fever; they were desirous of seeing each other before the Admiral departed, having some necessary points to settle together. The Admiral, scarce able to stand, was carried to the Viceroy's bed-side, where being seated, they could do little more than give broken and imperfect hints to each other, of what their minds laboured with, and were soon obliged to put an end to a Conference, wherein the weakness of their bodies did not second the zeal of their hearts for the public. The Admiral complimented the Viceroy with as many of the Swiss prisoners, as would be necessary to exchange what Germans were prisoners in Sicily; and, taking a final leave of him, embarked for that Island. The Viceroy died two days after, whose sickness the Italians attributed to his travelling through the Campania of Rome in the dog-days, which they esteem fatal. His death threw the affairs of that Kingdom into great confusion; the collateral Council assuming the Government, and the military Power refusing to obey their orders, which proved no small disservice and retardment to the affairs in Sicily.

During the Admiral's absence, Count de Mercy, being struck blind with an apopleptic fit, was obliged to quit the camp, and pass over to Reggio for advice, leaving the command of the army to General Zumjungen. General Wachtendonck had taken by stratagem the town of Taormina, a strong pass in the way to Messina, upon which encouragement Zumjungen broke up from Franca Villa with his army, on the 17th of July, without any molestation from the enemy, and forcing the strong passes of Alexis and la Sceletta, with less opposition than was expected, after a painful march through a mountainous Country and excessive heats, but assisted by the transport vessels coasting along with the provisions, artillery, and heavy baggage, he sat down, the 20th, before Messina; in which the enemy had three thousand men, under the command of the Marquis de Spinola, an Officer of great reputation, and well furnished with provisions and all necessaries for a long and obstinate defence. In the mean time, Count de Mercy burning with impatience to lie idle at Reggio, notwithstanding the anguish of his wound, and the Surgeon's not being able to get the ball out of his body, as soon as ever he began to see a little with one eye, returned to the camp before Messina. The Admiral, after a passage of five days, anchored, the 28th, off of the point of the Faro, and, being too weak to go out of his ship, sent his first Captain a-shore to the General, 1719. ral, to acquaint him with his proceedings at Naples; and learning, that he was in great want of powder, sent him a considerable supply.

The Imperialists having taken the Castle of Gonzaga, which stands on a hill over the City; and the bastion of the town, called Secreto, having a considerable breach made in it, and the Governor having withdrawn his troops from the town into the citadel, the Senate of Messina sent out Deputies to capitulate upon articles; but the General desiring to know, whether he was to treat with them as subjects of the Emperor, or as enemies; if as the former, he bid them open the gates, and receive his troops, and he would interpose his good offices with the Emperor in their favour; but, if he was to treat with them as enemies, they were to get the best terms they could for themselves; and he gave them leave to go back into the town to consider with their principals about it. They returned the same evening, and told the General, that the next morning, as soon as it was day, they would open the gates, and rely on the Emperor's clemency; and accordingly the troops marched on the 8th of August, N. S. and took possession.

The City being taken, the Admiral landed some English grenadiers, who took the tower of the Faro; which opening a free passage for his ships, he came to an anchor in Paradise Road, which the officers of the Spanish men of war in the Mole perceiving, and despairing now of getting out to sea, they unbent their sails, and unrigged their ships, expecting their fate with that of the citadel. This gave the Admiral great ease, and enabled him to employ ships on other services, which had long attended the blocking up of that port.

It came now to be matter of debate, what was to be done with those ships, when the citadel should be taken, and they fall into their hands. Signor Scarampi, General of the King of Sardinia's galleys, first started the question, and claimed the two best of sixty and sixty-four guns, new ships, which had belonged to his Master, and were seized by the Spaniards in the port of Palermo. He grounded his right on a Convention made at Vienna, the 29th of December, 1718, in which it was said, 'That as to the ships belonging to the King of Sardinia, if they be taken in port, they shall be restored to him: But that this shall be referred to Admiral Byng to answer.' To this the Admiral replied, 'That, this Convention having been only a ground-work for another to be made at Naples, he could be directed by none but that, which was made in consequence thereof in April, 1719, between the Viceroy of Naples, the Marquis de Brille Minister of Sardinia, and himself, in which no mention is made of those ships; and, as to the reference to his opinion, he did freely declare, he could not think the King of Sardinia had any shadow of title to them: That they had been taken by the enemy, and were now fitted out, and armed at their expence, and under their colours: That they would put out to sea, if he did not hinder them, and attack all English ships they met with; and, if stronger, take them; so that he could not consider them in any light, than what they were, the ships of an enemy.' Count de Mercy put in his claim for the Emperor, alledging, 'That as those ships would be found within the port of a town taken by his Master's arms, according to the right of Nations, they belonged to him.' The Admiral replied, 'That it was owing to his keeping two squadrons on purpose, and at a great hazard, to watch and observe these ships, that they were now confined within the port, which if he was to withdraw, they would still be able to go to sea, and he should have a chance of meeting with and taking them.' But reflecting afterwards with himself, that possibly the garrison might capitulate for the safe return of those ships into Spain, which he was determined never to suffer: That, on the other hand, the right of possession might breed an inconvenient dispute among the Princes concerned; and if it should prove, that they did not belong to England, it were better they belonged to no body, he proposed to Count de Mercy to set up a battery, and destroy them as they lay in the basin; who urging, that he had no orders concerning those ships, and must write to Vienna for instructions about it, the Admiral replied with some warmth, that he could not want a power to destroy every thing that belonged to the enemy, and insisted on it with such firmness, that the General, being concerned in interest not to carry matters to a disagreement, caused a battery to be erected, notwithstanding the protestations of Scarampi, which in a little time sunk and destroyed them, and completed the ruin of the naval power of Spain.

In five days after the taking of the City, the Imperialists obliged the Castles of Castellazzo and Matagriffone to surrender; and, being thus become masters of all the castles and eminencies about the City, they applied themselves to the siege of the Citadel, where from the strength of the place, the numerous and well-provided garrison, and the great reputation of the Governor, they were sure to meet with a very warm and vigorous resistance, and the more, as the Germans were ill provided with necessaries for such an undertaking.

On the 13th of August, N. S. the Count de Ligneville arrived in the Camp from Vienna with the good news of the Emperor's having dispatched orders to the Governor of Milan to send his troops, which lay in the Milanese, and were designed for Sardinia, down to Vado, in order to be transported into Sicily. He brought a gracious letter from the Emperor to the Admiral, wherein he signified to him 'his approbation of a project, that was the effect of his zeal and activity; the satisfaction he had in his wife conduct, and for his love and attachment to his Imperial person and august house; and on all occasions he should give him marks of his affection and esteem, and of his good remembrance of the services he had done him.'

The transportation of the troops from Genoa to Sicily was a service of such moment, and dispatch in it so necessary, that the Admiral determined to conduct that affair himself, well knowing from his experience of the slowness of the Germans in all their undertakings, how much his weight and credit were necessary to give their motions that quickness, which their affairs required; and having intimated his resolution to Count de Mercy of passing over to Naples, and from thence to Genoa for that purpose, he prayed the Admiral to represent plainly his wants to the Government of Naples; which no body knew or understood better than himself, and, giving him a list of what particulars he wanted, added

1719. jocosely, 'That, as the siege was a child of his own begetting, he ought to nurse it, as well for his own sake, as for the common interest.'

The Admiral sailed the 16th of August, N. S. and anchored the 23d before Naples, where the Cardinal de Schrottenbach was newly arrived by sea from Rome in quality of Viceroy. The next day the Admiral went to the palace, and, entering into Conference with the Cardinal, represented to him, 'how much the army had suffered from the divisions of the Government during the Interregnum. That the siege they were employed in was a decisive point, on which the fate of the Island depended;' and setting before him the evil consequences, that would attend a miscarriage by the want of necessary supplies from his Government, he put into his hands a list of particulars he had received from the General. The Cardinal was an honest good-natured man, and very willing to forward business, but had no great talents for it. His high quality had advanced him to the purple, being Lord of a principality in Bohemia, with some marks of Sovereignty. He was appointed to manage the Emperor's affairs at Rome, after the departure of Count Gallas, and, at his death, succeeded him in his Government. He told the Admiral, 'That, by the accounts he had received from the proper Officers, there was not in the stores the quantity of cannon and ammunition, which the General demanded: That he would send to Mantua for cannon, which might be transported down the Po into the Adriatic, and so on by sea to Messina, where possibly, if no cross accidents happened, they might arrive in two months time.' The Admiral coming to know, that those cannon had no carriages, the Cardinal thought he satisfied that objection, by saying, 'he would send some carpenters into the woods of Abruzzo to cut down timber for carriages.' Those and the like unsoldierlike proposals gave the Admiral a sensible regret of the loss of Count Dawn, in whose room he found himself co-operating with a Viceroy better qualified for his brevity than for council in operations of war, and whose Court was crowded with Monks and Priests, and such like disagreeable objects, instead of men of business and service (1).

The Admiral perceiving, that the army had no resource, but what lay in himself, generously sent them twenty-four pieces of cannon of eighteen pounders, belonging to the Spanish prizes, and a proportionable quantity of powder and shot, contenting himself with the single credit of the General for repayment to the captors, and at the same time wrote to Genoa and Leghorn, to purchase one thousand barrels more of powder, engaging his own security to the British Consuls for their repayment.

During these transactions, a number of transports having been provided at Naples, the Admiral sent them under a convoy to Vado, and, having dispatched his other affairs with the Cardinal, departed after them, and arrived at Genoa the 7th of September, N. S.

He had been made to believe, that, by the time of his arrival there, the army would be ready to embark; but he found every thing in extreme backwardness. The troops had not so much as begun their march from the Milanes, nor could get to Vado in less than a fortnight: Very few provisions or necessaries had been bought up, and none shipped, nor were the transport-vessels properly fitted for the reception of the troops. Count de Bonneval, who was to command his body, arriving the next day, went on board the Admiral, and understanding that he intended to transport his army to Melazzo, and even to Messina, if Count Mercy should think it necessary, he was mortified to the last degree. He had been appointed to command these forces on the intended expedition to Sardinia, and the diverting them to a different service so disgusted him, that, instead of forwarding the embarkation of the troops, he resolved to retard it all he could. Accordingly, whilst the Admiral gave himself incredible pains at Genoa and Vado, to quicken their departure, he threw in the way all the secret obstructions he could, till he knew the issue of the solicitations he was carrying on at Vienna, to be continued in a separate command. However, the Admiral after twenty days labour and pains, and at last such menaces as even Bonneval himself began to be afraid of the Admiral, shipped off the troops to the number of about six thousand, on the 27th of September, N. S. with such provisions as could be got, and, leaving a man of war to convoy the remainder when ready, sailed the 28th from Vado (2). The Admiral receiving letters in his passage, from Count de Mercy, requesting,

(1) The Viceroy returned the next day the Admiral's visit, and, upon reconsidering the several points in the General's demands, the same difficulties recurred about complying with them, especially as to the cannon and ammunition. The Viceroy said, 'he would summon all the general Officers in town, and consult with them about finding out expedients to satisfy the wants of the army, which was all that was in his power to do.' Upon which the Admiral desired his eminence, 'That, after they had attended him, and taken those matters into consideration, he might have a Conference with them.' Accordingly the next day the general Officers came to the Admiral's house, and entering into conversation together, upon the particulars of the General's demands, which lay before them, the articles relating to corn and recruits were soon got over; but the main difficulty was the demand of cannon and ammunition. The Admiral told them, 'That Count de Mercy had not above twenty cannon in battery: That he was within two hundred paces of the counterescarp of the citadel; and hoped he should not be forced to stop in so fair a way, for want of necessary supplies; and that he would be contented, if they could send him but ten or twelve cannon from Naples, with a proportionable quantity of powder and ball.' The Officer of the ordnance attending gave in a list of eight cannon, which he said might be taken from the mole and batteries of the City, and sent to Messina; but, upon enquiry, they appeared to be of fifty and sixty pounders, some without ball, others without carriages, all of them too unwieldy and unfit for battery. He then delivered in to them a state of all the ordnance stores in the Kingdom; upon examining of which the general Officers unanimously confessed, that the whole Country was not able to furnish the cannon and ammunition, which Count de Mercy wanted. This was such a declaration of weakness, as was not to be expected in so fine a Kingdom.

(2) Bonneval, finding his troops incorporated with the army, and his projects of a separate command vanishing, pretended sickness, and, getting leave to go to Reggio for advice, he repaired to Vienna, and returned

598

1719. questing, that the troops might not land at Melazzo, but go on to Messina, he stood away for the Faro, and arrived before Messina, the 8th of October, N. S. which so elevated the spirits of the army, that, upon the first sight of the fleet, Lieutenant-General Wallis, with five thousand men, made a vigorous attack upon the half-moon, which was nearest to their approaches, and carried it with the loss of only one hundred and three killed, and eight hundred and thirty wounded. The Admiral, going ashore to the General's quarters, was embraced by him, and all the general Officers, with the most tender marks of affection and gratulation, the whole army being overjoyed to see a man, who always brought them relief and success, and every good, that attended them. On the 17th at ten in the morning, the Imperialists assaulted the counterescarp, and mounted to the top of the breach with great gallantry; but, after two hours very warm work, were repulsed with the loss of one hundred and twenty men killed, and six hundred and seventeen wounded. The Governor having acquitted himself with great honour in this repulse, as well as in the general defence of the place, and finding himself unable to hold it longer, beat a parley the next day, and surrendered it upon articles. The Spanish garrison marched out through the breach, and were transported by sea to Augusta. Thus ended a siege of twenty one days, which cost the Germans above five thousand men killed or wounded.

Messina surrendered to the Im-perialists.

Whilst the siege of the Citadel was depending, the Spanish army decamped from Franca Villa, the 31st of August, and, marching towards Rametta, the Marquis de Lede gave out, that he would attack the Imperialists, and appeared upon the hills in sight of the camp, attended by a great number of peasants he had drawn together; but finding it well guarded, and his army being sickly, he fortified a strong and advantageous post at Castra Giovane, in the center of the Island, where he laid in large magazines, in order to retire thither in case of necessity; and in the mean time cantoned his troops about Adermo, Palermo, and Catanea (1).

The Imperialists having spent some time in 1719. levelling the lines, trenches, and batteries before Messina, and in putting the place into a posture of defence, they held several Consultations, at which the Admiral assisted, concerning what measures were next to be taken. The reduction of Messina had brought Val Demona under the obedience of the Emperor; but the whole Province, being mountainous and barren, was so little able to supply the army with provisions and forage, that the inhabitants of Messina and other towns daily petitioned the General for their own subsistence, since they could draw no corn, as they used to do, from the plentiful parts of the Island, which were in the possession of the Spaniards. To march after the enemy in a wintry season, with their horse already harassed, and almost starved, through an adverse Country, and without any provisions but what they carried; and, if they surmounted all these difficulties, to attack them in the strong camp of Castra Giovane, was judged too rash to be attempted, after the experience of Franca Villa. To march to Palermo, and get possession of the Capital, was more desirable than easy of execution. It was a march of seventeen days, along the northern coast of the Island, through an unknown, mountainous, sterile Country, where they should be exposed to sudden insults, great part of the way being so narrow, that two men could hardly go a breast; and, if they met with no enemy, they had no forage for their horse, no magazines in the way of their march, nor a sufficient number of beasts of burthen to carry provisions along with them, nor money to buy them, if they could be got. The next project, that occurred, was to go to Trapani, where the Piedmontese had a garrison. This would be changing the scene of the war to great advantage; for, instead of being confined and famishing in the mountains, they should be able to enlarge themselves in a plentiful Country, and, by acting on equal terms with the enemy, have a reasonable chance to drive them out of the Island. But to go thither by land was impracticable; and, as their transport-vessels could not carry above a third part of the army no more to the army. He was a native of France, and had all the sprightliness and levity of that Nation. He was a gallant Officer, had received many wounds, and still feels the painful remembrance of a most terrible one he got in Hungary. He had no zeal for the service of his Prince, any further than it suited his own interest or ambition, to which he willingly sacrificed his duty. Corbet.

(1) It was during this siege, that the Admiral having received information, that vessels belonging to Malta had gone to sea with Spanish Commissions, and taken some English Merchant-ships, sent a letter to the Grand Master, complaining of his partiality and injustice, demanding satisfaction for the damages the Merchants had sustained, and his giving strict orders to prohibit the like unfair proceedings for the future. He wrote, at the same time, to Mr. Alexander Young, the English Consul at Malta, to make a strict inquiry what Merchant-ships had been taken by Privateers fitted out from Malta, or wherein Maltese subjects had been concerned, and to lay a state thereof before that Government, with a demand for reparation, and to let him know their answer. The Grand Master and his Council, being alarmed at this message, sent the Chevalier Balbini to the Admiral, to represent and excuse the proceedings of their Government in the points complained of, and to lay before him the difficulties they were under, from their dependance on Spain, and to endeavour to remove all causes of his dissatisfaction with them. But the Admiral, not having yet received any specific account of the particular losses of the Merchants, and so not able to settle the terms of restitution with Balbini, sent his first Captain, Saunders, with two men of war to Malta, directing him to make an exact inquiry into the several captures that had been made, and to lay the same before the Grand Master and his Council, and to demand reparation, so far as their subjects had been concerned therein; and, in case he found them willing to give reasonable assurances of doing justice for what was past, and of a better behaviour for the future, he was to enter into a Convention with them for that purpose, and for establishing a good agreement with them; but, otherwise, he was to take all ships and vessels he should meet with belonging to that Island. Captain Saunders, arriving at Malta, found a fair disposition in those people to give the Admiral and the English Nation all reasonable satisfaction in their proceedings. They shewed, that they had never consented to, or approved of their subjects entering into the service of Spain, but had issued strict proclamations, prohibiting them to be any ways concerned on either side in the war. They did not deny, that one of their vessels had taken a Commission from the Marquis de Lede, to cruise upon the enemies of Spain.

1712. army at a time, the division of their troops was hazardous, and might be fatal. For, Trapani being situated on an Isthmus, and having no magazines of corn, the Marquis de Lede might march, and pen up the first detachment within that narrow neck of land, where they would starve for want of provisions, before the rest of the army could join them. The only choice remaining was to go to Syracusa; but that too was impracticable by land, by reason of the same objections, as are already mentioned; and besides, there lay in the way several deep and rapid rivers, where the enemy might defend the passages with great advantage. And, though it was not difficult to transport the army thither by sea, yet it was an uncomfortable reflection, that they should be then the whole length of the Island distant from Palermo, and could only propose to subsist themselves from day to day during the winter, the enemy lying between them and the great Caricatori, or subterraneous magazines, where the inhabitants usually lay up their corn, which were ninety miles distant. With these disagreeable prospects they past away some days under uncertainty what to do: when, one evening, the Generals Mercy and Zumunguen repairing on board the Admiral, and renewing the subject of their late Conferences, they told him, in a very desponding manner, 'That, having thoroughly weighed the situation of their affairs, and finding they could neither subsist nor undertake any action where they were, they had come to a resolution to leave a strong garrison in Messina, and transport the horse over by sea to Calabria, and the foot to Syracusa, where they might be able to maintain themselves during the winter, and be ready to make use of such advantages as might offer, for acting against the enemy in the spring; and prayed his assistance in that service.' The Admiral replied, 'That he hoped, their affairs were not so desperate, as they apprehended: That he had been employing his thoughts for their service, and believed he should be able to extricate them out of their present circumstances: That of all the late propositions, the transporting the army to Trapani pleased him best, as it would turn the difficulty upon the Spanish army, by obliging them to make uneasy marches, and to keep the field in the winter. That, when the whole army was at Trapani, they should be able to enlarge their quarters; the granaries of corn would fall into their hands, and their neighbourhood to Palermo keep that place in awe, till the season should favour their marching towards it, the reduction of which would bring the war to a speedy issue. That he had considered of the difficulty of subsisting one part of the army at Trapani, till the rest arrived; and, as England was in peace with the Governments of Barbary, he would send his Secretary to Tunis, which was the nearest African port to Trapani, and employ him, and the English Consul, to buy up whatever quantity of corn was necessary, and transport the same to Trapani. That he knew very well they had no money, and therefore would employ his own cash, and credit, to procure this Supply, depending upon their honour for repayment, and did not doubt to lodge the corn at Trapani, before the first detachment of troops arrived there.' Count de Mercy, penetrating immediately into the facility, and advantageous consequences of this scheme, rose up, and, embracing the Admiral in a kind of transport, acknowledged, 'That he had hit on the only method practicable, not only for the preservation of the army, but even for pushing on the war with success. That, as it was a Protestant scheme, he should have Protestant troops, and Protestant Generals to put it in execution.' And accordingly General Zumunguen, with Count Seckendorf, the Prince of Hesse, and General Schmettau, embarked the 23d of November, with seven thousand foot, and five hundred horse, and arrived fortunately in three days at Trapani, where finding a plentiful remittance of corn ready arrived from Tunis, they not only posted themselves there in security, but, enlarging their quarters into the Country, brought the Cities of Marsala and Mazzara to submit to the obedience of the Emperor. The transports and convoy returning, brought thither more troops. Count de Mercy

1719.

Spain, but made appear, that they had sent one of their order to intreat him to revoke that Commission, and had made the same application to the Court of Madrid, but had been answered with great roughness and menaces. That, to avoid as much as they could all occasions of complaint, they had called in all their Privateers, which had been cruising in the Levant against the Turks, in order to disarm them; but they could not always govern the unruliness of their people, when they would enter into the service of any Christian Prince, whose colours protected them from their inquiry or visitation, which was the misfortune of their Constitution, as they depended upon the Christian Princes of Europe for their revenue, and, in particular, drew at that time their daily sustenance of provisions from that part of Sicily, which was under the subjection of the Spanish General; and, finally, that they received no part or benefit from the prizes, which had passed intirely through the hands of the Spanish Agent, and in which they had no manner of interest or concern.' The Captain was convinced of the sincerity and truth of their declaration; but, on the other hand, told them, 'That it was not his business to inquire into the nature or dependance of their Government; and it was for them to accommodate their grievances with Spain as they could. That his instructions were plain, and founded in justice, demanding redress for the losses his Countrymen had sustained, from those, who occasioned them, who were their subjects; and that, if they would not enter into a Negotiation for that purpose, he should be obliged to put his orders in execution.' Intimidated by these threats, they immediately appointed two Commissaries to treat with him; and it being made out by proof, that five English Merchant-ships had been taken by Maltese ships under Spanish colours, they submitted to pay the full value of them and their lading, within twelve months after application from the Claimants. But thinking themselves aggrieved by this treaty, and protesting themselves to be under a force to sign any terms, rather than feel the effects of the Admiral's displeasure, they referred to themselves a liberty of appealing to the equity of the Admiral, and from him to the King, for a mitigation of the severity of the conditions. They dispatched away, accordingly, the Chevalier de la Val to the Admiral, who not thinking he had any right to compound for other men's properties, the Deputy passed on to the English Court at London, to execute his Commission. He had likewise a private instruction, to implore the King's interest with the several Princes at the approaching Congress, that Malta might be freed from its subjection to Sicily, and enjoy the rights and privileges of a free and neutral port in time of war, among the Christian powers.

1719. Mercy and the Admiral departing with the last convoy from Messina, on the 19th of January, consisting of five thousand four hundred foot, and eleven hundred horse, they were overtaken by a violent storm off the Isle of Alicuda, which drove all the transports into Melazzo and Messina, the Admiral, with the General on board his ship, getting with difficulty to Trapani, on the 29th, but the whole convoy did not arrive there till the 2d of March, many soldiers dying in the passage, and amongst them General Wachtendonck, regretted by every body. The whole army, being got together, amounted to fourteen thousand foot, and three thousand horse, besides the garrisons left in Messina, Melazzo, Syracusa, and the adjacent parts.

These motions of the Imperialists made the Marquis de Lede quit the posts of Mola, Taormina, and Catania, and leaving a detachment in his strong camp at Casiro Giovane, to secure the magazines he had erected there, he marched and fixed his camp from Alcamo to Salama, with his head quarters at Castel Vetrano, from whence he continually sent out detachments to destroy the Country about Marsala and Mazzara, and to carry off all the cattle, grain, and wine, which Zunjuengen could not at first prevent; but, being strengthened with new supplies by sea, he at last obliged their parties to retire, and, on the arrival of Count de Mercy, the Spanish General was reduced to fortify his camp with strong intrenchments and redoubts, with batteries of cannon.

Count de Mercy making a motion of extending his quarters beyond Mazzara, the Marquis de Lede quitted Castel Vetrano, and retired with his army to Alcamo, from whence he sent his Marshal of camp Signor d'Aponte, on the 6th of February, 1719-20, N. S. with overtures to Count de Mercy and the Admiral for evacuating Sicily, on condition of leave to transport his army into Spain, and in order thereto desired a suspension of arms. This proposition contained nothing disagreeable to the Germans, who would thereby obtain all they wanted, by becoming masters of the Kingdom, without any further trouble; but the Admiral protesting against it, and declaring, that not a man of the Spanish army should pass out of that Island, until a general peace was made, for that it would be to furnish Spain with a body of their best troops to strengthen their army acting against France, or else they might be employed in disturbing England, he was dismissed with this counter-proposition from the Count de Mercy, that, if the Marquis would surrender Palermo, and the South-side of the Island, and retire with his army into the middle of the Country towards Casiro Giovane, or to any other pass proper for his security, he would consent to a suspension of arms for six weeks, till the sentiments of the several Courts might be known; which being an advantage more than equivalent to the operations of six weeks in that early season, the Admiral consented thereto, with this restriction, that, if the Spaniards attempted to withdraw any of their men in the mean time, the suspension should be void, and he would act against them with all his force. Count de Mercy dispatched Lieutenant-Colonel Bellaire to Vienna, to acquaint that Court with these overtures, and bring back their directions; the Admiral sent away thither his eldest son Mr. Byng, with instructions, if the Imperial Court listened to the proposals of the Spanish General, to declare, that his father could never suffer any part of the Spanish army to depart out of the Island, till the King of Spain had acceded to the Quadruple Alliance, or till he received positive instructions from England for doing so.

The 12th of February, N. S. Count de Mercy marched towards Castel Vetrano, for the more commodious subsistence of his cavalry, from whence he detached General Seckendorf, with fifteen hundred men, and some cannon, to reduce Sacca, where there was a large caricatore of corn. The town immediately surrendered, but the Spaniards, to the number of three hundred, retired into the Castle.

The Marquis de Lede, finding his first propositions ineffectual, sent two General Officers, the Marquis de San Vincenzo and Signor d'Aponte, to the Imperial camp, the 19th of February, N. S. with instructions to treat about the surrender of Palermo, and a considerable part of the adjacent Country, in consideration of a suspension of arms for three months. But, whilst the Negotiation was depending, the Marquis received an express from Madrid, on the 28th, with advice, that a general peace was made, he sent immediately to break off the treaty. This seemed matter of great surprize; but the secret reason was, that Spain was at that time treating with France to restore Fontarabia, St. Sebastian, and other places taken in the war, and hoped to get in exchange, for the evacuation of Sicily and Sardinia, the restitution of those towns, and of Gibraltar, or, at least, to have both the one and the other referred to a Congress. Upon this, Count de Mercy gave fresh orders for attacking the Castle of Sacca, which had been retarded by the great rains. The Castle being battered with four pieces of cannon, and not very strong, surrendered, the 6th of March, the garrison being made prisoners of war. The taking of this place gave great relief to the Imperial army, who found there twenty thousand souls of wheat.

During these transactions, a Courier dispatched from Paris by the Earl of Stair, the British Ambassador there, brought the Admiral information, that the Marquis de Beretti Landi, the Spanish Minister at the Hague, had signed the Quadruple Alliance the 17th of February, N. S. and he brought likewise a packet from that Minister to the Marquis de Lede, and another from the Emperor's Minister to Count de Mercy, to acquaint them therewith. A trumpet was sent with the Spanish Minister's packet to the Marquis de Lede, and to know his sentiments thereupon. He returned answer, 'That, his Master's Minister having signed the Quadruple Alliance, he looked upon the peace as a thing concluded, and was therefore ready to treat of a cessation of hostilities by sea and land, until they should receive farther orders from their respective Courts.' To this it was replied by the Admiral and Count de Mercy, 'That, as the evacuation of Sicily and Sardinia was to be performed within two months after the said signing, they were ready to consent to a suspension of arms, upon his delivering up the City and Castles of Palermo, at which place transports would be best provided, and other necessary measures concerted for the transportation of their army into Spain.' The Marquis returned answer, 'That, as he understood, the Plenipotentiaries of their Master's 1719. Masters at the Hague were in treaty for settling the terms of evacuating those Islands, he did not think himself authorized to agree to a cessation on any other condition, than that each party should remain on the ground they occupied, and expect further orders from their respective Principals.

1719.

The disadvantages arising from such an agreement were too obvious to be submitted to; for the men of war and transports lay very inconveniently at Trapani, an unsafe road, where they had sustained considerable damage, and some of the transports had been lost. It was therefore necessary to have possession of Palermo, as a secure retreat for the fleet, and the most commodious port for shipping off the troops. Besides, it was a pledge of the sincerity of the intentions of Spain to evacuate the Island. In the next place, it put the Germans under a manifest inequality, to be confined to the ground they occupied, while the Spaniards were in possession of the principal Caricatori of corn, and plundered and rifled at pleasure a Country they were soon to leave. Nor could they comprehend, how an enemy, who, six weeks before, offered to leave the whole Island, on condition of being sent back into Spain, should now scruple to surrender Palermo; and therefore, as it had the appearance of chicaning, they resolved to go on with the operations of the war. But, before they proceeded to action, they agreed to send a joint letter to the Marquis, proposing an interview between them at the Cassine de Rossignola, halfway between the two armies, where accordingly they met the 2d of April, N. S. at noon, with an escorte of two hundred horse on each side. In the Conference the Marquis de Lede owned 'That he knew the King his Master had signed the Quadruple Alliance, and did not doubt of his intention to evacuate Sicily; but declared, he had no orders yet about it: That he expected full powers and instructions soon, and wished they would, in the mean time, come to a cessation of arms.' He was asked, 'What proposals he had to make for that purpose?' He answered, 'None, but that both armies might hold the Country, that was in their possession, until he received orders to treat about the evacuation.' Count de Mercy thinking it unreasonable to be tied down to a small tract of the Country, where he could not subsist, asked him, 'Whether, in case they should consent to his keeping possession of Palermo, he had power to deliver up Augusta, and the other posts they held on that side of the Island, which were now of no use to him, but it would be rather a convenience to him to draw away the garrisons and troops he had in those parts, to join his army, in order to the intended evacuation?' He confessed, 'He could not give up, nor quit the possession of any part he had of the Island, until he received further orders from his Master;' and read part of his instructions to them. Count de Mercy, on the other side, shewed him part of the Emperor's orders, which directed him 'to agree to a suspension of arms, in order to the evacuation of Sicily and Sardinia, and to concert with the Marquis de Lede the necessary conditions for facilitating the same, and to adjust that affair by all reasonable measures: But that, if the Marquis de Lede should not own his having orders, or endeavour to evade them, and gain time, by pretending to send to Madrid for further instructions, and not name a reasonable time for beginning to embark part of his troops, in that case he was to make use of his arms to oblige him to execute the treaty, which the Spanish Minister had signed at the Hague.' He farther told the Marquis, that the 17th of April was understood to be the time they should go upon the evacuation; but, if it was not possible for him to begin so soon, he would not differ about a few days, provided they entered now into some agreement about the manner of doing it. He offered him the transports he had in his service, and assured him, that he should be accommodated with provisions, and every thing he could in reason demand. The Admiral, on his part, gave him the like assurances, and that he should be escorted by as many of his Master's ships, as he should desire. The Marquis owned, that all they said was reasonable; but, complaining of the want of orders, the Conference broke off, without coming to any issue. At parting, the Marquis desired the Admiral to release the Bishop of Mazzara, who was his prisoner, which the Admiral readily consented to.

During these debates, one of the English ships, cruising off Palermo, took a Felucca, sent by Cardinal Aquaviva from Rome, with packets of letters from Spain, to the Marquis de Lede, which he delivered to the Admiral; who, seeing the King of Spain's seal to the letters, generously sent them unopened to the Marquis, and set the Felucca and Crew at liberty.

The Conference being broke off, the Admiral returned to the fleet at Trapani, and Count de Mercy, resolving to attack the Spaniards, marched towards Alcamo, where he arrived the 8th of April, N. S. the Marquis having retreated the night before with precipitation, leaving some sick men behind, whom he could not carry away. The Marquis incamped at Valguernera and Sala di Partenico; but, fearing to be followed by the Imperialists, he retired on to Monreale. The retreat of the Spaniards made Count de Mercy resolve on the siege of Palermo: in order to which he sent Colonel Baron Neyberg to confer with the Admiral about the necessary assistance to be given by the fleet in facilitating the march of the army towards that place, by coasting along with the provisions and necessities they should want in their march, as well as in the siege, and supplying them with cannon and ammunition for that enterprize. The necessary dispositions being concerted between the army and fleet, the Count decamped from Alcamo the 18th of April, N. S. and followed the Marquis de Lede, who, retreating towards Monreale, kept possession of that and other advantageous posts, which led into the plains before Palermo, fortifying at the same time a strong pass by the sea-side, called Sferra Cavallo, which was another way between the sea-shore and the mountains into the same plain. Count de Mercy being arrived at Sala di Partenico, and not judging it advisable to attempt the passes, which the enemy possessed on the road of Monreale, he divided his army into two bodies, sending General Zumjungen, with all his cavalry (except the Hussars, and a regiment of Dragoons) and seven battalions of foot, with the artillery and baggage, to the sea side, with orders to force the pass of Sferra Cavallo, and enter that way into the plain of Palermo; whilst he himself with the rest of the army ascended the difficult mountains about Carini, in order to get down that way into the same plain, judging, that, if the Marquis drew his army to defend the pass of Sferra Cavallo, he should get between him and Palermo, or, at least, have the advantage of falling upon his rear. The Count having gained the heights of the mountains, from whence are discovered the Plain and City of Palermo, perceived the Spanish army incamped in the bottom, intending to obstruct his descent, and occupying all the passes in the way. Here Count de Mercy sent to Zumjungen to rejoin him, which he did by the assistance of guides, provided by the Magistrates of Carini, leaving a detachment under the command of Colonel Baron de Wigenau, to convoy the artillery and baggage by the way of the sea side, who, arriving at the pass of Sferra Cavallo, found it abandoned by the Spaniards. On the 21st, the Germans began to descend from the mountains, and, forcing the several passes with less opposition than was expected, were almost all got down before night to the bottom. The whole was a most difficult and fatiguing march, through ways, that the inhabitants themselves had rarely practised, but which the Count surmounted with great expedition and military judgment.

1719.

The Admiral coasting along, in conformity to the motions of the army, came to an anchor with the fleet the 20th, in Mondello-Bay, and sent some of his soldiers to take possession of a tower on the point, and another at the landing-place, as also three castles, that stood between, in order to preserve their communication. On the 22d, the Marquis de Lede sent Colonel Lacy, his Aid de Camp, with a letter to the Admiral, inclosing a Spanish Gazette, wherein was published the treaty of suspension of arms at sea, concluded at the Hague between the Ministers of Great-Britain, France, and Spain, which was to take place on the 10th instant; and therefore he proposed to the Admiral, 'to come to an agreement with him, for a separate cessation of hostilities, as they both had full powers for that purpose; and protested against any violence he should commit, contrary to the plain instructions of their Sovereigns.' This snare, laid to separate the Admiral from the German army, had no effect, the Admiral returning answer, 'That he could give no regard or credit to a pretended Convention, published in a foreign news-paper, and even in which there was a clause, that nothing in it should derogate from what should be agreed between him and the Marquis, for what concerns the Mediterranean Sea. That, as the Spanish Minister had signed the Quadruple Alliance ever since the 17th of February last, it was surprising, that in all this time the Marquis had received no orders for treating about the evacuation of the Island, which was the necessary consequence of it, but that he still maintained every point and post with the same zeal and ardour, as before his Master's Accession to the Alliance. That the time for beginning the evacuation was elapsed; and therefore, without some reasonable security, that he really intended it, he could come into no agreement for a suspension of arms; but, whenever he should be empowered to treat for both, he would most gladly go more than half-way to meet him, and not only agree on such measures, as might put an end to the present differences, but which might restore and cultivate a good understanding, which no body more ardently wished for, than he did.' This was an adventurous proceeding 1719. in the Admiral; for his instructions from England directed him to come to a suspension of arms with Spain, without staying for settling the terms of evacuation, which might take up time. But his penetration shewed him, that, if a suspension took place at sea, the Spaniards might introduce what succours and troops they pleased into the Island, which would unravel all they had been doing; and, if any interruption happened in the Negotiations on foot, put the Spaniards in a better state of prosecuting the war, and perhaps protract it another year. Their late conduct had made him jealous of their artifices, seeing them lay hold of every advantage to evade the evacuation of the Island, and render the way to peace more distant and difficult. He determined therefore, as the Convention for a cessation of arms at sea, signed at the Hague the 29th of February, N. S. left him at liberty of treating as he thought proper, to remain united to the Germans, which, he prudently saw, was the quickest way to bring the Spaniards to a compliance, and to come into real measures for the evacuation of the Island. The event justified his precaution, and his conduct received at home the approbation it deserved.

The march of the Imperialists had made the Spaniards change the situation of their camp, which they pitched across the plain before Palermo, extending their left to Monte Caputo, and their right to the sea near the mole of Palermo, the whole army being under the cannon of that City, and having strong entrenchments before them, lined with forty pieces of cannon. They were provided with plenty of all things, and seemed determined to stand the fate of a battle. The Germans incamped on the same plain, in the front of the enemy, and within a mile and a half distance, with their right at the foot of the mountains, from whence they had descended, and their left reaching to Monte Pellegrino, near the sea-side, the artillery and baggage being arrived in their camp by the way of Sferra Cavallo. Count de Mercy seeing himself straitened in room, and under difficulty of subsisting, whilst the enemy plundered and enriched themselves with the spoils of a Country they were quickly to abandon, he determined to bring matters to an engagement as soon as possible. In order to it, his scheme was to endeavour to get possession of the mole, by which means he should flank the enemy, and oblige them either to come to a battle with disadvantage, or else to retire to Termini. For this purpose he detached Baron Neyberg on the 26th, with six companies of Grenadiers, to dislodge the enemy from some posts, which they had fortified on the sea-side; and, to facilitate the same, sent Baron de Wigenau, with six other companies of Grenadiers, to seize on Monte Pellegrino. At the same time the Admiral detached three ships, to cannonade the posts on the sea-side, their fire made the Spaniards abandon them, and the Imperialists took possession of them without any loss. These advantages confirmed Count de Mercy in his resolution to push his point that way; and, having made the necessary dispositions, the next day he caused to be attacked a Cassine, that stood a little distance from the enemy's trenches, but strongly fortified with lines, and some cannon, drawing out his whole army at the same time in order of battle, 1719. battle, in case the enemy should come out of their camp to support it. The lines were soon taken, but the Cassine was not carried till after a very vigorous defence of above an hour, wherein the Germans had about one hundred and forty men killed or wounded; among the former a Prince of Anhalt, and Lieutenant-General Seckendorf wounded in the shoulders. On the 2d of May, about two in the afternoon, the weather being very hot, and the Spanish guard taking a Siesta, according to the custom of that Nation, the Germans surprized a redoubt near the enemy's lines, entering the same without firing a shot, and pushing the Spaniards out with their bayonets in their pieces. The Marquis de Lede, being informed of it, rose from table, and ordered the army to be immediately drawn out, in order to retake that fortification, which commanded the whole line of the camp. On the other hand, Count de Mercy being determined to maintain his hold, both armies were in motion, and just on the point of engaging, when fortunately a courier arriving in the very instant from Spain, in a Felucca, delivered to the Marquis a packet, containing full powers from the King of Spain to treat and agree about the evacuation of the Islands of Sicily and Sardinia, and the transportation of the army into Spain. The Marquis upon this drew off his army, and sent letters by a trumpet to the General and Admiral, to inform them of his orders. The next morning early, the Admiral repairing to the German camp, Officers were appointed on each side to treat of the suspension of arms, and to regulate the manner of evacuating both Islands; and Conventions were drawn up for that purpose, and signed, that for Sicily on the 6th of May, and that for Sardinia two days after.

In pursuance of these Conventions, the Germans were put in possession of Palermo and the Citadel of Castelamare the 10th, and the Spanish army marched to Termini, a sea-port, about twenty-five miles distant, from whence the first embarkation consisting of about twelve thousand foot, and six hundred horse, sailed the 20th of June, for Barcelona, and the remainder arrived at the same place the 25th of August following.

Nothing now remained to be done, but to put the Duke of Savoy in possession of the Island of Sardinia: In order to which four battalions of Piedmontese troops embarked at Palermo, under the command of Baron St. Remi, and sailed under the convoy of some English men of war to Cagliari, where the Admiral arriving as soon as he had settled all affairs in Sicily, he assisted at the Conferences with the Ministers and Generals of the several powers concerned, wherein was regulated the manner of surrendering the Island by the Spanish Viceroy to the Emperor, and the cession of the same from the Emperor to the Duke of Savoy; and, at the instance of this Prince, the Admiral did not depart, till he had seen the whole fully executed, the Spanish troops returned into Spain, and the Duke of Savoy put into quiet possession of his new Kingdom.

Thus ended the war of Sicily, wherein the fleet of Great-Britain bore so illustrious a part, that the fate of the Island was wholly governed by its operations, both competitors agreeing, that the one could not have conquered, nor the other have been subdued, without it. Never was any service conducted in all its parts with greater zeal, activity, and judgment; nor was ever the British flag in so high reputation and respect in those distant parts of Europe (1).

During these transactions in the Mediterranean, Progress of the French against Spain. the French army, under the command of the Duke of Berwick, advancing to the frontiers of Spain, took Fort-Passage, where they destroyed six men of war on the stocks. Then the Duke formed the siege of Fonterabia, which was taken the 5th of June. The King of Spain made an unsuccessful attempt to relieve the place, and approached

(1) As this History will not go down so low as the Admiral's death, it may not be improper to insert here what Mr. Corbett says of him: King George, who had named him for the expedition to Sicily, and knew his abilities, used to say to his Ministers, when they applied for instructions to be sent to him for his guidance, on certain important occasions, that he would send him none, for he knew how to act without any; and indeed, all the measures he took abroad were so exact and just, as to square with the councils and plan of policy at home. The cause of the Emperor being become the cause of his Master, he served the interests of that Prince with a zeal and fidelity, that stood a pattern to his own subjects. He lived in such harmony with the Imperial Viceroy and Generals, as has been seldom seen among fellow-subjects united in command, the want of which has proved the ruin of many important expeditions. He was incapable of performing his duty in a cold or negligent manner; and, when any service was committed to his management, he devoted his whole time and application to it; nor could any fatigue or indisposition of body ever divert or interrupt his attention from any point that required present dispatch. To this it might be in great measure owing, that he was never unfortunate in any undertaking, nor miscarried in any service that was entrusted to his direction. For whoever will trace upwards, to the springs and causes of publick or private events, shall find (except where the immediate finger of Providence is visible) that what is usually called ill-luck, is generally the effect of negligence, or imprudence. He always proceeded upon solid principles, and left nothing to fortune, that could be accomplished by foresight and application. His firmness and plain dealing were so apparent to the foreigners, who treated with him upon business, that it contributed much to the dispatch and success of his transactions with them; for they could depend upon what he said, and as they saw he used no arts or chicanes himself, and had too discerning a spirit to suffer them to pass unobserved in others, they often found it their best policy to leave their interests in his hands and management, being very sure of a most impartial and punctual performance of whatever he engaged in. His reputation was so thoroughly established in this particular, that in the frequent disputes and altercations which arose between the Savoyards and Germans in the course of the war, and between the latter and the Spaniards at the conclusion of it, wherein little faith or confidence was given to the promises or asseverations of each other, he was the common umpire between them, always stemming and oppoling any extravagant or unjust demands (which the over-bearing temper of the German General was very apt to suggest, where he had the superior hand) and reconciling, as much as possible, the violences of war, with the rules of honour and justice. When he departed from Italy to attend his late Majesty at Hanover, the King, among many gracious expressions, told him, that he had found out the secret of obliging his enemies as well as friends, and that the Court of Spain had mentioned, with great acknowledgment, his fair and friendly behaviour in the provision of transports and other necessities for the embarkation of their troops, and in protecting them from many vexations and oppressions that 1719. approached with an army of nine thousand foot, and four thousand horle; but it was in the hands of the French before he could draw near enough to it; so he marched back to Pampeluna, doubly disappointed, both of raising the siege, and of the French forces desertion: For he depended as much on an Insurrection in France, as on a Rebellion in England; upon both which Cardinal Alberoni's projects were founded. The Cardinal still refusing to accede to the Quadruple Alliance, the Duke of Berwick took St. Sebastian; and a party of French, joined by two hundred English seamen, made themselves masters of Port Antonio, in the bottom of the bay of Biscay, where two sixty gun ships were destroyed on the stocks, and all the naval stores were burnt by the English.

Negotiations with Spain.

About this time the Cardinal received the news of the action at Franca Villa, in a letter from the Marquiss de Lede, who assumed to himself the victory. The Cardinal chose that occasion to yield to the pressing instances of the Dutch Ambassador to consent to a peace: He declared to him, that his Catholic Majesty's intention was, that the States-General should be Mediators.

A few days after, he sent the Marquiss de Scotti to Paris, from whence he was to pass into Holland, to carry instructions to the Marquiss de Beretti Landi, how to proceed with the States. The Duke of Orleans, to whom he had orders to declare his intentions, refused him a passport, saying, he could not do it without the knowledge of the Emperor and King George, who were still more concerned than himself in this affair, and that the passport would be a tacit approbation of the conduct of the States-General; and a sort of acceptance of their mediations; decisions, said the Regent, that become me not to make. And indeed, the Emperor and King George, being consulted on that head, absolutely rejected it.

Besides that, they were unwilling the States (with whom they were displeased for their slowness in acceding to the Quadruple Alliance) should have the honour of this mediation, and reap, as it were, the fruit of their conduct, they had each their particular hopes and views, which a sudden peace would have disappointed. The Emperor wanted to repair the glory of his arms by the conquest of Sicily; and King George had a mind to be revenged, for the uneasiness given him, on account of the intended Invasion of Scotland. He was resolved to make some conquest, that should indemnify his subjects for the charge they had been at. He formed two projects, to take the Corunna, the best port of Biscay, and to make himself master of Peru in America. Great preparations were made. Fifty transports were provided, with three bomb-vessels, and four thousand men were ordered to be in readiness to embark in the Isle of Wight (1). The Lord Cobham was appointed to command in chief, with the title of Captain-General (2). These forces being embarked sailed from St. Helens the 21st of September, under convey of five or six men of war, commanded by Admiral Migbels, who was to be joined by Captain Johnson, then cruising off Fonterabia. But this junction was never made, and the important and secret (as it was called) expedition upon the Corunna ended only in the taking of Vigo, which surrendered at the first summons; the Citadel made some resistance, but surrendered likewise in a few days. On the 10th of October, the garrison marched out, consisting of about three hundred men, besides one hundred and fifty peasants, there having been above three hundred killed or wounded by the bombs. The English lost but two Officers, and three or four men. There were in the town about sixty pieces of large cannon, which when the enemy abandoned, they nailed and damaged them, as much as the time would give them leave. In the Citadel were forty three pieces, of which fifteen were brass guns, and two large mortars; besides above two thousand barrels of powder, and several chests of arms, amounting to about eight thousand muskets. All these stores and the brass ordnance had been lodged there from on board the ships, which were to have visited Great-Britain, and the very troops, which gave up Vigo, were likewise of that expedition. The Lord Cobham had summoned the adjacent Country to furnish provisions, and pay contribution, on pain of military execution; and had sent a party that had been attempted. No wonder, that a man, endowed with such talents and such a disposition, left behind him Italy, and other foreign parts, the character of a great Soldier, an able Statesman, and an honest Man.

1719.

To give some description of his person, he was of a slender constitution, but well supplied with spirits, which did not display themselves so much in gaiety of conversation (for he was modest in his nature) as in activity in all the duties and functions of life or business, in which he was indefatigable, and, by a continued habit of industry, had hardened and inured a body, not naturally strong, to patience of any fatigue. He had made no great proficiency in school-learning (which the early age of going to sea seldom admits of) but his great diligence, joined with excellent natural parts, and a just sense of honour, made him capable of conducting difficult Negotiations and Commissions with proper dignity and address. In his younger days he was both in the sea and land service, being an Officer of foot in the garrison of Tangier, but, preferring the sea, he was soon distinguished and favoured by that great seaman Admiral Ruffel (afterwards Earl of Orford) who made him his first Captain at the age of twenty-nine, a post equal in rank to a Rear-Admiral, and, by degrees, he arrived to be a Commissioner of the Admiralty, and first Admiral of the fleet, in which quality he commanded in the war of Sicily. On his repairing to Hanover, his late Majesty was pleased to express his regard to his eminent services, by making him Treasurer of the Navy, and Rear-Admiral of Great-Britain; and soon after a Privy-Counsellor, and Peer of Great-Britain, with the title of Viscount Torrington; and afterwards Knight of the Bath, upon the revival of that order. When his present Majesty came to the Crown, he was pleased to place him at the head of his naval affairs, as first Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, in which high station he died, in the year 1733, in the 70th year of his age.

(1) Seven Companies out of each of the three regiments of Guards; Colonel Chudleigh's regiment, Lieutenant-General Will's regiment, Lord Finchbrook's regiment; and the regiments of Howard, Grove, Hurley, and Barrel, and fifty dragoons.

(2) He had under him Major-General Wade, the Lords Mark Kerr and Dumfries, Colonel Finchwood, Brigadier-General; Colonel Armstrong, Quarter-Master General; and Colonel Leguier, Adjutant General.

(1) While

1719. party to Redondella, where they found the old fort abandoned, and run to ruin, and the inhabitants fled. That part of the province was under such consternation, that it was thought half the people had run away into Portugal. There were but few regular troops in the province; but the Marquis de Risburg had drawn together as many as he could get near Tuy, which is within three or four leagues of Vigo.

Two days after the surrender of the Citadel of Vigo, one thousand men were ordered on board four transports under the command of Major General Wade, to sail to the upper end of the bay of Vigo, and to march from thence to Pont a Pedra, ten leagues off. The Magistrates of the town met them with the keys; and there were found in the place two forty-eight pounders, four twenty-four pounders, six eight pounders, and four mortars, all brass; besides seventy pieces of iron cannon, two thousand small arms, and some bombs. The Biddeford man of war, and two transports, were sent thither, to bring away the brass cannon, arms, and stores; after which the detachment under Major-General Wade was ordered on board their ships, and the Major-General returned to Vigo, the 23d of October. Four days after, the troops being embarked, the fleet sailed for England (1).

Attempt upon the West-Indies frustrated.

Vice-Admiral Hofier was to sail to the West-Indies with a squadron of men of war, where he was to be joined by all that were in those parts; but this expedition was frustrated by the winds, and Peru was not so much as attacked.

Spain, oppressed on all sides, and drained by the great efforts she had made, began to think seriously of peace. A plan was sent to the Marquis de Beretti Landi, which he delivered to the States the 22d of December. By this plan, England was to restore Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, and France all the conquests she had lately made: The Successions of Tuscany, Parma, and Placentia were to be settled on the Queen of Spain's son, without being held either of the Emperor or Empire: All the ships taken this war were to be restored to Spain: Sicily, in the hands of the Emperor, was to be subject to the same right of reversion, as when granted to the Duke of Savoy: The Pope was to be obliged to restore to the Duke of Parma the Duchy of Castro, and the Country of Roneiglione, usurped by Innocent X. from the House of Farnese: Lastly, The Dominion and Commerce of the West-Indies should be regulated, according to the treaty of Utrecht.

Alberoni disgraced.

These proposals had been preceded by a step very grateful to the Allies. The ambition of Cardinal Alberoni had rendered him personally odious to the Emperor, to King George, and to the Duke of Orleans. All three had declared, at least intimated, that they would hearken to no peace as long as he was in place: The King of Spain thought it proper to make him a sacrifice, and purchase the tranquility of his people at the expence of a Minister ever unfortunate. The King writ to him with his own hand, forbidding him to meddle with the affairs of State, to appear any where in his presence, to remain in Madrid above eight days, and in Spain above three weeks.

The plan of the Court of Madrid was rejected as subversive of the treaty of London, and nothing less would be accepted, but a full accession to the Quadruple Alliance; which, after immense charges, and many mortifications, was submitted to by the King of Spain. The war with Spain has been thus related, without regard to the order of time, that an idea of the whole might be formed, without having recourse to different parts of the History.

Whilst the King was at Hanover, memorials full of grievances were presented to him by the Protestants from Hungary, Poland, Spire, Mentz, and particularly from the Palatinate. In Poland, in Germany, and the express tenor of the Treaties, the Popish Clergy had engaged the Diet of Grodno to take from some of the Reformed Towns their right of suffrage. In Hungary, by the credit and practices of the Jesuits, many books of Divinity, brought from England and Holland, were confiscated. At Spire and Mentz, several Churches were taken from them, and given to the Catholics.

The greatest complaints came from the Palatinate. The Catechism of Heidelberg was suppressed, after having been received above a hundred and sixty years as a formula of union among the Reformed. The Church of the Holy Ghost at Heidelberg was also taken from the Protestants, on pretence of its belonging to the Court, and likewise the Church of Creutzpach, with the revenues of several others; and, what seemed still more intolerable, the disposal of the alms of the Reformed were given to the Catholics, who forced them, moreover, to contribute to the Popish ceremonies, and forbid them to open their shops, or to work on the holidays.

Almost all the Protestant States and Princes interposed in behalf of the oppressed. King George distinguished himself by his zeal on this occasion, and writ very pressing letters, which were supported by memorials from his Ministers. But this affair succeeded not to his wish: His representations were well received, as they could not fail to be, considering his great weight; the Elector Palatine gave favourable answers, and made fair promises; but the grievances were not redressed (2).

During

(1) While the English were at Vigo, Captain Johnson, Commander of the Weymouth, the Winchester, and another English man of war, came up with a Portuguese Carval from Ribades, and being informed that there were two Spanish men of war in that port, about sixteen leagues to the East of Cape Ortigas, he made thither; sent the boats in a head to found, and followed with the ships. He anchored within musket-shot of the enemy's ships, and a battery of eight guns fired on both, and soon beat the Spaniards out of the battery, which he took possession of, and entirely demolished.

No. 96. VOL. IV.

In the interim, the two Spanish men of war blew up 1 and after some small firing on the town, he failed out of the harbour, taking with him a Spanish Merchant-ship, which he found there.

(2) The King, in his letter to the King of Poland, in behalf of the Protestants, expressed himself thus: 'That they may enjoy, for the future, their former liberty of conscience, which cannot be forced by any human power, and over which God had referred to himself the sole command.'

At his return to England, the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1719. During the King's absence all was quiet at home, and the Regency had little to do. There was, however, a kind of dispute with the Czar's Minister about his Secretary, who had been committed to prison by a Justice of Peace. But, upon the first complaint of his Master, the Secretary was released, and the Justice put out of his office, and obliged to beg pardon for his imprudence. There was also a great riot in June, raised by the journeymen weavers about Bishopsgate and Aldgate. They insulted the women for wearing calicoes, and tore their gowns off their backs. The Militia was ordered out to suppress the Rioters, of whom some of the ringleaders were taken and condemned to stand in the pillory (1).

The Parliament of Ireland met the 1st of July.

The Duke of Bolton, Lord Lieutenant, pointed out in his speech the subjects of their deliberations. He said, they were called together to consult of proper measures, and to make necessary provisions to repel or suppress any attempt to involve the Kingdom in the calamities of a Rebellion, or a foreign Invasion. He represented it as a delusion to imagine, that the designs of their enemies did not extend to Ireland, as well as to England and Scotland: And, though these designs had been hitherto prevented by the King's counsels and indefatigable endeavours, yet it would be prudent to provide such effectual remedies as might render it impracticable to proceed farther with any project of the kind.

It is obvious and visible to every considering man, that a good agreement and union among all Protestants will greatly contribute to this end; and the numbers, as well as strict union, of the Papists, among themselves, together with their apparent inclinations and attachment to the interest of the Pretender, seem to make it more immediately necessary at this time. In what manner a thing so desirable may be obtained, his Majesty leaves to your consideration, and has commended me to acquaint you, that as he has the welfare of the Church, by law established, under his peculiar care, and resolves always to support and maintain it; so it would be very pleasing to him, if any method could be found (not inconsistent with the security of it) to render the Protestant Dissenters more useful and capable of serving his Majesty, and supporting the Protestant interest, than they now are; they having, upon all occasions, given sufficient proofs or their being well affected to his Majesty's Person and Government, and to the Succession of the Crown in his Royal House: And this I am ordered to lay before you as a thing greatly importing his Majesty's service and your own security.

The method here mentioned was already found. The act passed in the last Session in England was an ample direction to proceed by. Both Houses assured, that they thought it their duty and interest to promote a good understanding and union among all Protestants, to enable them to withstand the designs of such numerous and malicious enemies, and therefore they would readily enter into the consideration of such methods, as might render the Protestant Dissenters more easy and capable of supporting the Protestant interest. Accordingly, an act passed for that purpose, under the title of, 'A bill for exempting the Protestant Dissenters of the Kingdom of Ireland from certain penalties, to which they are now subject.'

The Parliament made other useful regulations, for preventing the marriage of infants against the will of the parents or guardians; for encouraging the cultivations of lands; for preventing tumults and seditious assemblies; for suppressing tories, robbers, and rapparees; and for the better maintenance of schools and teaching the English tongue throughout the Kingdom.

In Scotland there appeared no remains of Rebellion. The Chiefs being retired, the Highlanders surrendered their arms, and the Regency seemed to fear no disturbance from that quarter, nor had they any orders to give. However, the evil was not quite cured, of which were seen now and then some strange proofs. At Edinburg alone, five Ministers, cited before the Magistrates, refused to acknowledge King George, and their Churches were forced to be shut up.

After six months absence, the King returned to London, the 14th of November, more respected than ever, on account of the great things he had terbury, accompanied with ten other Bishops, in a congratulatory speech said, among other things, 'I am extremely obliged to the Lords the Bishops, to return our most humble acknowledgment to your Majesty, for the favour you have been pleased to give to our brethren, the Protestants of the Palatinate, and of Poland and Lithuania, persecuted for the faith of Christ. We are persuaded, that this Royal charity will draw down innumerable blessings from Heaven, upon the Person of your sacred Majesty, and your affairs.'

The King's return. Nov. 14.

In the address from the University of Cambridge, presented by Dr. Gauch, the Vice-Chancellor, were the following words: 'It is with particular pleasure we behold your Majesty, in conjunction with other powers, asserting the cause of Liberty, and supporting the interest of our Protestant Brethren abroad, whose deplorable condition every day convinces us, that the Protestant Profession must stand or fall with the Protestant Succession.'

(1) During the King's absence died Mr. Joseph Addison, June 17. He was son of Dr. Lancelot Addison, Dean of Litchfield; and, being educated at the Charterhouse school, was sent from thence to the University of Oxford, where he finished his studies in Magdalen

College: He became first known to the world by the excellency of his Latin poems, which he published in the Musa Anglicana, and dedicated to Charles Mountague, Earl of Halifax, who, together with the Lord Sommers, then Lord-keeper (to whom he inscribed the first piece he published in English, viz. A poem to his Majesty King William III. on the taking of Namure, in the year 1695) recommended him to that Prince, who gave him a pension of 300 l. per ann. and sent him to travel. At his return from his travels, he was made Commissioner of Appeals in the Excise; afterwards he was Under Secretary to two Secretaries of State, and Secretary of State himself in Ireland under two Lords Lieutenants. Upon the death of Queen Anne, he was made Secretary to the Regency, after that one of the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, and then advanced to be one of the Principal Secretaries of State to King George; which office, by reason of his ill state of health, he was obliged to resign some time before his death. He married Charlotte, daughter of Sir Thomas Mordaunt, of Chirk-Castle, in the county of Denby, Bart. and relict of Edward Rich, Earl of Warwick, by whom he left issue only one daughter.

July 6, died Meinhardt Schomberg, Duke of Schomberg and Leinster, Marquis of Harwich, &c. Knight Companion 1719. had done for the welfare and interest of his Dominions. He was received with demonstrations of the liveliest joy, and those who were not forward to shew it were punished by the populace, and the windows broke that were not illuminated. Whilst in Germany, he had sent orders for the meeting of the Parliament on the 23d of November, and for the Members to be all there, by reason of the importance of the affairs he had to communicate to them.

The Parliament meets, Nov. 23. Fr. H. C.
On that day the Session was opened with the following speech, read by the Chancellor to both Houses:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"THE satisfaction, with which I always meet you, is very much increased at this time, when it has pleased Almighty God so to strengthen the arms of Great-Britain and our Confederates, and so to prosper our several Negotiations, that, by his blessing on our endeavours, we may promise ourselves to reap very soon the fruits of our successes. I am persuaded, it will be accounted by all my good subjects a sufficient reward for some extraordinary expence, that all Europe, as well as these Kingdoms, is upon the point of being delivered from the calamities of war, by the influence of British arms and counsels. One Protestant Kingdom * has already been relieved by our seasonable interposition; and such a foundation is laid, by our late treaties, for an union amongst other great Protestant Powers, as will very much tend to the security of our holy Religion.
"I believe you cannot but be surprized at the continuance of the war, where our enemies have nothing to hope, and so much to fear. It is indeed difficult to frame any judgment of those counsels, which have broke out of late in so many rash and ill-concerted measures. If they depend upon our divisions at home, I doubt not but, in a very short time, their hopes, founded upon this expectation, will prove as vain and ill-grounded, as any of their former projects.

"In congratulating with you on this happy posture of affairs, I must tell you, that, as I have been very just and faithful to my engagements, so I have met such frank and powerful returns of assistance from my Allies, as will, I doubt not, establish a lasting friendship amongst us.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"You will see, by the accounts I have ordered to be delivered to you, how moderate a use I have made of the power intrusted with me, to augment my forces by sea and land. I depend upon the eminent duty and affection you have always shewn to my Person and Government, that you will be vigorous in dispatching the necessary Supplies for the year; to which purpose I have ordered the estimates to be laid before you. And, at the same time, I must desire you to turn your thoughts to all proper means for lessening the debts of the Nation.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"You all must be sensible of the many undeserved and unnatural troubles I have met with, during the course of my Reign. Our divisions at home have been magnified abroad; and, by inspiring into some foreign powers a false opinion of our force, have encouraged them to treat us in a manner, which the Crown

Companion of the most noble Order of the Garter, and Count of the sacred Roman Empire: He married Charlotte, eldest daughter of Charles Lewis, Elector-Palatine, by whom he left issue only two daughters; Fredericka, married to Robert d'Arcey, Earl of Holderness (the present Countess Fitzwalter) and Mary, married to Count Dagenfeldt of the Empire.

July 24, died Heneage Finch, Earl of Aylesford, second son of Daniel Finch, Earl of Nottingham. He was succeeded by his son of the same name.

While the King was abroad, a great dispute and difference arose between the Dissenting Ministers in London, about subscribing and non-subscribing articles of advice for the conduct of their congregations.

The Dissenters at several places, but more especially at Exeter, being jealous that their Ministers were not as orthodox as themselves, in the article of the Trinity, had demanded of them a confession of faith; and upon advice of the differences between their pastors and them, on this occasion, the Dissenting Ministers, in and about London, held a Synod, to consult of articles of advice for peace. They met at Salters-Hall. The main debate was inserting in the advice the first article of the Church of England, and the answer to the fifth and sixth questions in the Assembly's Catechism. But upon the question it was carried by a majority of fifty-seven against fifty-three, That no human compositions or interpretations of the Doctrine of the Trinity should be made a part of these articles of advice, which they were met to draw up. How far the heats carried them on both sides, may be seen by what happened at the division. One of those, who were against human compositions, saying, as he went out, You that are against persecution, come up stairs; and another, who was for them, You that are for the Doctrine of the Trinity, stay below.

The Subscribers withdrew from the assembly, notwithstanding the question had been carried against them, and set their names to a paper containing the first article, and the two answers before-mentioned.

At the same time the Non-Subscribers made the following declaration:

"We freely declare that we utterly disown the Arian doctrines, and sincerely believe the doctrine of the Trinity, and the proper Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, which we apprehend to be clearly revealed in the Holy Scriptures; but are far from condemning any who appear to be with us in the main, though they chuse not to declare themselves in other than Scripture terms, or not in ours."

Which they farther explained thus:

"The human words, Trinity and proper Divinity, in this Declaration of our faith, are used only to notify the things we speak of; and we do not presume in the way of Test to go into any particular explanations of those things, either in our own, or other men's words: But for that we refer to the Holy Scriptures, whence it may appear, that we take the Scripture account of those things, to be the best and fittest we can use on such occasions."

Whilst these matters were transacting at London, three Congregations at Exeter proceeded to the actual exclusion of their Pastors, Mr. Pierce, Mr. Withers, and Mr. Hallett, for refusing to subscribe certain articles of faith, which had been prepared for them.

It is not unlikely (says a certain Author *) that a * Quid-leading man or two among the Subscribers had private mixon, encouragement from a great Prelate to proceed as they did.

“ Crown of Great-Britain shall never endure while I wear it. The trouble and expence, which this hath brought upon us, have been the most loudly complained of by those, who were the occasion of them. But with your assistance I have hitherto got through all these difficulties, and, by the continuance of your help, I hope very soon to overcome them, since the hand of God hath so visibly been with us in all our undertakings.

“ It the necessities of my Government have sometimes engaged your duty and affection to trust me with powers, of which you have always, with good reason, been jealous, the whole world must acknowledge they have been so used, as to justify the confidence you have reposed in me. And, as I can truly affirm, that no Prince was ever more zealous to increase his own authority, than I am to perpetuate the liberty of my people, I hope you will think of all proper methods to establish and transmit to your posterity, the freedom of our happy constitution, and particularly to secure that part, which is most liable to abuse. I value myself upon being the first, who hath given you an opportunity of doing it; and I must recommend it to you, to complete those measures, which remained imperfect the last Session.

“ So far as human prudence can fortel, the unanimity of this Session of Parliament must establish, with the peace of all Europe, the glory and trade of these Kingdoms on a lasting foundation. I think every man may see the end of our labours. All I have to ask of you is, that you would agree to be a great and flourishing People, since it is the only means, by which I desire to become a happy King.”

The addresses were agreeable to the speech, the King was thanked and congratulated for the great success of his measures to establish the peace of Europe. “ It is with the utmost pleasure and satisfaction (say the Lords) that we see the present happy union between your Majesty and the other great Protestant Powers, which does so visibly tend to the security of our Holy Religion; and we desire to express the deep sense which we have of your Majesty’s seasonable interposition for the poor persecuted Protestants abroad; and we humbly beseech your Majesty, that you would be pleased to continue your powerful protection and offices in favour of them.” They concluded with saying, “ We promise ourselves, that the whole world will soon be convinced with how little foundation the enemies of your Majesty and your Kingdoms have flattered themselves to reap any benefit from our intestine divisions.

We should be wanting in our duty to your Majesty and our Country, if we did not return your Majesty our most hearty thanks for that tender and unprecedented care and concern, your Majesty has been pleased to express in your most gracious speech from the Throne, for the liberties of your People, and the freedom of our happy Constitution.”

The Commons, after thanks and congratulation, very strongly expressed their assurances in these words:

“ We crave leave to assure your Majesty, that we will, on our parts, by the vigour of our resolutions, for the support of your Government, 1719. and by the dispatch which we will give to the necessary Supplies, convince the world, that, if our enemies have conceived any hopes from our divisions at home, this hath been the vainest of all their projects. And we will enable your Majesty, in concert with your Allies, effectually to support and perfect those just and equitable measures which have been taken to establish a general peace.

And we farther assure your Majesty, That we will apply ourselves to find out the best means for lessening the debts of the Nation, and supporting the public credit, and will concur in all proper methods to establish and preserve the freedom of our happy Constitution, for which your sacred Majesty has given so many tender proofs of your care and affection.”

As the King had recommended in his speech the thinking of proper methods to establish the freedom of the Constitution (by which was meant the Peerage-Bill) the Duke of Buckingham, two days after the beginning of the Session, revived the bill for limiting the Peers, which had been dropped by the prorogation. In opposition to this bill, Earl Cowper said, “ Besides the reasons, that induced him last Session to be against this bill, he had now another, that weighed no less with him than all the rest, the earnestness, with which it was recommended, and the eagerness, with which it was brought before them at the beginning of a Session. He had observed both from history, and his own experience, that, in affairs of moment, precipitation was ever dangerous, and, in many cases, to be suspected; and, for his own part, he could not help being of opinion, that, if there were no secret meaning in this bill, some men would not be so pressing for it.” To this the Earl of Sunderland answered, “ That it could not with any justice be said, that any preparation had been used in this affair, since the bill in question had been brought in the last Session, and then thoroughly examined; so that he doubted not, but every Member of that House was fully apprized of it, and ready to give his vote for or against it. That the reason, why it was brought in so soon at this time, he conceived to be, that it might give no interruption to the other important affairs, which the King had recommended to his Parliament. And, as for any secret meaning in this bill, he solemnly declared, he knew of no other, but what his Majesty had been pleased graciously to intimate in his speech, the securing the freedom of our Constitution, by preventing, for the future, the abuse of one branch of the Royal Prerogative, of which they had a fatal instance in the late Reign, and which had given just offence, and terrible apprehensions to all sober men.” To this it was replied, “ That if it was foreseen, that bill might interrupt the other important affairs, it had been advisable to keep it till the middle, or towards the end of the Session, and to begin with the King’s business.” But the Duke of Bucks compromised the matter, by saying, “ That, for his own part, he apprehended no danger from this bill; and if it was attended with any inconveniences, as all human affairs are apt to be, time would discover it; and then, as in all other cases, they might apply a remedy to it. As to the time of bringing it in, he thought it no material objection, since this House had no other business

1719. business to go upon; but that he foresaw, that, whatever dispatch they made in that bill, it would not get so quick a passage in the other House.² After these speeches, the bill passed the Lords without any farther opposition, and was sent to the Commons, where it was opposed by a great many Members. Mr. Griggs urged in favour of the bill, 'That his Majesty, since his Accession to the Throne, had had no other view, than to procure the good and happiness of his subjects, and to secure their rights and liberties. That having, in his Royal wisdom, considered the abuse, that was made in the last Reign of that branch of the prerogative relating to the creating of Peers, which abuse had brought the liberties of Great-Britain, and of all Europe, into immediate danger, his Majesty, through a condescension worthy of a Prince truly magnanimous, had graciously been pleased to consent, that such bounds be set to that part of the prerogative, as may prevent any exorbitant and dangerous exercises of it for the time to come. That it was only in the Reign of good Princes, that Legislators had opportunities to remedy and amend the defects, to which all human institutions are subject: And that, if the present occasion of rectifying that apparent flaw in our Constitution were lost, it might perhaps never be retrieved.' Mr. Walpole spoke on the other side, and endeavoured to answer all that had been offered for the bill. He took notice, 'That among the Romans, the wisest people upon earth, the Temple of Fame was placed behind the Temple of Virtue, to denote, that there was no coming to the former, without going through the other. But that, if this bill passed into a law, one of the most powerful incentives to virtue would be taken away, since there would be no coming to honour, but thro' the winding-sheet of an old decrepit Lord, and the grave of an extinct noble family. That it was matter of just surprize, that a bill of this nature should either have been projected, or at least promoted by a Gentleman, who not long ago sat among them, and who, having got into the House of Peers, would now shut up the door after him. That this bill would not only be a discouragement to virtue and merit, but also endanger our excellent Constitution: For, as there was a due balance between the three branches of the Legislature, if any more weight were thrown into any one of those branches, it would destroy that balance, and consequently subvert the Constitution. That the Peers were already possessed of many valuable privileges; and to give them more power and authority, by limiting their number, would, in time, bring back the Commons into the state of the servile dependency, which they were in, when they wore the badges of the Lords. That he could not but wonder, that the Lords would send such a bill to the Commons; for how could they expect, that the Commons would give their concurrence to so injurious a law, by which they and their posterities are to be excluded from the Peerage? And how would the Lords receive a bill, by which it would be enacted, that a Baron should not be made a Viscount, nor a Viscount be made an Earl, and so on? That, besides all this, that part of the bill, which related to the Peerage of Scotland, would be a manifest violation of the act of Union, on the part of England, and a dishonourable breach of trust in those, who represented the Scots Nobility. That such an infringement of the Union would endanger the intire dissolution of it, by disgusting so great a number of the Scots Peers, as should be excluded from sitting in the British Parliament. For as it was well known, that the Revolution-Settlement stood upon the principle of a mutual compact, if we should break first the articles of Union, it would be natural for the Scots to think themselves thereby freed from all allegiance. And as for what had been suggested, that the election of the sixteen Scots Peers was no less expensive to the Crown, than injurious to the Peerage of Scotland, it might be answered, that the making twenty-five hereditary sitting Scots Peers would still increase the discontents of the electing Peers, who thereby would be deprived of a valuable consideration for not being chosen.³ After these, and several other speeches, the bill was at last rejected by a majority of two hundred and sixty-nine against one hundred and seventy-seven. Thus the prerogative of increasing the number of the Peers, as the King should think proper, which he seemed so willing to divest himself of, was, as it were against his consent, preserved to him. It was observed by an *op. * Sir J. Poper of the bill, that some persons had through Packer's indiscretion occasioned an unhappy difference [in ton. the Royal Family] and he was apprehensive if that bill, so prejudicial to the rights of the next heir, should pass into a law, it might render that difference irreconcilable. This was said chiefly with regard to the Earl of Sunderland, who promoted the bill with the greatest eagerness. It was also reported that Mr. Cragge was to have been one of the six English Peers, to be created after the passing of the bill.

During this Session, a bill, for better securing A bill for the dependency of Ireland upon the Crown of securing Great-Britain, passed both Houses. This bill took its rise, from an appeal to the House of Peers in England, by Maurice Annesley, against Pr. H. L. a decree of the House of Peers in Ireland; which Pr. H. C. the British House of Peers received, and ordered the Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland to cause Mr. Annesley to be forthwith put in possession of certain lands in the County of Kildare, of which he had been dispossessed by virtue of a decree of the House of Peers in Ireland. Pursuant to this order, the Barons of the Exchequer in that Kingdom issued out an injunction to Alexander Barrows, Sheriff of the County of Kildare, and set several fines upon him, for refusing to put it in execution; which the House of Peers in Ireland discharged, and voted, that Jeffery Gilbert, Lord Chief-Baron of the Exchequer, John Pocklington and Sir John St. Leger, the other Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland, had acted in manifest derogation to the King's prerogative, in his High Court of Parliament in Ireland, as also of the rights and privileges of this Kingdom, and of the Parliament thereof. These Barons were also ordered to be taken into custody of the Usher of the Black-Rod (1).

The

(1) Several Lords dissented from these resolutions, viz. the Lord Middleton, Lord High-Chancellor, the No. 90. VOL. IV.

Lords Donerayle and Fitz-Williams, and the Bishops of Meath, Kildare, Killala, Kilmurree, and Derry.

1719-20. The House of Peers in Ireland drew up a long representation to be transmitted to the King, setting forth their right to the final Judicature of causes in that Kingdom; and the Duke of Leeds, in a protest against a vote passed in the House of Peers in England, gave fifteen reasons to support the claim of the House of Peers in Ireland. But the House of Lords in England relolved, 'That the Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland had acted with courage according to law, in support of his Majesty's prerogative, and with fidelity to the Crown of Great-Britain;' and ordered an address to the King, 'for conferring on them some marks of his Royal favour, as may be a recompence for the ill usage they have received, by being unjustly censured, and illegally imprisoned, for doing their duty.' Then it was that the bill, for better securing the dependency of Ireland, was brought in, and, having passed the House of Lords, was sent down to the Commons. Mr. Pitt was the first, who spoke against the bill, because, as he said, it seemed calculated for no other purpose, than to increase the power of the British House of Peers, which, in his opinion, was already but too great. He was seconded by Mr. Plummer, who excepted, in particular, against the preamble of the bill, as incoherent with the enacting part; which was partly owned by Sir Joseph Jekyll, who, in the main, spoke for the bill. Mr. Hangerford, on the other hand, endeavoured to shew, that Ireland was ever independent with respect to Courts of Judicature; and he was supported by the Lord Moleworth, the Lord Tyrconnel, and some other Members; but, Mr. Torke having supported the Master of the Rolls, the bill was at last agreed to, and received the Royal assent (1).

About this time a misunderstanding happened between Mr. Lechmere, Attorney General, and Sir William Thompson, Solicitor-General, which was carried so far in a grand Committee of the Commons, the 16th of March, that Sir William charged Mr. Lechmere with breach of his oath, trust, and duty, as a Privy-Counsellor; urging, 'that he acted as Council, and received sums of money for his advice, in matters to him referred by the Privy-Council, as Attorney-General.' After this, he proceeded to the reading of several reports, made either by the Attorney-General or himself, but was interrupted by Mr. Craggs, who said, 'They were not there to examine, who was the best Lawyer; but that, a heavy accusation having been raised against a Gentleman of distinguished merit, and in very eminent stations, it was incumbent upon the Accuser to produce clear evidence to make good his charge.' Upon this, Mr. Lechmere stood up in his own defence, and said, 'He had the honour to be a Privy-Counsellor, Chancellor of the Duchy, Attorney-General, a Member of that House, and a Gentleman; and therefore such a heinous accusation could not but fall the heavier upon him: That he owned himself liable to a great many human frailties and imperfections; but, as his conscience intirely acquitted him of the crimes laid to his charge, so he defied all the world, and the worst of his enemies, to prove him guilty of corruption or any unwarrantable practices: That, though he was thus wrongfully accused in so solemn a manner, yet, as a good Christian, he did heartily forgive his Accuser, and was willing to believe, that he was prompted to this rash action, rather by mistake, or ignorance, than by malice; concluding, with desiring that Honourable Assembly to lift and weigh the whole matter with their usual candour, impartiality, and equity, and to excuse any unguarded expressions, that might escape him, in vindicating his innocence.' After this, several witnesses were sworn, and eight or nine of them examined; but, their depositions amounting to no more, than that Mr. Lechmere had taken nothing but his usual fees, as Chamber-Counsellor, the accusation laid against him appeared groundless to the Committee, and was declared by the House to be malicious, false and scandalous.

On the 8th of March, Sir Joseph Jekyll presented to the House a bill, to prevent the impious practice of duelling; which was occasioned by a duel between Mr. William Aldworth of Windsor, and Mr. Owen Buckingham, Member of Parliament for Reading; who, quarrelling after having drank too freely, fought in the dark, and Mr. Buckingham was killed. But this bill was dropped in the House of Lords.

The King had earnestly recommended, in his speech, the consideration of all proper means for lessening the debts of the Nation. Accordingly, a scheme was laid to reduce all the public funds into one, for discharging the national debt. The South-Sea Company and the Bank of England presented their several proposals to the House of Commons. The liberty of taking in the national debts, and, in consequence thereof, of increasing their capital stock and yearly fund,

(1) The act was as follows:

'Whereas attempts have been lately made to shake off the subjection of Ireland unto, and dependance upon, the Imperial Crown of this Realm, which will be of dangerous consequence to Great-Britain and Ireland.

And whereas the House of Lords in Ireland, in order thereto, have, of late, against law, assumed to themselves a power and jurisdiction to examine, correct, and amend the judgments and decrees of the Courts of Justice in the Kingdom of Ireland: Therefore, for the better securing of the dependency of Ireland upon the Crown of Great-Britain, may it please your Majesty, that it may be enacted; and it is hereby declared and enacted, by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That the said Kingdom of Ireland hath been, is, and, of right, ought to be, subordinate unto, and dependent upon, the Imperial Crown of Great-Britain, as being inseparably united and annexed thereunto; and that the King's Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons of Great-Britain in Parliament assembled, had, hath, and, of right, ought to have, full power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity, to bind the People and the Kingdom of Ireland.

And be it further enacted and declared by the authority aforesaid, That the House of Lords of Ireland have not, nor, of right, ought to have, any jurisdiction to judge of, affirm, or reverse any judgment, sentence, or decree, given or made in any Court within the said Kingdom; and that all proceedings before the said House of Lords, upon any such judgment, sentence, or decree, are, and are hereby declared to be, utterly null and void, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.'

1719-20. fund, was looked upon as a very valuable benefit; and therefore the contest between the Bank and the South-Sea Company was great. They endeavoured to outbid each other in Parliament. The South-Sea Company, for the liberty of taking into their stock the irredeemable and redeemable debts, by purchase or subscription (amounting to above thirty millions) offered at first 3,500,000 l. to be paid into the Exchequer by four equal quarterly payments, beginning at Lady-day 1721. And agreed, that their whole capital should be reduced to 4 per cent. after Midsummer 1727, and be thenceforth redeemable by Parliament.

The Bank, for the like liberty, offered, upon the long and short annuities, three years purchase, which (if the whole purchase was completed) would amount to about 2,367,600 l. and 20 per cent. upon the redeemable debts, amounting to about 3,180,000 l. So their whole offer was above five millions and a half.

But the South-Sea Company being resolved, at any rate, to obtain the liberty of taking in the public debts, offered, in a second scheme, not only 500,000 l. more, but also four years and a half's purchase upon all the annuities they should take into their capital stock, which (if all the annuities were taken in) would amount to about 3,567,503 l. So that their whole offer was about 7,567,500 l. They likewise offered to circulate 1,000,000 l. in Exchequer bills gratis, and pay 3 per cent. interest for that million; as also one year's purchase upon such annuities, as should happen not to come into the Company's capital, before the 1st day of March 1721.

Though the Bank made some farther advances, this scheme of the South-Sea Company was approved by the Commons, and a bill was ordered to be brought in.

While this affair was debating in the House of Commons, the stocks of the South-Sea Company gradually rose from 130 to above 300, and advanced to near 400; but, after some fluctuation, settled at about 330, in which state, with little variation, they continued till the end of March. This great rise was chiefly owing to the rejection of a motion for a clause in the South-Sea bill, to fix what share in the capital stock of the Company the Proprietors of the annuities should have, who should voluntarily subscribe, or how many years purchase in money they should receive upon subscribing, at the choice of the Proprietors. It was pretended, that the obliging the Company to fix a price upon the annuities might endanger the success of so beneficial an undertaking: That, as it was the interest of the Company to take in the annuities, so it was not to be doubted, they would use all their endeavours for that purpose, and offer such terms to the Annuityists, as would encourage them to come in voluntarily: That therefore the Company ought to be allowed a competent time to try what they could do; and if, in a subsequent Session of Parliament, it should appear, that the conditions offered to the Annuityists were not reasonable, and consequently had been ineffectual, the Commons, in such a case, might give what directions they should think proper about the matter. Upon these and other reasons, the motion was rejected; and, soon after, the bill for enabling the South-Sea Company to increase their capital stock, passed the Commons, by a majority of a hundred and seventy-two against fifty-five, and sent to the Lords for their concurrence, where it occasioned a warm debate.

The Lord North and Grey spoke first against the bill, which he represented to be 'unjust in its nature, and might prove fatal in its consequences, since it seemed calculated for the enriching of a few, and the impoverishing of a great many, and not only made way for, but countenanced and authorized the fraudulent and pernicious practice of stock-jobbing, which produced an irreparable mischief in diverting the genius of the people from trade and industry.' His Lordship was supported by the Duke of Wharton, who endeavoured to shew, 'That the South-Sea project might prove of infinite disadvantage to the Nation: First, as it gave foreigners an opportunity to double and treble the vast sums they had in our public funds, which could not but tempt them to withdraw their capital stock, with their immense gains, to other Countries, which might drain Great-Britain of a considerable part of its gold and silver. Secondly, That the artificial and prodigious rise of the South-Sea stock was a dangerous bait, which might decoy many unwary people to their ruin, and allure them, by a false prospect of gain, to part with what they had got by their labour and industry, to purchase imaginary riches. And, in the third place, that the addition of above thirty millions capital would give such a vast power to the South-Sea Company, as might endanger the liberties of the Nation, and in time subvert our excellent Constitution, since by their extensive interest they might influence most, if not all the elections of the Members, and consequently overrule the resolutions of the House of Commons.' Earl Cowper spoke also against the bill, which he observed to be ushered in and received with great pomp and acclamations of joy, but which was contrived for treachery and destruction. His Lordship urged in particular, 'That, in all public bargains, it is a duty incumbent on them, who are intrusted with the administration, to take care, that the same be more advantageous to the State, than to private persons; but that a quite contrary method seemed to have been followed in the contract made with the South-Sea Company. For if the stocks were kept up to the advanced price, to which they had been raised by the oblique arts of stock-jobbing, either that Company, or its principal Members, would gain above thirty millions sterling, of which they gave but one fourth part towards the discharge of the national debts. That, though this scheme carried the face of public good, yet nothing could be so, that was founded on injustice; as his Lordship took this bill to be. That he apprehended, in particular, that the main public intention of it, viz. The re-purchase of annuities, would meet with insuperable difficulties; and that, in such a case, none but a few persons, who were in the secret, and had early bought stocks at a low rate, and afterwards sold them at a high price, would, in the end, be gainers by this project.' The Duke of Bucks and some other Peers spoke on the same side; but the Earl of Sunderland answered most of their objections; and, among other things, said, 'That, they who encouraged and countenanced the scheme of the South-Sea Company, had nothing in their view, but the easing of the Nation of part of that heavy load of debts it labours

1720

1720. hours under. That, on the other hand, the Managers for that Company had undoubtedly a prospect of private gain, either to themselves, or to their Corporation; but that, when that scheme was accepted, neither the one nor the other could foresee, that the stocks would have risen to the price they were now advanced. That, if they had continued as they were at that time, the public would have had the far greater share of the advantage accruing from that scheme; and if the stocks were kept up to the price they had been raised to, which was not unlikely, it was but reasonable, that the South Sea Company should enjoy the profits procured to it, by the wise management and industry of its Directors, which would enable it both to make large dividends among its Members, and thereby compass the ends intended by this scheme. After these debates, the bill passed without any amendment or division; and, on the 7th of April, the King came on purpose to the House of Lords, to give the Royal assent to it. What were the effects of this famous act, will hereafter be largely shewn.

Abstract of the act for increasing the capital stock of the South-Sea Company. This act recites the several public debts and funds, the acts by which they were established, the terms and conditions of their continuance, the amounts of the respective sums of principal and interest due and payable, and dividing them into several classes and species of debts, namely, long and short annuities, redeemable and irredeemable debts, and stating what rate of interest they bore, computes the principals and annuities at certain sums, in order to settle the different rates and values at which they were to be estimated, to be redeemed, purchased, or taken in by the South-Sea Company.

The redeemable debts are stated at 16,546,482 l. 7 s. 1 d. $\frac{3}{4}$ (1), the irredeemable annuities, being for the remainder of several long terms of 89, 96, and 99 years, are computed to amount to 666,821 l. 8 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$ a year, besides some unsubscribed lottery annuities and short annuities for 23 and 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ years then standing out.

The Company is declared willing, and is accordingly authorized to take in by purchase, or subscription, the irredeemable debts, at such time or times as they shall find convenient, before the 1st of March 1721, and without any compulsion on any of the Proprietors, at such rates and prices as shall be agreed between the Company and the respective Proprietors.

The Company is likewise declared willing, and is authorized at such time and times, as they shall see convenient (but subject to such notices of redemption as are therein mentioned) to take in all and every the redeemable debts, amounting to 16,546,482 l. 7 s. 1 d. $\frac{3}{4}$, either by purchase, taking subscriptions, or by paying them off.

Provided that the Company for every annuity, part of the long annuities computed at 666,821 l. 8 s. 3 d. so to be taken by them, 1720. may, in lieu thereof, have an addition made to their capital stock, after the rate of twenty years purchase; and such respective additions to their present yearly fund or annuity, as is after limited.

And for all such short annuities, as shall be taken in, to have an addition to their capital stock, after the rate of fourteen years purchase, with a proportionable addition to their present annuity or yearly fund.

And for all and every of the redeemable debts that shall be taken in by purchase, subscriptions, or paying off, to have an addition of 100 l. to their capital stock, for every 100 l. of the principal monies so taken in, with a proportionable addition to their present yearly fund.

Thus far it appears, that the Proprietors of these public debts amounting to above twenty-six millions, that subscribed into the South-Sea stock, by virtue of this act of Parliament, acted by their own choice and option without any compulsion. The Irredeemables were left at full liberty to have remained in the condition they were, and an express provision was made for the security of such as did not subscribe.

The Redeemables had their option to have waited for the terms of redemption, to which they were before liable, and to have taken their money, when the public had been in a condition to pay them.

So that subscribing and accepting South-Sea stock, in lieu and discharge of their former debts and annuities, was the voluntary act of them all, induced, no doubt, by the general infatuation that every where reigned, and the imaginary prospect of great advantages.

For the liberty of thus taking in the national debts, and increasing their capital stock, the Company in the first place have desired and consented that their present and to be increased annuity may be continued at 5 l. per cent. till Midsummer, 1727, and from thence be reduced to 4 l. per cent. and be redeemable by Parliament. In consideration of this and other advantages expressed in the act, the Company are willing to make such payments into the receipt of the Exchequer, as are herein specified, for the use of the public, to be applied for paying off the public debts incurred before Christmas, 1716.

The sums, which they were obliged to pay, were 4,156,306 l. 4 s. 1 d. for the liberty of taking in the redeemable debts, and four years and a half's purchase for all the long and short annuities that should be subscribed, and one year's purchase for such long annuities as should not be subscribed. These sums upon the execution of the act were found to amount to about 7,000,000 l.

For enabling the Company to raise this sum, they are empowered to make calls for money from their Members, or open books of subscriptions,

	l.	s.	d.
(1) 5 l. per cent. annuities.
Principal sum -	11,779,660	11	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
4 l. per cent. annuities.
Principal sum -	4,766,821	15	9 $\frac{1}{2}$
	16,546,482	7	12 $\frac{1}{2}$

The 5 l. per cent. annuities consisted of several lotteries, Bankers annuities, Blanks in lottery 1714, Navy deficiency, and Bank annuities.

The 4 l. per cent. annuities were, the Civil List lottery, Prizes in lottery 1714, Deficiencies on low wines, &c. on funds, Canada bills, Army debts and debentures, first and second lottery 1719.

1720. scripſions, or grant annuities redeemable by the Company, or by any other method they ſhall think fit in a general Court. They might alſo borrow money upon any contract, bill, &c. under their common ſeal, or on the credit of their capital ſtock. The money, called for from their Members, ſhall (if thought proper) be an additional ſtock, but there ſhall be no addition thereby to the Company's annuities, to be paid out of the public duties.

Out of the firſt monies ariſing from the ſeveral ſums to be paid by the Company into the Exchequer, ſuch public debts carrying intereſt at 5 l. per cent. incurred before the 25th of December, 1716, founded upon any former act of Parliament, as are now redeemable, or may be redeemed before the 25th of December, 1722, ſhall be paid off in the firſt place: Then all the remainder ſhall be applied towards paying off ſo much of the capital ſtock of the Company as ſhall then carry an intereſt of 5 l. per cent. Provision is alſo made, that, after Midſummer, 1727, the Company is not to be paid off in any ſums, being leſs than one million at a time.

The Royal and London Assurance Companies e-rected.

Several projects were now ſet on foot, particularly for eſtabliſhing the two Companies of the Royal Assurance, headed by the Lord Onflow, and of the London Assurance by the Lord Gbetwynd. The projectors had been very induſtrious to beſpeak the countenance of the Houſe of Commons, for which they had cauſed two letters to be printed and given to the Members. But, theſe and all other ſolicitations having proved ineffectual, the Managers for the two Companies had recourſe to other methods, and being informed that the Civil Liſt was conſiderably in arrears (for which no provision had been, or could conveniently be made by the Parliament, becauſe the grand Committee of Supply had been inadvertently diſmiſſed) they offered to the Miniſtry 600,000 l. towards the diſcharge of that debt, in caſe they might obtain the King's Charter, with the parliamentary ſanction for the eſtabliſhment of their reſpective Companies. The Miniſtry, being at a loſs for means to pay the Civil Liſt debt, readily embraced the offer, and, Mr. Craggs having the day before prepared the leading Members of the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Aſſable preſented, May the 4th, to the Houſe the following meſſage:

“ His Maſteſty having received ſeveral petitions from great numbers of the moſt eminent Merchants of the City of London, humbly praying, that he would be graciouſly pleaſed to grant them his letters patents for erecting Corporations to aſſure ſhips and merchandize; and the ſaid Merchants having offered to advance and pay a conſiderable ſum of money for his Maſteſty's uſe, in caſe they may obtain letters patents accordingly: His Maſteſty being of opinion, that erecting two ſuch Corporations, excluſive only of all other Corporations and Societies for aſſuring of ſhips and merchandize, under proper reſtrictions and regulations, may be of great advantage and ſecurity to the trade and commerce of the Kingdom, is willing and deſirous to be ſtrengthened by the advice and aſſiſtance of this Houſe, in matters of this nature and importance: He therefore hopes for their ready concurrence to ſecure and confirm the privileges his Maſteſty ſhall grant to ſuch Corporations, and to enable him to diſcharge the debts of his Civil Government, without burthening his people with any new aid or ſupply.”

Purſuant to the meſſage, a bill was brought in to enable his Maſteſty to grant letters of incorporation to the two Companies, which paſſed both Houſes, and received the Royal aſſent.

The buſineſs of the Parliament being now finiſhed, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and put an end to the Seſſion with the following ſpeech to both Houſes:

The Parliament is prorogued, June 11.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

“ I am now come to put an end to this Seſſion, which, though it hath advanced ſo far into the ſummer, cannot be thought a tedious one, when we conſider how much buſineſs hath been done, and the great advantages that may be expected from it. “ Your ſeaſonable vigour and perſeverance to ſupport me in the meaſures I have taken with my Allies, for reſtoring the tranquillity of Europe, have produced moſt of the effects I could deſire. Much the greateſt part of Chriſtendom is already freed from the calamities of war; and by what hath happened both abroad and at home my people muſt be convinced, that their welfare is inſeparable from the ſtrength and ſecurity of my Government.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

“ I return you my thanks for the Supplies you have raiſed for the ſervice of the current year; and it is a particular ſatisfaction to me, that a method has been found out for making good the deficiencies of my Civil Liſt, without laying any new burden upon my ſubjects. “ The good foundation you have prepared this Seſſion for the payment of the national debts, and the diſcharge of a great part of them, without the leaſt violation of the public faith, will, I hope, ſtrengthen more and more the union I deſire to ſee among all my ſubjects, and make our friendſhip yet more valuable to all foreign powers.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

“ You will ſee the good effects, which our ſteadineſs hath produced. There remains but little on our part, to ſaſtify the world, that more credit, ſecurity, and greatneſs, is to be acquired by following the views of peace, and adhering ſtrictly to juſt engagements, than by depending on the advantages of war, or by purſuing the meaſures of ambition. To complete what remains unfiniſhed, I propoſe very ſpeedily to viſit my Dominions in Germany, hoping to put an end to thoſe troubles in the North, which are now reduced to a very narrow compaſs. I flatter myſelf, that my preſence this ſummer in thoſe parts will prove uſeful to our poor Proteſtant brethren, for whom you have expreſſed ſuch ſeaſonable and charitable ſentiments.

“ I doubt not but to meet you again next winter, diſpoſed to put a finiſhing hand to all thoſe good works, which, by your aſſiſtance, I have brought ſo near to perfection. I could wiſh, that all my ſubjects, convinced by time

1720. "and experience, would lay aside those partialities and animosities, which prevent them from living quietly, and enjoying the happiness of a mild and legal Government. It is what I choose to recommend at this time, when I am sensible, that all opposition to it is become vain and useless, and can only end unfortunately for those, who shall persist in struggling against it. I am persuaded, that, during my absence, every one of you will take particular care to preserve the peace in your several Counties; and that I shall find you at my return in such a state of tranquillity, as will shew mankind how firmly my Government is established, which I chiefly desire, because I think the security and preservation of my people, and of this happy constitution, depends entirely upon it."

After this speech the Parliament was prorogued to the 28th of July.

Before the proceedings of the South-Sea Company are related, it will be proper to give some account of the foreign affairs during this Session.

Particular Alliance with Sweden.

The Negotiations with Sweden, Prussia, and Denmark were far advanced, when the King left Germany to return to England. Soon after his arrival, he received an account of the conclusion of his treaty of Alliance offensive and defensive with Sweden. The Lord Carteret, assisted by the French Minister, had laboured with such application, that the treaty was finished and signed at Stockholm on the 20th of January. It contained one and twenty articles, several of which were expressly against the Czar.

The Peace and Alliance were to be perpetual and universal. The contracting powers were not only not to injure, but to procure to each other all kinds of advantages.

They were obliged to inform each other of every thing they should discover, that might injure or disturb them, and to assist each other with advice and forces against all enemies; and not to give protection, much less advice or support to rebellious subjects, nor to permit them to continue in their Dominions; and those were to be esteemed Rebels, whom one of the contracting powers should declare to the other to be so.

In case Sweden should be attacked in any part of its Dominions, in its rights and privileges, in its navigation or commerce, Great Britain was to furnish that Kingdom with an aid of six thousand foot, who were to be sent four months after the demand should be made, and to that place which should be appointed. The disposition of the enemy to peace, the good offices, that should be employed to produce that disposition, were not to prevent the sending of that aid. The power, who was to lend the troops, was obliged to pay and maintain them; but the other was to take care, that in his Dominions they should be furnished with every thing necessary, at the same price with his own troops.

The contracting powers were allowed to demand the aid, in whole or in part; to demand ships, provisions, and ammunition for the surplus of the money; and it was settled, that a thousand men a month should be valued at four thousand Rix-dollars. These troops and their Commanders were to be subject, with respect to all the operations of the war, to the power, to whose assistance they came; and the ships were to bear his colours.

If this number of troops was not sufficient for the pressing occasions, a more considerable aid was to be sent. And as Sweden (says the Treaty) is now in these unhappy circumstances, with regard to the Czar of Muscovy, whom many fruitless attempts have been made to induce to a peace, Great-Britain, conformably to its engagements in the treaty of 1700, which is renewed by the present, obliges herself to send a strong Squadron in the spring, to the assistance of his Swedish Majesty, to act in concert against the Czar, in order to oblige him to desist from his invasions, and to consent to the just and reasonable conditions of peace, which have been offered him.

This was the main article of the treaty; in order to obtain assistance against that formidable enemy, Sweden had resigned to the Elector of Hanover the Duchies of Bremen and Verden; and, in order to be revenged for the Czar's intrigues, the King of Great-Britain renewed the ancient treaties, and entered into new engagements with the Crown of Sweden.

The other articles related to commerce, the particulars of which were to be regulated afterwards, for the contracting parties were desirous to put an immediate stop to the conquests of the Muscovites, and oppose the execution of their designs. The succours, that were to be sent, did not amount to a declaration of war, nor hinder a communication with the Prince, against whom they were sent, provided however it was not prejudicial to the party assisted. And therefore it was not permitted to furnish the Czar with any thing, that served directly for attack or defence, as powder, artillery, or ammunition; and their subjects were likewise forbid to serve him as soldiers or sailors.

If the succours caused an open war, it was to be carried on in concert, no proposition of peace or truce, or any accommodation and convention whatever, was to be hearkened to but by mutual consent. If one of the contracting powers was engaged in war, he was dispensed with sending the stipulated succours, and had even a right to recall his troops three months after having given notice of the necessity he was under of so doing. But the King of Great Britain (adds the treaty) as a strong mark of his friendship, promises, that the war, which he is now engaged in with Spain, shall not prevent his sending the next spring a Squadron sufficient to stop the progress of the Czar, and induce him to peace, nor from furnishing the Supplies of money, as long as the war with Denmark shall last.

These obligations were reciprocal between the two Crowns. Sweden, in particular, was obliged not to enter into any engagement with Spain, which might be contrary to the views of supporting the Emperor against that Kingdom. She undertook likewise to guaranty and maintain the Succession of Great-Britain in the House of Hanover, and not to give any protection, refuge, aid, or counsel, in any manner whatever, to the person, who, in the life-time of King James II, styled himself Prince of Wales, and who since that King's decease had assumed the name of James III. King of Great-Britain.

Both Crowns had it so much at heart to limit the pretensions and undertakings of the Czar, and

1720. and to divest him by a peace, or by arms, of part of his conquests, that the following words were inserted in the XVIIth article. 'As it is of the utmost concern to the Protestant Religion, to the commerce of the Kingdoms of Great-Britain and Sweden, and even to the repose of Christendom, that the Czar should not gain the ascendancy in the Baltic; if therefore that Prince shall refuse to make peace with Sweden, and to restore to that Crown the Cities and Provinces necessary to establish her security and the liberty of commerce, as they were before the present war; his Britannic Majesty engages, not only to furnish Sweden with the succours, which he is obliged to by the present treaty, but likewise to use all his endeavours and interest with his other Allies, that, by their assistance, they may enable Sweden to repel the Czar, and force him to agree to a peace upon such conditions, as may secure that Kingdom from insults, and establish the liberty of commerce in the Baltic.'

Alliance with Prussia.

The same day, by the mediation of France and England, the peace was likewise signed between Sweden and Prussia. This treaty was the work of King George, who had laid the foundations of it in the preliminary treaty of the 25th of August, the last year. Sweden, by the advice and instances of the Mediators, gave up to the King of Prussia the City of Stetin, the district between the rivers of Oder and Pegnitz, with the Isles of Wollin and Usedom, to possess and enjoy them for ever, with all their rights, and in the same manner, as the whole had been ceded and transferred by the Emperor and Empire to the Crown of Sweden, by the tenth article of the peace of Westphalia, in the year 1648, except the right of sitting and voting in the Diet of the Empire, and in those of the Circle.

The King of Prussia obliges himself, on his part, to preserve to the inhabitants their liberties, rights; and privileges, as they now enjoy them, as likewise the free exercise of their Religion, according to the Confession of Augsburg. He likewise undertook to pay the debts, and to discharge the obligations due from the Crown of Sweden, to the Inhabitants and Communities of these Countries. He also promised not to assist or succour, in any manner, nor under any pretence, the Czar, in his war against Sweden, to join with the King of Great-Britain, to engage the King of Denmark to make peace, and to restore that part of Pomerania he had seized.

Lastly, the King of Prussia engaged to pay two millions of Rix-dollars of Leipsic money of 1690. This was almost purchasing what was ceded to him; but that Prince abounded in ready money, and he could not better employ it, than in aggrandizing himself. Besides, Sweden, exhausted by a war, which had lasted twenty years, and was not yet ended, was very glad Prussia would purchase what she was not in a condition to retake.

Thus King George, in concert with the Regent of France, disposed of the affairs of Europe at pleasure, and obliged the foreign Princes to submit to his determinations. Spain, after having made several fruitless attempts to oppose him, was obliged to submit to the strict execution of the treaty of London of 1718: The Emperor was put in possession of Sicily; the Duke of Savoy had Sardinia; Gibraltar and Port-Mahon remained in the hands of Great-Britain; the investiture of the States of Tuscany, Parma, and Placentia was not given: the Emperor continued to take the title of King of Spain, and to act as such; the only favour, allowed that Crown, was the restoration of two or three places, taken by France; but the Emperor still delayed the execution of his treaty with Spain, of which the Mediators took little notice.

The Czar was the only Prince, who would not comply: Instead of submitting he continued the war a year or two longer, and made peace without any Mediator. Whatever reproaches might be cast upon him, he loudly complained of the Elector of Hanover and King of Great-Britain, alledging, that King George in both qualities had failed in his engagements. His Resident at London presented a long memorial, in which he represented, that the particular engagements, which the King had entered into the last summer with the Queen of Sweden, and his Negotiations with the Kings of Poland, Prussia, and Denmark, in order to detach them from their Alliance with his Czarist Majesty, were inconsistent with the obligations, he had entered into as Elector of Brunswick, never to treat with Sweden without the participation of the Czar, to use all possible means to procure him the cession of Ingria, Carélia, Esthonia, and Revel, and not to oppose in any manner the other pretensions, he might form; obligations (added the memorial) contracted likewise as King of Great-Britain. Afterwards, by way of reproach, it was remarked, that the acquisition of the Duchies of Bremen and Verden was owing to the earnest solicitations of the Czar with the King of Denmark; that his Czarist Majesty had moreover offered a treaty of defensive Alliance (like that of 1716) to maintain the Succession of the Crown of Great-Britain in the Protestant line: That the rest of the Czar's conduct had been answerable to these his proceedings: That notwithstanding these advances so often repeated, and ever neglected, not to say despised, no endeavours had been omitted to stir up enemies against the Czar, and to render him odious to the English, by making them believe, he intended to place the Pretender upon the Throne: That every thing had been done to embroil him with the Court of Vienna: That no explanation or accommodation was ever listened to; and all his proposals for a reconciliation remained without any answer: That a strong squadron had been sent to the Baltic: That, warned by what had happened on other occasions, he had desired to be informed of the design of that squadron. That his desire had been haughtily received: That the squadron, at the end of the campaign, had joined the Swedish fleet: And, to compleat all these grievances, letters had been wrote to him in very imperious terms, and such as ought not to be used to a Sovereign.

Your Majesty, said the Memorial, who knows so well what is due to Sovereigns, when they are to be treated with, may judge by all that has passed on this occasion, whether the manner, in which your Ministers proceeded in offering the Czar your mediation, was agreeable to the friendship, which has subsisted at all times between the Crowns of Russia and Great-Britain; and whether a mediation offered with circumstances so little equitable can be considered as impartial. To tell a Sovereign, in an imperious and threatening manner (as your Ministers did) that he must put an end to the war, in order to obtain a reasonable peace; and to propose to him

1720.

The Czar's Memorial.

him the mediation of a power, at the same time that he is told, that power is in league with his enemy, this is not endeavouring to induce him to peace, but rather seeking pretences for a rupture.

The memorial concluded with demanding a positive answer, in order to know what was to be expected on the part of his British Majesty.

This memorial, though seemingly expressed in a plain manner, was very artfully worded. Accordingly it was answered very carefully by the Ministry of Hanover, and of Great-Britain.

The answer is as follows.

The Hanoverian Ministry said, it was the Czar, who had violated the treaty of 1715, by coming with an army to settle in the Empire, and by seizing the Provinces contiguous to Hanover. That the least, that could be done in those circumstances, was to shew, these proceedings were not approved of: That the instances, which had been made for the withdrawing this army, were indispensable, considering the rank the Elector of Hanover bore in the Empire: That, however, this was the ground of the Czar's resentments, of which he had given many proofs by his correspondence with the enemies of King George, and by his endeavours to deprive him of his friends. The particulars were then given of the Czar's intrigues with Baron Gortz, with the Pretender's emissaries, and with the Court of Madrid, and especially of the projects formed with the King of Sweden to carry the war into the Empire, and to assist that Crown to recover the Dominions in Germany, which had been taken from him. That, besides these designs, an Invasion of Scotland had also been concerted, and the Czar was upbraided with having continually endeavoured to deceive and amuse his Allies.

It is therefore evident (concludes the answer) if the Czar has been prevented by a treaty with Sweden, he gave just cause for it, by his proceedings, as he had long been treating for a separate peace, and was upon the point of reducing Sweden, and carrying the war into the bowels of the Empire.

Earl Stanhope answered the complaints, which related to the King of Great-Britain. He represented the extravagant conditions, upon which the Czar had offered to enter into a strict Alliance with Great-Britain. 'He required, said the Earl, that his conquests upon Sweden should be guaranteed to him; that he should be assisted with an English fleet, and that the fleet should be under his command, which would have made all accommodation with Sweden wholly impossible, and incensed those powers, who were concerned in the preservation of that Crown, and whose friendship was so necessary to accomplish the projects formed for the tranquillity of Europe.'

The Earl then observes, that the Czar's complaints were intended only to cause his own designs to be overlooked: 'For if it be true (says the Earl) that the Czar, intimate Ally of the King of Denmark, had meditated no less than to make himself master of the Sound, and of Copenhagen (instead of making the descent on Seben, with which the public had been amused for some months) it is natural to endeavour to put the change upon the public in that particular, and to wipe off the impressions of such notions, by recriminations destitute of all manner of ground: And, if the Czar had really such designs in view, it is probable, that nothing kept him from putting them in execution, but the just apprehension that the same should be opposed by his Majesty's fleet; which would infallibly have happened in such a case. And may not the Czar's resentment of the miscarriage of so great a project, through the apprehension of the British fleet, be the cause of his great estrangement from his Majesty since that time; from whence one may date the beginning of the animosity he has shewn against his Majesty on so many occasions.

This was plainly perceived some time after, when, by the letters of Baron Gortz and Count Gyllenburg, it was discovered, that the Czar was so offended with his Majesty, that he entertained serious thoughts of making a separate peace with the King of Sweden, and assisting the Pretender. And indeed, whatever assurances have been given to the contrary, the Czar's conduct seems to have been intirely agreeable to that plan. The Negotiations of the Russian Ministry with the Pretender's Agents are well known (1). All the world has seen the great number of English Rebels, to whom the Czar has given all manner of protection and encouragement. It is known, that the Conferences at Aland, which were begun without his Majesty's participation, were the result of an interview at Loe with Baron Gortz, in August 1717. That Minister's papers have shewn, that the Invasion of Scotland was to have immediately followed the conquest of Norway; it is therefore no wonder, the Czar was not sollicitous either to prevent that conquest, or to assist the King of Denmark on so pressing an occasion. In fine, information has been had of the propositions the Czar has made, more than once, to the Court of Spain, to engage them in an offensive Alliance against England, in favour of the Pretender.

It was shewn likewise, that the Czar had persisted in his designs since the death of the King of Sweden: That he had endeavoured to engage Queen Ulrica in the schemes of her Predecessor: And, not succeeding by his insinuations, he had attempted to constrain her by force, and by almost unparalleled insults. 'But, notwithstanding all this, his Majesty (continues the Earl) persists in the same sentiments of moderation towards the Czar, and renews the offer of his mediation. Nothing is more conformable to the interest of that Prince, since it is intended to procure him a peace, which will secure him a considerable part of his conquests. It is hoped, that so wise a Prince as the Czar will not only be inclined, for the general good of peace, to moderate

(1) People (says the Memorial) are not ignorant of the Negotiations of one Jerneghan, and of Sir Hugh Paterson, brother-in-law to the late Lord Marr, with the Russian Minister, during the Czar's stay in Holland. Intelligence has been had of the same Minister's intrigues, both with the late Duke of Ormond, during the stay he made incognito at Mittau, and with Sir Henry Sterling and the said Jerneghan at Petersburg, as well as of the correspondence established, by means of this last person, between the Czar and the Court of Spain.

(1) The

1720. derate his pretensions, but likewise acknowledge, that it is more consistent with prudence to obtain by good treaties, and the consent of other great powers, such considerable territories as may be yielded to him by the Crown of Sweden, than to expose the fruits of his successes to the events of a war, which he will be obliged to support alone. Sweden neither ought nor can give up to him Revel. If the Czar, after such offers, persists in his unwillingness to restore Revel, he will only alarm all the other powers, and unite the most of them against him.

The sincere desire the King has to restore a general peace, and his zeal to be reconciled with the Czar for that purpose, incline his Majesty to give him, on this occasion, the advice of a friend, and to exhort him seriously to consider it.

But if, contrary to all expectation, the King's good intentions should prove fruitless by the Czar's refusal; and if his Majesty, by virtue of his engagements with Sweden (which he is fully resolved to maintain) should be obliged to take measures disagreeable to Russia, he will, however, have the consolation of having neglected nothing to prevent the fatal consequences, which may result from it.

These memorials and answers produced no reconciliation between the two Princes. The answers, however, made an impression upon the Nation in favour of the King. And, indeed, it must be confessed, that it was sound policy to join with Sweden against the Czar, and by that means make amends for uniting with that Prince to strip a Crown, which Religion and Commerce ought always to endear to Great-Britain.

Reconciliation in the Royal Family.

During the Session of Parliament, the reconciliation of the Royal Family was effected chiefly by the endeavours of the Duke of Devonshire and Mr Walpole. They had several Conferences, for that purpose, with the Ministers, with such success, that, on the 23d of April, the Lord Lumley, Gentleman of the Prince of Wales's Bed-Chamber, waited on the King, to know his pleasure, when the Prince should attend him. He was answered, immediately; and Mr Secretary Craggs having accompanied the Lord Lumley to Leicester-Fields, to acquaint the Prince with it, he immediately went to St James's House, and was half an hour in private Conference with the King. Having made his submission in the manner agreed on, he went to see his eldest Daughter, the Princess Anne, who, five days before, was taken ill of the small-pox. The Prince, at his return to Leicester-House, was, by the King's command, attended by a party of the Yeomen of the Guard, and of the Horse-guards, and the Foot-guards began also to mount the guard at his house. In the evening, the Princess of Wales had an interview with the King; and, the next morning, the Duke of Devonshire, Earl Cowper, the Lord Townshend, Mr Walpole, Mr Methuen, and Mr Pulteney, were admitted to kiss the King's hand; and the Duke of Devonshire carried the Sword of State before the King to the Royal Chapel, the Prince of Wales accompanying them thither; and, at their return, the Officers and Retainers to the two Courts congratulated each other upon this reconciliation. The next day, the Great Officers and Ministers of State, and of the Household, and other persons of distinction, waited on the Prince of Wales, who, in the evening, went with his whole Court to the apartments at St James's, and had a long Conference with the King. Most of the foreign Ministers had also, on this occasion, a private audience of the Prince of Wales.

Upon the rising of the Parliament, the King held a great Council, in which he declared his design of visiting his Dominions in Germany, and named the Lords Justices during his absence. They were the same with those of the last year; to whom were added the Lord Townshend (who was declared likewise Lord President of the Council) and the Duke of Devonshire. The King, in the same Council, conferred also several honours and preferments: The Earl of Dorset was created Duke of Dorset; the Earl of Bridgewater, Duke of Bridgewater; the Lord Viscount Castleton, Earl Castleton in the County of York; Hugh Boscawen, Baron Boscawen, and Viscount Falmouth in the County of Cornwall; John Wallop, Baron Wallop of Wallop, and Viscount Lymington in the County of Southampton (1).

On the 15th of June, the King embarked at The King Greenwich on board the Carolina Yacht, and landed, the next morning, at Helvoet-Sluice, goes to Hanover. from whence he proceeded to Hanover. At his arrival in Germany, he found the peace concluded between Sweden and Denmark. This peace was of great importance; for the Czar was left alone, and had reason to fear (as he had been threatened) that all his Allies, who had been drawn off from him one after another, would unite against him, to reduce him within his antient bounds.

The treaty was signed at Frederickshadt, on the 22d of June. The Preamble did great honour to King George; setting forth, that it was resolved to put an end to the cruel war, which had lasted ten years, by the pressing instances of the King of Great-Britain, who has taken all imaginable Negotiations with Denmark.

(1) The rest of the honours and preferments were: Matthew Ducie Morton, Baron Ducie de Morton, in the County of Stafford; John Barrington of Becket, in the County of Berks, Baron Barrington of Newcastle, and Viscount Barrington of Ardglass, in the Kingdom of Ireland; Thomas Gage, Baron Castlebarr, and Viscount Gage of Castle-Island, in the Kingdom of Ireland; William Fane, Baron Fane of Duncannon in the County of Tyrone, and Viscount Fane; Sir Marcus Beresford, Baron Beresford of Beresford in the County of Cavan, and Viscount Tyrone in the Kingdom of Ireland; John Blunt of the City of London, Sir William Chapman, and Thomas Cadell of Kensington were created Baronets. The Duke of Kingston was appointed Lord Privy-Seal; the Duke of Grafton, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; Mr Robert Walpole, Paymaster-General of the King's forces; Numb. XCVII. Vol. IV.

Mr Methuen, Comptroller of the Household; the Duke of Queensberry and the Earl of Harold, Gentlemen of the Bed-Chamber; the Earl of Sunderland, John Aylmer, George Baillie, Sir Charles Turner, and Richard Edgcumbe, Commissioners of the Treasury; the Earl of Westmorland, John Cretwynd, Sir Charles Cook, Paul Dumonique, Martin Bladen, and John Albe, Commissioners of Trade and Plantations; Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Groom of his Majesty's Bed-Chamber; Sir David Dalrymple, Auditor of the Exchequer in Scotland; Edward Elliot, Commissioner of the Excise; Henry Cartwright, Commissioner of the Victualling-Office; Cbr. Wubers, Surveyor-General of his Majesty's Woods; Colonel Charles Churchill, Governor of Chelsea-Hospital; the Lord Glenorchy, Ambassador to the King of Denmark; and Mr Melisworth, Envoy to the Court of Turin.

1720. imaginable pains to reconcile the parties, and has engaged them to consent to a suspension of arms, the more easily to come at a peace, for which his Majesty has offered them his mediation, which they have accepted. By this treaty, every thing, that had passed during the war, was to be buried in eternal oblivion; liberty of commerce was entirely restored; both sides renounced in the strongest manner, all Treaties, Agreements, and Alliances made with other powers, as far as they should be contrary to the present treaty of peace, and, for the future, neither party should enter into any Treaty or Alliance, which might be prejudicial or inconvenient to the other.

As the Czar and his pretensions were chiefly aimed at in these Negotiations, it was required of the King of Denmark, that he should, in the most exprets terms, oblige himself not to assist the Czar, during the war, under any pretence whatever, either with advice or forces: 'And because (added the Treaty) it is the interest, not only of the King and Crown of Denmark, but also of other Nations, that this war should end in such a manner, that the liberty of commerce should be restored in the Baltic, his Danish Majesty promises not to suffer any Muscovite ships in any of his ports in the sea of Denmark or Norway; nor will permit them to bring in thither prizes of any Nation whatever; and if it shall happen, that these prizes should enter into his ports, he will restore them to the Owners.'

The King of Denmark was put in possession of Sleswick, and resolved to keep it. It was necessary likewise, in order to engage him to peace, that the King of Great-Britain should guaranty to him the peaceable possession of it, which had been done the 30th of October the last year. On the other hand, Sweden, indifferently engaged as she was with the Duke of Holstein, could not, with any decency, give up that Duchy to the King of Denmark. But the following expedient was made use of to surmount these difficulties: 'Foreseeing that the Duke of Sleswick Holstein has been concerned in the war of the North; and as the first Alliance, between that Prince and the Crown of Sweden, might be an obstacle to peace with regard to the Duchy of Sleswick; his Swedish Majesty declares for Himself and the Crown of Sweden, and promises not to oppose, either directly or indirectly, what may have been stipulated concerning that Duchy, in favour of the King of Denmark, by the mediating powers, which have co-operated in the present treaty; and Sweden will not give any assistance to the Duke of Holstein against Denmark, which may be prejudicial to this stipulation.'

The King of Prussia, in making peace with Sweden, had been enjoined by the Mediators to purchase the Countries, he had taken from that Crown. The King of Denmark, on the contrary, was obliged to sell his conquests to Sweden, or, what amounted to the same, to give them up for an equivalent.

Thus the King of Denmark consented to restore Upper Pomerania, the Isle of Rugen, the towns and fortresses of Norstrand and Svalundt, and all the other Islands and Dependencies without any exception, which had been taken from Sweden, in the state there were in at the publication of the suspension of arms, with the artillery and magazines, which were there, when Denmark seized them. He likewise gave up the City of Wisnar, with its territory and dependences.

In return for these restitutions, Sweden consented, that, for the future, and from the day of the ratification of the treaty, there should be no longer any difference of Nation in the Sound and the two Belts; so that the Kingdom of Sweden renounced the exemption from toll in those parts, and consented, that her subjects should pay them to Denmark for their ships and cargoes, upon the same foot, as the subjects of Great-Britain and the United-Provinces paid them.

Moreover, Sweden, to give a still more sensible proof of her desire for peace, bound herself to pay to the King of Denmark six hundred thousand Rix-dollars at one payment. This sum was to be put into the hands of the Mediators, not to be delivered till after the stipulated cessions were executed by the Court of Denmark. It was added, in exprets terms, that all the pretensions of Denmark upon Sweden should be extinct, by the obligation to the payment of toll in the Sound and Belts, and by the payment of the six hundred thousand Rix-dollars. The other articles contained various regulations, all proper to strengthen the peace, and prevent, as far as possible, all occasions of complaint.

The Mediators took great pains to prevail with the King of Denmark to grant Sweden such moderate terms. Besides the ancient and natural antipathy between the two Nations, which was to be surmounted, the conquests, which had cost him so much, and were so very convenient for him, were to be renounced. Undoubtedly, the apprehension of seeing the forces of all the Allies of King George united against him made a greater impression upon him, than the hopes of assistance from the Czar, who would not hear either of peace or any mediation from the King of Great-Britain.

Admiral Norris had failed in April with a Squadron strong enough to give weight to the King's mediation. When he arrived at Copenhagen, he wrote to Prince Dolgorouki, the Czar's Ambassador at the Court of Denmark, to notify to him, 'That the King, his Master, had ordered him to come into those seas with a Squadron of his ships, to procure a just and reasonable peace between the Crowns of Sweden and Russia; and that his Majesty having at heart the welfare of his subjects, as also the concerns of such Nations, as live in amity with him, ardently wishes, that this affair may be accomplished in a Christian, effectual, and speedy manner: That, for this end, he was commanded to notify to the Ministers, Generals, and Admirals of the Czar, the repeated offers of his Britannic Majesty's mediation of peace between the two Crowns; and that his Czarian Majesty, duly considering the present state of affairs, would listen to reasonable conditions for an accommodation; and left, for want of full powers, this affair should be obstructed, the same were sent to his Envoy at Stockholm, and likewise to himself as his Admiral, to the end, jointly or separately, they may act in the quality of his Majesty's Plenipotentiaries, in order to effect a peace between the two Crowns, by way of mediation.' Prince Dolgorouki returned for answer, 'That the Czar had nothing more at heart than peace and tranquillity, of which he had given clear proofs during 1720. during the war; but, because Sweden had never expressed the like sentiments, the continuation of the war could be imputed only to that Crown. That, as for the expressions in the Admiral's letter about the means of a peace, he could return no answer to that; and, in case his Britannic Majesty had any proposals to make to the Czar, he hoped the Admiral would excuse him from doing it, since it could be done a more compendious way.

Upon this answer the English fleet joined that of Sweden, but however as auxiliaries only. The Russian fleet had prevented them, and landed near Uma five thousand men, who met with no resistance; they set fire to that town, and to all the villages in the neighbourhood. As the inhabitants did not expect such an attack, all their effects were seized by the Muscovites, who without any loss returned to their ships. The combined fleets did not arrive till the enemy had reached the port of Revel, where it was not judged proper to attack them, but rather to make a diversion in Finland. Nothing material was done, and some Swedish ships, having imprudently engaged a superior force without being timely supported, were very near being destroyed.

The Czar was not so easy to be reduced as Spain had been. Poland, the only Country contiguous to his Dominions, did not think fit to attack him: And it was a great point gained, that King Augustus, notwithstanding his obligations to the Czar, had consented to a separate peace with Sweden.

Though King George could not at this time succeed in making peace between Russia and Sweden, he had however at the end of the campaign some hopes of it. Ulrica, who had been placed on the Throne of Sweden in the room of her brother Charles XII. and had married the head of the family of Hesse, was extremely desirous he should be joined with her in the Administration of the regal power. To this end she writ with her own hand a letter to each of the four orders of the States, representing how necessary in the present difficult juncture, and how conducive to the public welfare, would be the assistance of his Royal Highness in the Administration of the Government, and therefore hoped the States would gratify her in conferring on him the regal dignity.

As the proposal of placing the Prince of Hesse on the Throne, jointly with the Queen, met with great opposition from the Nobles, she writ a second letter to the States, offering to resign her share of the regal power, and to be content that it should be executed by her Royal consort alone. Upon this the States unanimously elected him King (1).

The advancement of Frederick to the Throne of Sweden gave him occasion to send one of his principal Officers to notify it to the Czar, who in return sent one of his Generals to congratulate the new King. Upon this were grounded the hopes of a reconciliation. But the Russian Envoy was commissioned only to demand some passports, and propose an exchange of prisoners, and a suspension of arms during the winter. He added however, and doubtless with a view to King George, that the Czar was not so averse to peace as might be thought, and only wanted reasonable terms to be made him, for which there was no need of a Mediator.

These things, relating to the affairs of Sweden and Russia, had for the most part passed before the King's arrival in his German Dominions. All the foreign Ministers followed him to Hanover, where he did not want business or matter to exercise his talents for Negotiation, which after all are the true talents of a Sovereign. Ministers indeed generally supply what may be wanting in a Prince; but the case was otherwise with King George. He looked into every thing himself: His Ministers did nothing without him, whilst he did many things without them.

The treaties of peace to which several States had been led, and in some measure compelled, were for the most part transacted in haste. It was impossible to settle the particular interest of the contracting Powers and their Allies. These treaties, properly speaking, were only a cessation from hostilities, and an engagement to more exact and regular Negotiations. To fix and ascertain so many complicated interests, and prevent the flames of war from kindling afresh, King George and the Regent of France joined their endeavours to establish two Congresses, one at Brunswick for the affairs of the North, and the other at Cambray for the rest of Europe.

Whilst the King was employed abroad in hearing and settling the grievances and interests of the Nations and their Sovereigns, particularly those of the Protestants of Germany, the Regency were no less employed at home in curbing the excessive desire of gain, which the progress of the South-Sea Company had raised, and in curing the despair which attended its fall. As these are the most considerable events of this reign, and such as will never be forgot by Great-Britain, they deserve to be related at large.

The South-Sea scheme seems to be taken from that of the Mississippi Company in France, formed by Mr Law the last year. Mr Law was born at Edinburgh, and had proposed to the Parliament of Scotland, in 1705, a scheme for supplying the Nation with money, which, though favoured by the Duke of Argyle, then High-Commissioner, and several Members of Parliament, was however rejected. Upon this he applied himself

1720.

Progress of the South-Sea affairs.

Account of Mr Law and the Mississippi Company.

(1) The act of election, which was read to the King, was to this effect: That the King is elected according to the Laws and Constitutions of the Kingdom, not out of any duty, but by the free-will of all the Senators and the States, who do declare the Kingdom hereditary in the male issue his Majesty shall have by the Queen, and who, upon the decease of their Father, shall take upon themselves the Administration, without any farther election; but, in case both their Majesties shall die without male-issue, that all the States shall proceed to a new election, without any previous summons, thirty days after the decease of the Survivor.

That they think themselves well assured his Majesty will never suffer the Sovereignty (or absolute Power) which always proved so pernicious to the Kingdom, to be introduced again; but that he, as well as the heirs of his body, will govern the Kingdom according to the Laws and Constitutions, maintain it in the Christian Evangelical Religion, and let the subjects have the unprejudiced enjoyment of all their privileges, according to the assurance given in writing by his Majesty; in which case they will always behave themselves as faithful and true liege subjects to his Majesty. Hist. Reg.

(1) The

1720.

Bank
erected in France.

himself to the Lord-Treasurer Horley, and transmitted to him another proposal for the increase of trade and credit, but meeting with no encouragement, and not being able to get his pardon, for having killed Beau Wilson in a duel, he was compelled to live abroad, where, after undergoing great variety of persecutions from his enemies, he settled in France. During his stay in England he had informed himself fully of the management of the Bank and East-India Company, and, in order to settle the fluctuating manner of things in France, he proposed to the Regent to lay the foundation of credit by erecting a Bank. The Regent approved of the scheme, the Bank was established: The King began the subscription, the Regent followed, with innumerable others. This project met with such success, that, in three subscriptions, more than all the money in France was said to be subscribed to it: For, by the end of the year 1719, bills were given out for 640 millions of livres, which exceeds the value of the bills circulated by all the Banks in Europe. There was added a circulation of 360 millions, and the whole amounted to 1000 millions of livres, making above 38 millions of pounds sterling at the Exchange then current (1).

A Bank being thus erected, and credit established, Mr Law formed the project of the Mississippi or India Company, who were to have the sole privilege of the trade to Louisiana, or the Country of Mississippi, so called from a river of that name, which runs through it from North to South. Pursuant to this scheme, a subscription of stock was opened, and all were admitted to subscribe. The sum first proposed to be raised was only 60 millions of livres, to be subscribed in State-bills. These State-bills or public securities were then very low, being from 57 to 63 per cent. discount; but, as they were received at par without any loss in the Company's stock, the first subscription of 60 millions was soon filled. The capital stock was then enlarged to 100 millions, and the Actions or Shares rose to 120. After this, a new creation of Actions was made for 25 millions more, which were delivered out at 110, and soon rose to 200. As people appeared very eager to lay out their money this way, an arrêt of the Council of State was published, for circulating Bank-bills to the value of 25 millions, in the Mississippi Company, upon which the Actions, about Midsummer 1719, run up 560. The Company, finding their credit so well established, proposed to lend the King 50 millions, for which there was a new creation of Actions for 25 millions, upon the foot of 200 per Action. About the end of August, the Company proposed to the King another loan of 1200 millions, at three per cent. As the Actions were now advanced to 1200, the Company, in order to raise the loan, opened their books for 500 millions, by the sale of 50 millions of Actions, at the rate of a 1000 per Action. The subscriptions were filled in a few hours; and, in less than three weeks, two subscriptions more, for the like sum of 500 millions each, were opened with the same success. The first payment of these three subscriptions rose so considerably, as to be sold at 300 per cent. profit. From that time the Actions rose to 2050 (2).

The Mississippi stock was in its greatest prosperity during the months of November and December 1719, and, in the January following, Mr Law, who was become the greatest subject in Europe, was made Comptroller-General of the Finances of France. From that time the stock began to decline, and, by the end of May, all things fell into confusion at Paris, occasioned by an arrêt to reduce Bank notes and Actions of the Company, Mr Law resigned his place, and had two Swiss Officers given him for his guard. By this project the State indeed gained immensely, 1500 millions of the King's debts being transferred from him to the people, who were content to discharge the public, and owe the money to one another. Consequently, when the fall came (except a few great fortunes that were made) there was almost a general ruin through all France.

This revolution of the Mississippi stock at Paris was not regarded in England, where the like infatuation universally prevailed, and was followed by the like consequences.

When the bill passed in favour of the South-Sea Company, it was expected, the stock would have greatly advanced, but the contrary happened; for, the day after, it fell from 310 to 290. In order to raise it, a rumour was spread, that Earl Stanhope had received overtures in France to exchange Gibraltar and Port Mahon for some places in Peru, for the security and enlargement of the English trade in the South-Sea; which had its effect in Exchange-Alley. For, on the 12th of April, five days after the Royal assent was given to the bill, the Directors opened their books for a subscription of a million, at the rate of 300 l. for every 100 l. capital. Such was the concurrence of persons of all ranks, that this first subscription was found to amount to above two millions of original stock. It was to be paid at five payments of 60 l. each, for one share of 100 l. In a few days the stock advanced to 340, and the subscriptions were sold for double the price of the first payment. To raise the stock still higher, on the 21st of April it was declared in a General Court, That the Midsummer dividend should be ten per cent. and all subscriptions should be intitled to the same. Those resolutions answering the end designed, the Directors, to improve the infatuation of the monied men, opened their books for a second subscription of one million, at 400 l. per cent. In a few hours, no less than a million and half was subscribed at that rate; and so great was

(1) The French Crown, of five livres and two fifths was worth 4 s. and 1 d. $\frac{1}{2}$ English money.

(2) Thus the capital stock consisted of these seven subscriptions:

60 millions of the first subscription.
40 of the second.
25 of the third.
25 of the fourth.
50 of the fifth.

50 of the sixth.
50 of the seventh.
300 millions.

The total of the Actions, which, when they sold at 2050, the total amounted to above 6000 millions of livres, or 228 millions sterling.

(1) How

1720. was the confidence which was placed in the Directors, that many deposited in their hands their annuities, without knowing what price the Company would allow for them.

On the 19th of May, the Directors thought fit to settle the terms and prices for the long and short annuities, which had been subscribed; and, the stock being that day 375*l. per cent.*, it was resolved to allow, for every 100*l. per annum* of the long annuities, 700*l.* in the capital stock (which at 375*l. per cent.* amounted to 2625*l.*) and 575*l.* in bonds and money: So the total for each 100*l. per annum* amounted to 3200*l.* or thirty-two years purchase. For every 90*l. per annum* of the short annuities, they agreed to allow 350*l.* in the capital stock, which, at 375*l. per cent.*, amounted to 1312*l. 10s.* and in bonds and money 217*l. 10s.* which together made 1530*l.* or seventeen years purchase.

These offers occasioned at first great murmurings among the Annuityists, who, having expected ten years, found they were to have, but eight years and a quarter's purchase. Upon which some withdrew their orders, and others resolved not to subscribe. But, the South-Sea Managers having found means to raise their stock to 500*l. per cent.*, most of the Annuityists appeared easy; so that it was computed, that, by the 29th of May, almost two thirds of the annuities were subscribed.

The arts of the Stock-Jobbers drew a great concourse of persons of all ranks into Exchange-Alley, by whose unexampled eagerness of laying out their money in a fund, that promised so plentiful a return of gain, that stock, which about the latter end of May, was at about 550, rose on a sudden so prodigiously, that on Thursday, the 2d of June, it came up to 890. Many cautious persons being willing to take this opportunity to secure their great profits, there appeared the next day so many Sellers in the Alley, that, by two or three o'clock in the afternoon, the stock fell to 640; at which the chief Directors of the South-Sea Company being alarmed, set their agents to work, by whose artful management the stock was the same evening advanced to 750; about which price, with some small fluctuation, it continued till the closing of the Company's books on the 22d of June. In the mean time, the South-Sea stock suffered a considerable shock. For many persons, who were to follow the King to Hanover, and others, who found a difficulty of making their second payment to the first subscription, were both equally desirous to turn their stock into money; so that, for some days, the number of Sellers exceeded that of Buyers. Wherefore the Managers of the Company formed two expedients: The first was their lending out money, or notes, to the Proprietors of their capital stock, to the sum of 400*l.* upon 100*l.* original stock (which shewed it to be worth above that sum) at the rate of 4*l. per cent. per ann.* The second was their giving public notice, 'That all persons possessed of any of the Company's bonds, which fell due on the 25th of June, might then have their money for the same of the Company's Cashier: And that the Bonds would be taken in on the second payment for the 2,250,000*l. South-Sea* stock, sold by subscription after the rate of 300*l.* for each 100*l.* original stock.' By these means money being plenty, and the Stock-Jobbers in good humour, the South-Sea Company opened their books for a third subscription, at the rate of 1000*l.* for each 100*l.* capital stock, to be paid in ten equal payments, one in hand, and the other nine half-yearly. But, some men in power having taken this opportunity to oblige their friends, their lists were so full, that the Directors enlarged it to four millions capital stock, which at that price amounted to forty millions sterling. And, what is more strange, these last subscriptions were, before the end of June, sold at above 200*l. per cent.* advance, and, after the closing of the transfer-books, the original stock rose to above 1000*l. per cent.* At the same time the first subscriptions were at 560, and the second at 610*per cent.* advance, the Bank at 260, and East-India 440.

The whole Nation was become Stock-Jobbers. The South-Sea was like an infectious distemper, which spread itself in an astonishing manner. Every evening produced new projects, which were justly called Bubbles, and new Companies appeared every day. These were countenanced by the greatest of the Nobility. The Prince of Wales was Governor of the Welsh Copper; the Duke of Chandos, of York-Buildings; the Duke of Bridgewater formed a Company for building houses in London and Westminster. There were near a hundred different kinds of projects or bubbles; and it was computed, that above a million and a half was won and lost by these unwarrantable practices, by which many unwary persons were defrauded and impoverished, and a few crafty men enriched, to the great detriment of domestic trade. The King had, the same day the Parliament rose, published a proclamation, declaring all these unlawful projects should be deemed as common nuisances, and prosecuted as such; with the penalty of 500*l.* for any Broker to buy or sell any shares in them. Notwithstanding this proclamation, several of the illegal projects were still carried on; upon which the Lords Justices, on the 12th of July, to put a stop to all further proceedings, ordered all the petitions, that had been presented for patents and charters, to be dismissed.

The several sums, intended to be raised by these projects, amounted to no less than three hundred millions sterling, a sum so immense, that it exceeds the value of all the lands in England, at the rate of twenty years purchase. However, the eagerness of getting riches, by quick and easy methods, had, at that time, so intoxicated the minds of most people of all degrees, that the most extravagant bubbles found many Subscribers: Some of whom sold their first subscriptions at a great profit, whereby the last Buyers were considerable losers (1).

The transfer-books of the South-Sea Company were shut up the whole month of July. During that time, there was no great variation, except only that the price of the capital stock decreased gradually, great advantage, but nobody to know what it is.' The Projector formed a scheme for half a million, by which every Subscriber, paying down two guineas for subscribing, 1720. gradually, from above 1000 to 930, in proportion as the third subscription at a 1000 rose to 330 advance or clear profit. In the mean time, the Directors, at a meeting on the 8th of July, resolved to open their books, for taking in subscriptions of the lottery tickets, and other short annuities, to the amount of six millions sterling: But, though they did not then think fit to declare at what rate they designed to take those effects, yet the Proprietors entirely trusted to their integrity; and readily subscribed the same on the 14th and 15th of that month. After which the books were shut up. From that time to the end of July, the stock fell gradually from about 1000 to 900, including the Midsummer dividend. In the mean time, it being confidently reported, that the capital stock was to be enlarged by a fourth subscription in money, some persons in eminent stations desired the principal Managers to put off the subscription, till the Proprietors of the remaining part of the long annuities had subscribed, since the taking in of those public debts, in order to make them redeemable, was the main view, upon which the Ministry and the Parliament thought fit to encourage the South-Sea project. Some pretend, that the men in power made this step, not only to free themselves from the importunity of many, who sued to be set down in their lists, for a share in the next subscription; but also, in order to reserve part of the to-be-increased capital stock, till a new set of Directors were chosen, who should have a share in the profits of future subscriptions, in case the humour of buying up the same at an advanced price should last so long. However that be, in a Committee of the Directors the 27th of July, it being considered, that several persons, admitted as Subscribers to the third subscription in money, had not yet made their first payment, it was resolved, that none but the Proprietors of their capital and increased stock should be admitted into the next subscription in money, at the rate of 20 per cent; so that a Proprietor of 1000*l.* capital stock should be intitled to subscribe 200*l.* In this resolution, they, who hitherto had carried on this great project with equal skill and success, had undoubtedly two things in view; first, to allay the murmurings of many of the old Proprietors, who complained, that the Directors and Great Men at Court had engrossed for themselves and their dependants most of the profits of the three first subscriptions. And, secondly, That, in case the eagerness of Buyers should abate, which was to be apprehended from the daily sinking of the price of South-Sea stock, the Company might be assured, that the new Subscribers would make the several payments, to which they should submit themselves, and for which their capital stock would be a sufficient security. On the other hand, many of the old Proprietors were so far from looking upon this resolution as a favour, that, on the contrary, they did not stick to say, 'That the Directors, having had the cream for themselves, would now give the Proprietors the fowre milk.' This complaint seemed to be the better grounded, because it was well known, that those, who had got most by the South-Sea, daily endeavoured to sell out, and secure their vast profits; and, in particular, that the principal Projector of this scheme had bought considerable estates in Norfolk and other Counties.

(1) How great the general infatuation or thirst of gain was, appears from the following instance: A proposal was offered, 'For carrying on an undertaking of No. 97. VOL. IV.

Pursuant to what had been desired, it was resolved on the 3d of August, at a Court of Directors, to receive subscriptions of all the remaining long and short annuities, lottery tickets, and other public securities, both redeemable and irredeemable. For which purpose the books were opened the next day at the South-Sea House, and continued so till the 11th of August. The day after the Directors published the terms they intended to allow to the Proprietors. For every 100*l.* a year of the long annuities, they offered 400*l.* in the capital stock, which at 800*l.* per cent. (the price then of stock, exclusive of the Midsummer dividend) amounted to 3200, and in bonds or money 400*l.* making in all 3600*l.* or 36 years purchase. For every 90*l.* a year of the short annuities they allowed 200*l.* stock, which at 800*l.* per cent. amounted to 1600*l.* or 17 years purchase, and 7 ninths. The redeemable annuities and debts (as well as those at 4 per cent. as those at 5 per cent.) were to be taken in at 105 per cent. and allowed for the same in capital stock at the rate of 800*l.* per cent. exclusive of the Midsummer dividend.

Many of the Annuityants were not satisfied with these offers, which, they said, put so great a disparity (no less than near half by half) between them and the former Subscribers; for, by the resolution of the Directors of the 19th of May, there was allowed, for every 100*l.* a year of the long annuities, 700*l.* in the capital stock, besides 10*l.* per cent. for the Midsummer dividend, and, in bonds or money, 575*l.* all which (computing the stock at 800*l.* per cent. as it was given to the present Subscribers of the like annuities) amounted to 6735*l.* whereas, by these last resolutions, there was allowed, for the same annuity, only 3600*l.* For this reason some of the last Subscribers went to the South-Sea House, in order to withdraw their effects; but they were told by the Clerks, that there was no order from the Directors for delivering them back; so the affair rested, for some time, undetermined.

The uneasiness of the Annuityants put a fresh damp upon the South-Sea stock; but what affected it more was the boldness of many persons concerned in the illegal projects, who, in open defiance to the late Acts of Parliament, to the King's Proclamation, and to the Orders and Prohibitions of the Lords Justices, carried them on. Some of these Companies, authorised either by Charters or Acts of Parliament, did considerable prejudice to the South-Sea, by endeavouring to procure subscriptions. Upon this, the principal Directors of the South-Sea applied to those at the Helm, and obtained an order against them from the Lords Justices, which was first published in the London Gazette of August the 20th, and which greatly affected the stocks of the York-Buildings Company, the Lyspring Company, the scribing, was to have 100*l.* a year for every 100*l.* so subscribed. But how this was to be done did not appear in the proposals, where it was also said, that in a month the particulars of the project should be laid open and the money subscribed was then to be paid in. As extravagant as this scheme was, the Projector in a forenoon received 1000 subscriptions, with which, amounting to 2000 guineas, he went off in the afternoon.

1720. English Copper, and the Welsh Copper and Lead, and of other illegal projects. This very much alarmed the persons concerned in these Companies, some of whom sustained considerable losses, and all of them saw their extravagant hopes and expectations entirely vanish. Upon the murmurings occasioned by their disappointment, the Lords Justices ordered the Directors of these Companies to attend them at a General Council, the 23d of August, where they condescended to tell them the reasons, that had obliged them to order a prosecution against them. The Directors both of the Royal Exchange, and of the London Assurance, attended likewise, and were cautioned to keep strictly to the limitation of their Charters, that no complaint might lie against them.

The Companies ordered to be prosecuted having recovered their fright, and consulted able Lawyers, seemed resolved to stand trial, and assert their rights of managing their own affairs as they pleased. The Welsh Copper Miners were yet more bold and refractory, for that very day (August 23.) they opened their books, and made transfers of their stock.

Before the Lords Justices had caused their order to be published, they sent a compliment to the Prince of Wales, to acquaint him, that, the Company of English Copper, of which he had been pleased to be chosen Governor, being illegal, they were obliged to involve it in the order; upon which the Prince sent a message to the Company, desiring them to choose another Governor.

All this while the South-Sea stock continued sinking; so that on the 17th of August, it fell to 830, including the Midsummer dividend; which having given the Directors no small uneasiness, some of their agents were immediately detached into Exchange-Alley, to buy a considerable quantity of stock, which thereupon rose to 880. But, the humour of selling our continuing the two following days, the stocks fell again to about 820, at which price the transfer-books were opened on the 22d of August. That day, and the next morning, there was a great croud at the South-Sea House; and the Directors observing, that great quantities of stock had been bought at a thousand, and even at higher rates, for the opening of the books, and that many persons would be obliged to sell out, in order to pay the difference, which could not fail sinking the stock yet lower; they came to a sudden and unexpected resolution to shut the transfer-books; and the next day to open other books, for taking in a money subscription of one million, to the capital stock, at the rate of 1000*l.* for every 100*l.* capital stock, to be paid in five payments, 20*l.* per cent. in hand, and the rest in four equal payments. Accordingly the subscription-books were opened the 24th of August; and there was such a croud of Subscribers, and amongst them not a few of the prime Nobility, that in less than three hours, more than the intended sum was subscribed; and that very afternoon this fourth subscription was sold in Exchange-Alley at 30 or 40 per cent. advance. The next day the principal Directors, having consulted together about their future management, came to several resolutions, of which, that very evening, they informed the Public by the following advertisement:

South-Sea House, August 25th, 1720.

'The Court of Directors of the South-Sea Company give notice, that the transfer-books of the company will be shut from the 31st day of August to the 21st of September, in order to the admitting as well the Proprietors of the original capital stock, and of the stock for the last Midsummer dividend, as the Proprietors of the stock for all the long annuities, 9 per cent, and tickets of lottery 1710, and of the several redeemable debts, which have been subscribed or deposited, or authorized to be subscribed into the capital stock, and also the Proprietors of the first, second, third, and fourth money subscriptions of the Company into a subscription of 20 per cent. of the capital stock, upon the terms agreed upon by the Court of Directors. The Company will lend the first payment for the intended subscription to all the proprietors of the original and dividend stock, and of the subscription in the long annuities, 9 per cent, and tickets of lottery 1710, and in the redeemable debts; and of the first and second money subscriptions, without transferring their stock, or depositing the subscription receipts; which subscription books will be opened on the 12th of September; and such of the Proprietors, as do not subscribe within that time, will be excluded the benefit of the subscription.'

The next day (August the 26th) the transfer-books were opened again; but, the South-Sea stock, instead of advancing, being by this time fallen under 800, the Directors, who had now large sums of money in their hands, thought fit to lend to their proprietors 4000*l.* upon every 1000*l.* stock for six months, at the rate of 4 per cent. which enabled some of those, who had bought stock at a higher price than the present, to satisfy their creditors. What still embarrassed the Directors was the case of the *Annuity*ants, and others, who had lately subscribed their public securities, and who thought it a great hardship to have the stock given them at 800*l.* per cent. when it was now little above 700, exclusive of the Midsummer dividend. In order to silence these and the like murmurings, after a long consultation, on the 30th of August, the Directors came to a resolution, 'That 30 per cent. in money should be the half-year's dividend due at Christmas next; and from thence for twelve years, not less than 50 per cent, in money should be the yearly dividend on their stock.' What effect this resolution had, was soon after manifested; for though it raised the stock to about 800 for the opening of the books, yet it soon sunk again, and in about three weeks fell gradually below 400.

The Directors, having resolved the future dividends, thought it time to procure the sanction of the whole Corporation; for which purpose they appointed (Sept. 8.) a General Court to be held at Merchant-Taylor's-Hall, declaring, That this Assembly would be one of the half-yearly General Courts appointed by the Charter; and to chuse a Committee of seven, to inspect the by-laws.

On the appointed day, the friends of the Directors took care to repair betimes to Merchant-Taylor's Hall, which, by nine o'clock in the morning, was filled; and many Proprietors and *Annuity*ants, who endeavoured to get in, could not

1720. not gain admittance. The Directors having taken their seats between eleven and twelve of the Clock, Sir John Fellows, Sub-Governor, acquainted the Assembly with the occasion of their meeting; read to them the several resolutions of the Court of Directors; and gave them an account of their proceedings; of the taking in both the redeemable and unredeemable funds, and of the subscriptions in money. This done, Mr Craggs senior made a short speech, wherein he commended the conduct of the Directors; and urged, that nothing could more effectually contribute to the bringing this scheme to perfection than union among themselves; and concluded with a motion, for thanking the Court of Directors for their prudent and skillful management, and for desiring them to proceed in such methods, as they should think most proper for the interest and advantage of the Corporation.

Mr Craggs was seconded by Mr Hungerford, who said, 'That he had seen the rise and fall, the decay and resurrection of many Communities of this nature; but that, in his opinion, none ever performed such wonderful things in so short a time, as the South-Sea Managers had brought about: That they had done more than the Crown, the Pulpit, and the Magistrate could do: For they had reconciled all parties in one common interest, and thereby laid asleep, if not wholly extinguished, our domestic jars and animosities: That by the rise of their stocks the monied-men had vastly increased their fortunes; the Country Gentlemen had seen the value of their lands doubled and trebled in their hands; and they had, at the same time, done good to the Church, not a few of the Reverend Clergy having got great sums by this project: That, in short, they had enriched the whole Nation; and he hoped they had not forgot themselves.' One or two Members of the Assembly having offered to speak in favour of the Annuity-men, and to censure the conduct of the Directors, they were presently hissed to silence; and Mr Hungerford, refusing his speech, continued justifying and applauding the Directors, and concluded with supporting Mr Craggs's motion. The Duke of Portland spoke on the same side, and said, 'That he did not know what reasons any body had to be dissatisfied; and gave in a draught of the motion for returning thanks to the Directors; which being read by the Clerk, it was unanimously approved. It was likewise agreed, that, according to the resolution of the Directors, 'the next Christmas dividend on the stock and subscriptions in money should be 30 per cent; and that a dividend of not less than 50 per cent, per annum be made from Christmas next, in half-yearly payments, for not less than twelve years, upon the whole stock and subscriptions.' They likewise agreed with the Court of Directors to omit the 20 per cent. subscription in money, which had been intended for the Proprietors of the original stock and former subscriptions. After which a motion was made, 'That the last Subscribers, both of the redeemable and unredeemable funds, should have the alternative, either to withdraw their orders, or to accept the terms offered them by the Court of Directors.' But, the question being put, it was carried in the negative, three or four voices excepted. Then, upon the Earl of Orkney's motion, the General Court was adjourned. 1720.

But, though the Directors carried their main point in the General Court, yet the negative put upon the motion, in the behalf of the last Subscribers, highly increased the public discontent, and raised such a distrust of the honesty of the Managers, that the same day (Sept. 8.) the stock fell to 640, and, on the morrow, to 550. Upon this, the Directors resolved to open the transfer-books the Monday following, which having thrown some damp upon the stock-jobbing in the Alley, the South-Sea rose that day (Sept. 9.) to 640. On the other hand, several of the last Subscribers of annuities went with a Public Notary to the South-Sea-House, to demand their orders; and, upon the refusal of the Officers to deliver them, the Proprietors made their protests in due form, and resolved to seek their remedy at law. In the mean time, they loudly complained of the unfair manner, in which they were drawn in to subscribe their annuities; for, it seems, at the top of every page of the subscription-book, there was a short letter of Attorney, whereby the Subscribers impowered three persons, therein named, to accept such terms, as the Company should think fit to give them for their effects; which they alledged to be a mere trick, not one in a hundred of the Subscribers having read the ensnaring preamble.

On the 10th of September, the Directors caused the following advertisement to be published, 'The Court of Directors give notice, that the dividends for Christmas next, and afterwards, voted by the General Court on the 8th of September, which shall become due on the four money-subscriptions already taken for sale of the stock of the Company, will be allowed in part of the payments, which shall become due on the subscriptions; and that the 10 per cent. stock for the last Midsummer dividend, on the first, second, and third of the money subscriptions, will be intited to the like dividends, and be allowed in further part of the payment on those subscriptions. And whereas the transfer-books of the Company were advertised to be shut from the 31st of August last to the 21st of September, in order to the making the subscriptions of 20 per cent. intended for the Proprietors; and the General Court having since agreed, that this subscription be omitted, the Court of Directors give notice, that the transfer-books will be opened on the 12th instant, and will continue open as usual.'

Some of the Managers vainly expected, that this advertisement would have contributed to the keeping up the stock; but, as it continued sinking, they were obliged to have recourse to more effectual methods. They made some secret advances towards an union with the East-India Company; but, a secret Committee of that Company, appointed to consider of their offers, not having thought proper to accept them, they were forced to court the assistance of their rival, the Bank of England. At the earnest desire, and by the zealous interposition of Mr Secretary Craggs, several Conferences were held between a select number of the Directors of those two Corporations; which raised so great an expectation, that on the 12th of September, in the morning, upon a report, that they had come to an agreement for circulating six millions of the Scrub.

1720. South-Sea Company's bonds, the stock rose immediately to 670; but in the afternoon, as soon as that report was known to be groundless, the stock fell again to 580; the next day to 570, and so gradually to 400; which increased the murmurings and complaints of the last Subscribers, and exposed several of the Directors to public insults.

Account of the Bank contract. Mr Walpole (who was Paymaster of the Army, and lived the greatest part of that summer in the Country, to avoid giving offence to those that had, with the Directors, the management of the South-Sea affairs) being then thought to have great credit and influence with the Bank, was sent for out of the Country, and importuned to use his interest to induce the Bank to agree to a proposal made by the South-Sea Company, for circulating a number of their bonds.

It is to be observed that nothing of this kind arose from the Bank, or was at their motion: And, as far as it appears, nothing but an apprehension of the people's resentment, with which they were loudly threatened, could have prevailed with the Bank to have treated at all with the South-Sea Company, and involve themselves in their calamities. But the clamour was irresistible, and the Bank, out of necessity, hearkened to the proposals of the South-Sea Company; for from them every step and motion proceeded.

The first expedient was for the Bank to circulate bonds of the South-Sea Company to a certain value for a time to be agreed upon, and a proposal to that effect was, on the 16th of September, sent to the Bank by the Sub and Deputy Governors of the South-Sea Company.

This not being relished immediately, it was proposed, that there should be a meeting of a Committee consisting of five of each Company at the Post-Master's house, where were likewise present, Lord President, Mr Secretary Craggs, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr Craggs, Post-Master-General (1). The meeting was on the 19th of September, three days after the proposal.

This Conference lasted many hours with great reluctance on the part of the Bank, but was pressed with so much eagerness and authority on the other side, that the Bank was prevailed upon to yield.

It was thought proper, before they parted, that something should be reduced into writing, as a minute of the substance of what had been under consideration, and to serve as a foundation of a future agreement or contract between the two Companies.

There was some little dispute who should draw the minute, but it being the general desire of the Company, that Mr Walpole should do it, in the presence of the whole meeting, he put down in writing what has ever since been called, The Bank Contract, and which was in the following words, 'That the Bank of England shall undertake to circulate three millions of South-Sea bonds for one year, at a premium to be agreed upon by the two Companies; a subscription to be taken, for enabling the Bank to carry on the circulation—per cent. to be paid down by every Subscriber, and—per cent. upon every call at a fortnight's notice; the contract with the Subscribers to be made in the nature and form with former Contracts for circulating Exchequer bills, and the charges of circulation to be borne by the South-Sea Company. That, in consideration of this undertaking, the South-Sea Company shall pay the 3,700,000*l.* to be paid to the Bank by notice of Parliament, in South-Sea stock, at a price to be agreed on between the two Companies.

This paper (which was all that Mr Walpole ever wrote relating to the affair; for at the other meetings he was never once present) had no title or preamble, signifying what it imported; The premium for circulating, and what was to be paid down for the circulation, was left blank, and the most material part of the whole, at what price the Bank was to take the South-Sea stock for 3,700,000*l.* was referred to a subsequent agreement. So it could not with any propriety be called a contract, but rather a rough draught of an agreement void of all form or any manner of obligation.

The next day after this meeting (Sept. 20.) there was a General Court of the South-Sea Company at Merchant-Tailors-Hall, where Sir John Fellows, the Sub-Governor, acquainted them, 'That, since their last meeting, their stock having taken an unexpected turn to the disadvantage of the Company, the Directors had been consulted what might be most for the benefit of the Corporation; and considering the great credit the Bank of England had justly gained, both at home and abroad, they had thought it for their interest to treat with that Company, for the circulating their bonds, and to grant them stock at a moderate price, in lieu of the 3,700,000*l.* which the South-Sea Company was to pay them at Lady-Day, and Michaelmas, 1721. And that from the result of the meeting they had the night before with some Gentlemen of the Bank, and some persons of the first rank, they doubted not but such an agreement might soon be perfected.' Hereupon Mr Dawson moved, 'That the Directors be empowered to agree with the Bank of England, or any other persons, to circulate the Company's bonds, or make any other agreement with the Bank, which they should judge proper.' And he was seconded by Sir John Eyles. Hereupon Mr Hungerford moved for amending the latter part of the question, by making express mention of that other agreement. But Mr Pulteney spoke for the question, and thought it best to use a latitude of expression, and so leave the Directors at liberty to act as they should think proper for the interest of the Company. He added, 'That it was a matter of surprize to see what a panic had seized upon the minds of the people, at a time when the Nation was in profound peace, and had

(1) The five Directors of the South-Sea were:

Sir John Fellows, Sub-Governor,
Charles Foye, Deputy-Governor,
Sir Theodore Janssen,
Mr Gore,
Mr Chester.

No. 96, Vol. IV.

The five Bank Directors were:

Mr Hanger, Governor,
Sir John Ward,
Sir Gilbert Heathcote,
Sir Peter Delmé,
Sir Nathaniel Gould.

7 T

1720. had nothing to fear, either at home or from abroad. That, indeed, a rumour had been universally spread, as if the armament of the Spaniards was designed either against Port-Mabon or Gibraltar; but that he took that report to be altogether false and groundless, and only intended to scandalize that Potentate, and to terrify the people here; for he himself had seen and perused a copy of a letter, written by the express command of the King of Spain by his Secretary of State, to the British Minister at Madrid, absolutely denying, in the strongest terms, any designs of the Spanish forces against any of his Britannic Majesty's Dominions. That he was as much concerned in the Company as most people; but that, notwithstanding this general and terrible alarm, he had not disposed of any part of his stock; for he would think it a scandal to be rich, if the Nation were ruined. That, however, he hoped the case would be quite otherwise; and he doubted not but the Company would soon be restored to its former flourishing condition, since it was like to be supported by the Bank of England, a Corporation, who by wife, though slow and cautious, measures, had established its credit, not only at home, but even among foreigners. Upon this the question was unanimously agreed to. Sir John Fellows then farther acquainted the Assembly, 'That, the Proprietors of the several annuities lately subscribed, as well as those interested in the two last money-subscriptions, being very much dissatisfied, fearing thereby to be great losers, the Directors had thought it proper, that the terms should be lowered to make them easy.' Whereupon Sir Matthew Decker moved, 'That power be given to the Directors, to relieve the Annuitants, who came in upon the last subscription; as likewise the Proprietors of the third and fourth money-subscriptions.' He was seconded by Mr Craggs senior, who, among other things, said, 'That nothing could be more reasonable and just, than to give satisfaction to people, who had trusted their fortunes and estates with the Company, and that it would be a notorious robbery to take any advantage of their confidence in the honour and integrity of the Directors.' This gave occasion to Mr Budgel to reflect, in a speech, on the prodigious leap from a subscription of 400*l.* to one of a 1000*l.* which left such a gap in the building, as would at last bring it to the ground. He then observed, that the fall of the stock was owing to the malicious rumour, that two or three of the very Directors had basely betrayed the trust reposed in them. When he had done speaking, Mr Chester, one of the Directors, spoke in vindication of his Brethren, and said, 'That he knew of no proceedings among them, but what were intended for the good of the whole Company: That, for his own part, he had not sold any of his stock, nor referred to himself any more of the subscriptions, than what was allowed to each of the Directors; and that his fortune would have been as large, if he had not been a Director: That, as to the great gap between the second and third subscription in money, which was objected as a wrong step in the management of the Company's affairs, he could assure them, that it was none of the Directors fault, since they designed to have made the third subscription at five or six hundred; but, the humour and eagerness of the people having run up the South-Sea stock to seven or eight hundred, 1720. they could not in prudence open a subscription at less than a thousand.' The Assembly seemed to be very well pleased with Mr Chester's speech; but many wondered, that none of his Brethren took that opportunity to clear themselves, as he had done. Upon the whole matter, the Court unanimously agreed to the question for relieving the last Subscribers, and then adjourned.

Two days after, Sept. 22, there was a General Court of the Bank of England, when the Governor acquainted them, that this was one of their quarterly and half-yearly meetings, and that their Directors had come to a resolution to declare the last half-yearly dividend at four per cent; to which the Court having unanimously agreed, the Governor proceeded, saying, 'He presumed, none could be ignorant there had of late been divers Meetings and Conferences between the Directors of this Company, and the Directors of the South-Sea, under the influence and interposition of some persons of the highest figure and station: That they had made no agreement yet with the South-Sea; but that the Directors had thought fit to come to a resolution upon the matter. Then the resolution was read; and, without any person's speaking to it, was immediately formed into a question to this effect: 'That, for the better support of the public credit, the Directors of the Bank of England be empowered to agree with the Directors of the South-Sea, to circulate their bonds to what sum, and upon what terms, and for what time, they shall think proper; and to make what other agreements with the South-Sea, they shall judge to be for the interest of this Corporation.' Which question was instantly agreed to with great unanimity. Then the Governor acquainted them, that he believed books would be ready for a subscription to be taken in the next day, for the purpose aforesaid, and that it would be on the usual terms, 15 per cent. deposit, 3 per cent. premium, and 5 per cent. interest; and then the Court adjourned.

The Directors of the two Companies being thus empowered, a Committee of both met on the 23d of September, and a proposal was made by one of the Directors of the South-Sea Company, 'That the 3,700,000*l.* which the South-Sea Company was to repay to the Bank at Lady-Day, and Michaelmas, 1721) should be subscribed by the Bank into the stock of the South-Sea Company, for which the Bank was to have such shares as the funds would produce, the stock being valued at 400*l.* per cent.'

This proposal was the next day reported at a Court of Directors of the Bank; and, being agreed to, was the same day communicated, by a Director of the Bank, to the Court of Directors of the South-Sea Company.

This, in short, is the History of the famous Bank Contract which has made so much noise. The substance of all which is, that, in the day of distress, the Bank was thought the only resource to support the sinking state of the South-Sea Company. Every one that was thought capable of giving any assistance was called in: At the first Conference Mr Walpole assisted, and the Bank was persuaded to undertake what was proposed to them: The first part of the proposition, and, indeed, the original proposal for circulating the bonds upon which the first Conference was held, was dropped by the South-Sea Company;

1720. Company; and the last article of taking South-Sea stock at 400 l. per cent. was carried on, and accepted by a Committee of the Bank: And this example, it was hoped, by the Managers of the South-Sea affairs, would fix the price of South-Sea stock at that rate: But they were soon convinced, by the daily fall of the stock, that this expedient would not answer: And the Bank quickly found, they had been prevailed upon to consent to what they were not able to perform, as will presently be seen.

When the books were opened at the Bank for taking in a subscription for the support of public credit, the concourse of people, who readily brought in their money, was at first so very great, that it was judged, the whole subscription (which was intended for three millions) would have been filled that very day: But it happened, that the fall of the South-Sea stock, and the discredit of that Company's bonds, occasioned a run upon the most eminent Goldsmiths and Bankers, some of whom having lent out great sums upon South-Sea stock, and other public securities, were obliged to shut up their shops, and abscond. The Sword-Blade Company (who hitherto had been the chief Cash-keepers of the South-Sea Company) being almost drained of their ready money, were forced to stop payment, and set up at their Office written bills, giving notice, 'That they would pay any of their notes in South-Sea stock at four hundred per cent. or pay part in cash on the Monday following, and give five per cent. interest on the rest till paid; and that they would take their own notes in payment for the monies they had lent.' This, being looked upon as a kind of Bankruptcy, increased the public calamity, and occasioned a great run upon the Bank, who were obliged to pay out money faster than they received it upon the subscription. But the festival of Michaelmas, on which the Bank was shut of course, gave it some breathing-time.

In the mean time, South-Sea stock continued sinking till Michaelmas day, when it was about 150, at which price it was on the 2d of February, the day after the House of Commons accepted the proposals of the South-Sea Company; whose low credit appeared yet more plainly in that their bonds, payable on Michaelmas, 1721, were now at above 25 per cent. discount.

Pursuant to a former resolution for relieving the last Subscribers, a General Court was held the 30th of September, wherein, after the agreement with the Bank was ratified, it was resolved that the Proprietors of the redeemable debts taken in on the last subscriptions should be allowed, for their several interests in the funds, the same terms, in all respects, as the Bank; and that the last subscription of the long annuities should be valued at 32 years purchase; and of the short at 17 years purchase; to be paid for in stock at 400 per cent. and be intitled to the last Midsummer dividend: And that all the Annuitants should be allowed the interest of their annuities to the 29th of September. It was also agreed, that the third subscription, which was taken at 1000 per cent. should be reduced to 400 per cent. and the subscription receipts given out accordingly.

That the 100 per cent. already paid should be taken in part of the payment; and that the remaining 300 per cent. should be paid in nine payments, whereof the three next payments to be at 40 per cent. each, and the other six payments at 30 per cent. at six months distance from each other; the first payment of 40 per cent. to be the 2d of July, 1721. It was also agreed, that the fourth subscription, which was taken at 1000 per cent. whereof 200 per cent. was paid down, should be also reduced to 400 per cent. and that the remaining 200 per cent. should be paid in eight equal payments of 25 per cent. each, the first of which was to be the 26th of September, 1721, and the remaining payments, at six months distance from each other. That interest should be allowed to the Company from Michaelmas, 1720, after the rate of 5 per cent. per ann. to the respective times of payment of the said third and fourth subscriptions: And that the 10 per cent. dividend at Midsummer should be also allowed on the third and fourth subscriptions. That the Proprietors of the receipts of all the money subscriptions should be allowed, in part of their payments, the several dividends, that should be made on the stock of the Company, till their payments were completed. That 5 per cent. interest be allowed on all the Company's bonds from the 29th instant, till they should become due; and that any of the Company's bonds should be taken as money in the fourth payment of the first subscription, which would become due on the 14th of October (1).

These resolutions gave no satisfaction to the Annuitants, nor put the least stop to the fall of the South-Sea stock. The Bank finding they were not able to stem the tide, without exposing the properties of their own Principals and Adventurers to be carried away and lost in the common deluge, they wisely kept themselves out of the general inundation, and did not care to be drowned, with those, they could not save. They resolved to drop an agreement, which they were under no obligation to perform (had it been possible)

(1) It may not be improper to insert here an account of the long and short annuities subscribed or unsubscribed:

	l.	s.	d.
LONG ANNUITIES, per ann. —	666,821	8	3
First Subscription —	427,340	18	9
Second Subscription —	125,392	17	6
Unsubscribed —	114,087	12	0
SHORT ANNUITIES, per ann. —	81,000
First Subscription —	48,132
Second Subscription —	18,750
Unsubscribed —	14,118

	l.	s.	d.
LOTTERY ANNUITIES, 1710. —	46,260	6	1
First Subscription —	15,918	4	0
Second Subscription —	14,956	6	0
Unsubscribed —	15,395	16	1
REDEEMABLES —	16,546,482	7	1
Subscribed —	14,391,781	8	0
Unsubscribed —	2,152,694	7	1

1720. fible) and to which the South-Sea Company had no power to compel them. On the 10th of November, the Governor of the Bank reported from the Committee appointed to treat with the South-Sea Company, that the transactions between the Bank and that Company had been laid before Counsel, on behalf of the Bank; and that, the South-Sea Company pressing for an answer of what had been done therein, the Governor of the Bank had acquainted the Deputy-Governor of the South-Sea Company, that the Committee did not think fit, for the present, to proceed further in that affair, and had delivered to him in writing the following answer:

‘When the proposition was offered by the Lords, at the meeting of the Committees of both Companies, as a suitable expedient for the support of public credit, the Court of Directors of the Bank shewed their readiness to join in any measures, that might tend to the service of the public.

‘But, some difficulties appearing to the Committee of the Bank, they had consulted with their Counsel, and they are advised, that, considering the nature of this transaction, it will not be safe for them to proceed upon the proposition without consent of Parliament.

‘However, they think it reasonable, that, in the mean time, the Committee of the South-Sea should give the Committee of the Bank some account of their estate, for the satisfaction of their Principals.’

About a week after, the following paper was sent to the Bank from the Lords of the Treasury: ‘My Lords desire, that the difficulties which have arisen (and upon which, they say, they have consulted their own Counsel) concerning the late agreement between them and the South-Sea Company, may be put into writing, and delivered to their Lordships, as soon as possible, that their Lordships may receive the opinion of the King’s Counsel.’

To this the following answer was given: ‘The Court of Directors of the Bank have, with the utmost deference, considered the message in writing, which your Lordships were pleased to send them, and they humbly apprehend, they cannot better explain themselves, than they have already done, in the manner they have given to the South-Sea Company, a copy whereof was delivered to your Lordships, which contains the substance of what they consulted with their Counsel thereupon.’

Thus ended the transactions between the two Companies, which (as it has been suggested) were carried on by the Authors and Promoters of them, with a design to take advantage of the first rumour of this supposed agreement, and draw in unwary persons, who, desirous to retrieve their losses, were induced to buy stock at the price, the Bank had agreed to take it. Those who had countenanced and run into every part of the South-Sea scheme, and were consequently deeply involved, were justly suspected of having contrived and taken advantage of the contract; by which means great numbers of deluded people were undone.

Thus, in the space of eight months, were seen the rise, progress, and fall of that mighty fabric, which, being wound up by mysterious springs to a wonderful height, had fixed the eyes and expectations of all Europe, but whose foundation being fraud, illusion, credulity, and insatiation, fell to the ground, as soon as the artful management of the Projectors was discovered. The ebb of this swollen fluctuating credit returned with greater violence than it flowed, and carried every thing before it with that precipitation, that the application of the Ministers of State, and the Directors of the great Companies, jointly and separately to stop it, were ineffectual. Express after express was sent to Hanover, to give the King information of the state of affairs, which was so urgent, that the King set out for England sooner than he intended, and arrived at London the 11th of November.

The South-Sea stock, which was 200 at the King’s arrival, fell again upon the prorogation of the Parliament, from the 25th of November to the 8th of December, to 135; but, on a report that the Ministry had agreed with the principal Directors of the South-Sea, the Bank, and East-India Company, upon a project, which would very much conduce to the restoration of the public credit, it rose again to 210. But whatever the Ministers concerted, for that end, was frustrated by the Managers of the South-Sea Company, who published an advertisement in the London Gazette, ‘That the bonds of the South-Sea Company would be taken in repayment of the money on all loans made by the Company. That the bonds would be likewise taken in all future payments on the subscription receipts: And that all persons, who were willing to make their subscription capital stock, might do the same, by making the remaining payments in the bonds of the Company. This advertisement was generally looked upon as very extraordinary, since it was unreasonable to expect, either the borrowers of 400*l.* on 100*l.* capital stock absolutely transferred, or subscribers at 400*l.* should make repayments and remaining payments at a time, when South-Sea stock was under 200.

The squadron, which had been sent to the Baltic under the command of Sir John Norris, returned to England, and arrived at Orford on the 20th of November, all but the Monk; a fifty gun ship, which struck on the Colston Sand near Tarmouth, and was lost; but most of her crew was saved by boats from Colston.

The Parliament being met, pursuant to their last prorogation, on the 8th of December, the King went to the House of Peers, and, by the mouth of the Lord Chancellor, made the following speech to both Houses:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

“SINCE we last parted, the face of our affairs abroad is become more favourable. The peace in the South only wants the form of a Congress; and that of the North is brought much nearer to a conclusion. I shall, at a proper time, order the several treaties I have made, to be laid before you; by which you will perceive the success of our endeavours to establish a peace throughout Europe, and to secure and support the Protestant Religion. At the same time I can never sufficiently express my concern for the unhappy turn of affairs, which has so much affected the public credit at home.

Gentlemen

1720.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I do most earnestly recommend it to you, that you consider of the most effectual and speedy methods to restore the national credit, and fix it upon a lasting foundation. You will, I doubt not, be assisted in so commendable and necessary a work by every man, that loves his Country, and especially by the several great Societies of this Kingdom. I hope you will, on this occasion, remember, that all your prudence, your temper, and resolution are necessary to find out and apply the proper remedies to our misfortunes; which will, if you succeed, serve to increase that reputation you have so justly acquired, particularly if you shall be able, notwithstanding these difficulties, to discharge a part of the public debt. I have ordered the several estimates to be laid before you of the expence of the ensuing year; and must desire you to dispatch the Supplies necessary for them.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I am glad to observe to you, that our trade does appear to have been more extended this year than in the preceding one. We have the most flourishing Navy of any Nation whatsoever to protect it. And I hope you will turn your thoughts to the best methods for the securing and enlarging of our Commerce. You may depend on my hearty concurrence to all such provisions, as shall appear to you necessary for the good of my people."

Address of the Lords.

The Lords, without any debate, unanimously agreed to congratulate the King in an address, for the near prospect of a general peace, and to thank him for his endeavours to secure and maintain the Protestant Religion. To this were added assurances of their utmost assistance towards attaining those great ends, and of their zealous concurrence in all measures for restoring public credit, and enlarging the commerce of these Kingdoms.

Debate on the address of the Commons.

The Commons, who were more concerned than the Peers in the fall of the South Sea Company, and in the subsequent calamities, were not so peaceable. Mr Pulteney made a motion for an address, to thank the King for the near prospect of peace, and for his tender concern for the misfortunes of his people, occasioned by the unhappy turn of affairs; and to assure him, that the House would proceed with all possible care, prudence, and temper, to inquire into the causes of these misfortunes, and apply the proper remedies for restoring and fixing public credit upon solid and lasting foundations. This motion being seconded by Mr Pelham and some others, Mr Shippen proposed, after the words for restoring public credit, to add, as far as it is consistent with the honour of Parliaments, the interest of the Nation, and the principles of Justice. Mr Shippen gave his reasons for this addition, urging, "That, in order effectually to remedy the present misfortunes, it was absolutely necessary to maintain the honour and faith of parliamentary engagements, and to shew the highest resentment against those, who, abusing the trust reposed in them, had given so fatal a wound to public credit, and enriched themselves by the plunder of the Nation. That, in his opinion, the Managers of the South-Sea project were not the most criminal, since there were those above them, whose duty it was to overlook and direct their proceedings, and who ought to have given a seasonable check to that extremity of folly, by which the South-Sea stock and the subscriptions were advanced to an extravagant rate: Adding, that, had those at the helm interposed in the affair of the South-Sea, as they did in the case of the two assurances and other projects, they would have prevented that dismal calamity, which has since befallen the Nation.^a The Lord Moleworth, who spoke with great vehemence on the same side, examined the King's speech, and made remarks upon it: He said, "He was glad they were told, That the peace in the South only wanted the form of a Congress, which gave him hopes, that the difficulties started by Spain, in relation to Gibraltar, were at last surmounted, and that we were like to preserve that important conquest of the preceding war, together with Port-Mahon, which would make us some amends for the great expence of blood and treasure we had lately been at, to conquer Sicily for the House of Austria." When he came to speak of the South-Sea calamity, he said, "That, before they considered of proper remedies, they ought to inquire into the cause and nature of the distemper: That it is with the body politic, as with the body natural; and therefore they ought to imitate skilful Surgeons, who, in order to cure a wound, begin with probing it; and, when they find it necessary, make incisions before they apply healing plaisters; and that they, who followed a contrary method, are but mere empirics, who by using palliatives make the sore fester, and endanger the life of the patient. He owned it had by some been suggested, that there was no law to punish the Directors of the South-Sea Company, who were justly looked upon as the immediate authors of the present misfortunes: But that, in his opinion, they ought, on this occasion, to follow the example of the ancient Romans, who having no law against parricide, because their legislators supposed no son could be so unnaturally wicked, as to imbrue his hands in his father's blood, made one to punish so heinous a crime, as soon as it happened to be committed; and adjudged the guilty wretch to be thrown alive, sewn up in a sack, into the Tyber. That, as he looked upon the contrivers and executors of the villainous South-Sea scheme as the parricides of their Country, he should be satisfied to see them undergo the same punishment.^b

No. 97. Vol. IV.

Sir Jesseph Jekyll spoke on the same side; and observed, "That as he doubted not, but among the South-Sea Directors some might be innocent, and others criminal, so he was of opinion, there were those, who were not Directors, no less, if not more criminal, than the Directors themselves, and who therefore deserved an equal, if not a severer punishment: Adding, that upon extraordinary emergencies, where the laws are deficient, the legislative authority may, and ought to exert itself, and he hoped a British Parliament would never want a vindictive power to punish national crimes.^c Mr Grey Nevill, Mr Pitt, and some others spoke also for the clause offered by Mr Shippen. But it was represented by Mr Secretary Craggs, Mr Torke the Solicitor-General, and Mr Walpole. That such a restriction did but ill suit with an address of thanks, which

7 U

1720.

1720.

which, in their opinion, ought to run in the usual form, and answer in general terms the several heads of the speech from the Throne. That, as to the main drift of the clause, they thought it inconsistent with the rules of prudence, to begin this Session with irritating inquiries: That, if the City of London were on fire, they did not doubt but all wise men would be for extinguishing the flames, and preventing the spreading of the conflagration, before they inquired into the incendiaries. That in like manner, public credit having received a most dangerous wound, and being still in a bleeding condition, they ought to apply a speedy remedy to it; and that afterwards they might inquire into the cause of the present calamity. Mr Walpole, in particular, declared, 'That, for his own part, he had never approved the South-Sea scheme, and was lenient it had done a great deal of mischief. But, since it could not be undone, he thought it the duty of all good men to give their helping hand towards retrieving it: And, that with this view, he had already bestowed some thoughts on a proposal to restore public credit, which, in a proper time, he would submit to the wisdom of the House.' The majority acquiesced in these last reasons; so that, the question being put for inserting Mr Shippen's clause, it passed in the negative by two hundred and sixty-one against one hundred and three. However, the next day a motion being made by Mr Milner for inserting the words, And for punishing the authors of them (our present misfortunes), the same was carried without dividing.

By these first proceedings, it was easy to see that this Session would not be so favourable to the Ministry as the former ones had been, and that the Whigs would hardly be distinguished from the Tories by their votes: These partialities were suspended, and, as it were, annihilated by various other passions, which produced numberless intrigues. Many of the Commons were sincerely touched with the public calamities, or moved by their own private losses: Others, dissatisfied with the Ministry and Court, were pleased to have an opportunity of covering their revenge, with the specious pretence of justice and the public good: Some had in view, by their loud and bitter complaints, to make themselves considerable to the Court, or draw the attention of the opposite party: Others, engaged in the secret practices of the South-Sea Company, had a mind, by an affected severity, to prevent their being suspected: A few there were, who politically concealed, under the appearance of zeal and indignation, their devotion to some of the principal Managers, and sought to be in the Committees of inquiry into those odious affairs, in order to screen the Authors thereof.

Proceedings of the Commons in the South-Sea affair.

However different these views might be, all seemed at first to agree. On the 12th of December, the Commons ordered, that the Directors of the South-Sea should forthwith lay before them an account of all their proceedings; of all the orders they had received from the Treasury; of what money and Exchequer bills they had received since the 25th of December, 1719; of what public debts had been subscribed or discharged, and of what sums of money had been borrowed on account of the Company, since the same time. Nor did the Commons rest here. A few days after, Sir Joseph Jekyll moved, That a select Committee should be appointed, to inquire into all the proceedings relating to the execution of the South-Sea act; but, upon Mr Walpole's representing, that such a method would take up a great deal of time, and that, the public credit being in a bleeding condition, a remedy ought to be applied to it, the motion was not insisted on. After that, Mr Walpole acquainted the House, 'That (as he had hinted a few days before) he had spent some time upon a scheme for restoring public credit; but that, the execution of it depending upon a position, which had been laid as a fundamental, he thought it proper, before he opened the scheme, to be informed, whether he might rely on that main foundation, Whether the subscriptions of public debts and incumbrances, money-subscriptions, and other contracts made with the South-Sea Company, should remain in the present state?' This question, being stated, occasioned a warm debate, particularly in relation to the validity of the second subscription of the redeemable and irredeemable public debts. Sir Joseph Jekyll, and some others, urged in favour of the Subscribers, 'That most of them having been drawn in to set their names to a sort of letter of Attorney, which was never read to them; and not having had afterwards the option of the terms offered, as the former Subscribers had, the subscription was surreptitious, and therefore not binding.' But they were answered by Mr Walpole, Mr Secretary Craggs, Mr Attorney and Mr Solicitor-General, and some others, 'That the letter of Attorney, by virtue of which the contract of the second subscription was made, having been placed at the top of every page of the book, all the Subscribers might have read it, as many of them did; and so might have chosen, whether they would set their names to it, or not. But that, it seems, some persons thought the subscription valid while they got, and not binding when they were like to lose by it. However, if any thing were defective in the subscription, they thought it advisable to leave it to the determination either of a General Court of the South-Sea, or of the Common Law.' These reasons being approved by most of the landed Gentlemen, after a debate of several hours, it was at last resolved by two hundred and fifty-nine against one hundred and seventeen, 'That all the subscriptions of public debts and incumbrances, money-subscriptions, and other contracts made with the South-Sea Company, by virtue of an act made the last Session of Parliament, remain in the present state, unless altered for the ease and relief of the Proprietors, by a General Court of the South-Sea Company, or set aside by due course of Law.'

There are few instances which prove so strongly as this, that there is no cause so bad as to want an advocate in Assemblies, where a man may freely speak his opinion, without any other danger but that of being rejected. This pretended Contract, which was deemed valid, had not been read, nor could have been read, without being universally disapproved. Was it probable, that such multitudes should leave their most valuable interests to the discretion of two or three Attornies? They were not, indeed, forbid to subscribe, but they believed they had done it, with a liberty to consent to or reject the conditions that should be offered. Was not this sufficient to declare the subscription void, and to restore the Proprietors to their former state?

1720.

In the Possession of the Right Hon. William Lord Talbot. Engraved by T. & P. Worsley in London 1740.

1720. state? However, the Commons did not think so, for the resolution of the Committee was confirmed, the next day, by the House (1).

Mr Walpole's scheme for restoring credit.

The day after this resolution was agreed to, Mr Walpole laid before the Commons his scheme to restore public credit, the substance of which was, to ingraft nine millions of South-Sea stock into the Bank of England, and the like sum into the East-India Company, upon certain conditions (2). Mr Hutchinson and other Members made some exceptions to the scheme; but, none offering a better, it was ordered, 'That proposals should be received from the Bank of England, the South-Sea Company, and the East-India Company, towards restoring public credit.'

Though the plainness of Mr Walpole's scheme recommended it above all others, yet it met with some opposition in the general Courts of the three great Companies, who met to give powers to their Directors to bring the matter to perfection; But at last the Directors were empowered to make a proposal to the House of Commons.

Accordingly proposals agreeable to the new scheme were afterwards presented to the House of Commons by the several Companies, and it was resolved (Jan. 5.) 'That an ingrossment of nine millions of the capital stock of the South-Sea Company into the Capitals of the Bank and East-India Company, as proposed by these Companies, will contribute very much to the restoring public credit.' A bill upon this resolution was, after some debate, ordered to be brought in, which passed the House, and was sent up to the Lords, and afterwards received the Royal assent.

Pursuant to the order of the House, the Sub and Deputy Governors of the South-Sea Company having presented to the Commons their books and papers, Mr Shippen made a long speech, representing, 'That besides the papers, which had already been laid before them, it was necessary to have others, in order to discover the frauds and deceitful management of the South-Sea Directors and their Accomplices. That, in his opinion, the most villainous contrivance, whereby they ensnared unwary people, was their taking in money subscriptions at 1000 per cent. and their declaring a dividend of 30 l. per cent. at Christmas, and of not less than 50 l. per cent. per ann. for twelve years after; which had imposed upon the understanding of all such, as de-1720. pended upon the wisdom and integrity of the Directors, and occasioned the ruin of many thousands of families.' He therefore moved, That the Directors of the South-Sea Company should lay before the House the calculations or inducements, on which they took in the third and fourth money subscriptions, and grounded the resolutions of making such dividends. This motion, not being opposed, was agreed to; as was likewise a second motion for laying before the House a list of the Directors of the South-Sea Company, with the names of the Treasurer, Secretary, and Accountant, and also the original books of the minutes of the Committee of Treasury of the Company, since the 25th of December, 1719, with a copy of the by-laws. After which the Commons adjourned to the 4th of January, as the Lords did to the 9th of the same month.

By these proceedings of the Parliament it is evident, the Commons were divided in their opinions, one party being for applying a remedy to the calamity occasioned by the mismanagement of the South-Sea scheme: And the other party, for inquiring into the causes of the present misfortunes, and for punishing the Authors as the most effectual and only means to redress them. The first party, which was favoured by the Court, prevailed for a time; but, when the Commons met after the Holidays, it appeared that the other party had gained considerable strength, and that the artful introduction of other affairs, instead of diverting, only served to inflame their resentment against the Authors of the late proceedings.

On the 4th of January, Mr Trevor, Secretary of war, seconded by the Lord Carpenter, moved for a bill to prevent mutiny and desertion: But Sir Joseph Jekyll expressed his surprise, 'that a bill should be moved for so early, which seldom used to be brought in but towards the end of a Session: That such a hurry seemed to be intended to stop the prosecution of the Authors of the present misfortunes. That they very well knew, their days were numbered, and that, as soon as they had dispatched the money bills, and the bill now moved for, they should immediately be dispatched home. That therefore he was for staying those bills, until they had done justice to the Nation, who called aloud for 1720-21: Their far-ther proceedings.

(1) In the next day's debate, Mr Walpole, who spoke for the resolution, set forth the views, with which the South-Sea act was made, viz. 'To consult the landed and trading interest of the Nation, by lessening its incumbrances and public debts, and putting them in a method of being paid off in a few years; which could not have been done, unless a way had been found to make the annuities for long terms redeemable; which had been happily effected by the South-Sea scheme, without a breach of parliamentary faith: And, if they should now unravel what had been done, they should not only ruin the South-Sea Company, but, instead of alleviating, aggravate the present misfortunes.' In answer to this, Sir Joseph Jekyll urged, 'That, in order to remedy the present distemper, and restore public credit, they ought, in the first place, to resolve and assert public faith, equity, and justice, which the South-Sea Managers had notoriously violated, with respect to the first and second Subscribers of annuities and other public debts: For the former had not the stock, to which they were entitled, delivered to them, till six months after they had subscribed their effects, and when the stock was fallen above half its price, and the latter had not the option either to accept or reject the terms, that were offered them.' Mr Walpole having, among other things, replied, 'That, if any injustice was done to the Subscribers, they were, by the resolution in question, left at liberty to seek their relief by law.' Mr Lechmere, Chancellor of the Duchy, insisted, 'That, if the South-Sea Company, whom the Parliament had appointed Trustees for the public debts, had not duly executed that trust, in relation to the Annuity, the latter could seek for relief no where but in Parliament; and that it was a duty incumbent upon the Legislature to relieve them.' Serjeant Pengelly, Mr Hutchinson, and some other Gentlemen, spoke on the same side; but were answered by Mr Secretary Cragg, Sir William Thompson, and Mr Hungerford, and, after some other speeches, it was moved to adjourn the debate; but, the question put thereupon being carried in the negative by two hundred and thirty-two voices against eighty-eight, the House agreed, without dividing, to the resolution of the day before.

(2) The substance of what was opened in the House for it.' Mr Secretary Craggs said, 'He wondered to see any opposition made to a bill so necessary for the safety of the Government, especially by a person, who had received signal favours from the Crown.' Upon this the Lord Moleworth stood up, and said, 'Mr Speaker, is it come to this, that every man, who has a place, must do all the drudgery, that is enjoined him? This may be true of some underlings; but I do not believe it: I am sure it is false of King George; he commands his servants nothing, but what is according to laws, and for the good of his subjects.' Then Sir Joseph Jekyll added, 'That he was as zealous as any man for the service of the King and his Government; but he was of opinion, that the doing justice to the Nation, and punishing them, who had brought it into the present calamitous condition, was the most effectual way both to serve the King, and at the same time to discharge their duty to their injured Country: Concluding, however, that he did not oppose the bringing in of the bill;' which was agreed to. After this, the House resolving itself into a Grand Committee, Sir Joseph represented, That, before they proceeded any farther, they ought to secure the persons and estates of those they had reason to look upon as the Authors of the public misfortunes; and therefore he moved for a bill to restrain the Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, Directors, Treasurer, Under-Treasurer, Cashier, Secretary, and Accountants of the South-Sea Company, from going out of this Kingdom for the space of one year, and till the end of the next Session of Parliament; and, for discovering their estates and effects, and preventing the transporting or alienating the same.' This motion met with no opposition, and Sir Joseph, with the Attorney and Solicitor-General, and some others, were ordered to prepare and bring in the bill (1), which having passed both Houses received the Royal assent (2).

As soon as this was over, the House debated in what manner they should proceed in the intended inquiry, whether in a Grand or Select Committee. After several speeches on both sides, it was resolved that a Committee should be appointed to inquire into all the proceedings relating to the execution of the South-Sea act; and that the numbers should be thirteen, and chosen by ballot. Pursuant to this resolution, Thomas Braderick, Archibald Hutcheson, Sir Joseph Jekyll, Edward Wortley, Sir Thomas Pengelly, William Clayton, Edward Jeffreys, Lord Moleworth, Thomas Strangways, William Sloper, Nicholas Lechmere, General Rosse, and Dixie Windsor, were chosen, to whom the several books and papers, which had been laid before the House by the South-Sea Company, were referred; and they were afterwards voted a Committee of Secrecy.

In the debate the Lord Hinchinbroke represented, that it was to be feared that, before the bill against the Directors, &c. was gone through both Houses, the most criminal might withdraw out of the Kingdom, and therefore he moved, that they might be immediately taken into custody. But, Mr Lechmere, and others, having shewed the inconveniences of such a proceeding, the motion was dropped.

In vain did the Directors present a petition to be heard by their Counsel against the bill, which was now brought in, and having passed the Commons was sent up to the Lords.

By this time the House of Lords were entered upon the South-Sea affair. Some of the Lords in the Ministry were the first, who complained of the

A select Committee for the South-Sea affair.

Proceedings of the Lords on the South-Sea affair.

of Commons was told to the General Court of the South-Sea Directors two days after, by Sir John Fellows, to the following effect:

'That the 1st money-subscription be continued, allowing longer time for the future payments; and that what has been paid be made stock at 400*l.* per cent.

'That the money, paid upon the 2d, 3d, and 4th money-subscriptions, be also made stock at 400*l.* per cent. The Subscribers to have the Midsummer dividend at 10*l.* per cent, and their future payments to be discharged.

'The stock then undisposed of will be 11,600,000*l.* which, to be divided among the Proprietors, will be 45*l.* per cent, to be disposed of by subscription or otherwise, as a General Court shall order, which was to this effect:

'That a sum not exceeding nine millions be ingrafted into the Bank, on terms to be agreed on with that Company.

'The like as to the East-India Company.

'That, for the stock so to be ingrafted, those Companies to have an annuity of 5*l.* per cent. per annum.

'That one fourth part of the present stock of this Company be wrote into the Bank, and one other fourth part into the East-India Company, the Proprietors to be allowed stock in each of those Companies, at 120*l.* per cent.

'That there will be in all seven millions and a half of Bank stock, and the same of India stock, for the Proprietors of this Company.

'That all the profits of this Company, by their subscriptions or otherwise, shall be for the sole benefit of this Company.'

(1) This done, Mr Shippen expressed his great satisfaction to see a British House of Commons resume their ancient vigour and spirit, and act with so great unanimity for the public good. He owned 'the necessity of securing the persons and estates of the South-Sea Directors and their Officers; but said, that, in his opinion, there were some men in great stations, whom, in time, he would not be afraid to name, who were no less guilty than the Directors.' Mr Secretary Craggs being somewhat exasperated at this, said, 'That he was ready to give satisfaction to any man, who should question him, either in that House, or out of it.' This expression gave no small offence; and thereupon the Lord Moleworth said, 'That he had had the honour to be a Member of that House upwards of thirty years, and never before now knew any man bold enough to challenge the whole House of Commons, and all England besides: That, for his part, though past sixty, he would answer whatever he had to say within the House, and hoped there were young Members enough, who would not be afraid to look Mr Secretary in the face out of the House.' Upon this, Mr Secretary, seeing the House in a great ferment, got up, and said, 'That, by giving satisfaction, he meant clearing his conduct.' Upon which the matter went no farther.

(2) By this bill, the Directors were each to enter into recognizances, in the penalty of 100,000*l.* with two sureties in the penalty each of 25,000*l.* If they neglected to do so before the 8th of February, they were to be imprisoned; and, in case they went out of the Kingdom, were to be adjudged guilty of felony. They were also obliged to deliver in upon oath, before the 5th of March, exact particulars of all the effects they were possessed of by themselves, or in trust, on the 1st of June 1720, or any time after, with an account of what they had disposed of since that time. They were likewise disabled from conveying any lands or effects, for a year after the 5th of January 1720-21.

(1) The

1720-21. the mismanagement of the South-Sea Directors, which had occasioned the present distress; and Earl Stanhope said, 'That the estates of the criminals, whether Directors or not Directors, ought to be confiscated, to make good the public losses.' The Lord Cartaret spoke to the same effect, as did likewise the Earl of Sunderland, who owned, indeed, that he had been for the South-Sea scheme, because he thought it calculated for the advantage of the Nation, in order to lessen the public debt, and, in particular, to take off the heavy incumbrance of long annuities; and no man would imagine, that so good a design could have been so perverted in the execution, as to produce quite contrary effects: But that, in his opinion, no Act of Parliament had ever been so much abused as the South-Sea act; and therefore he would go as far as any body to punish the offenders. Several Lords were surprized to find themselves prevented by those, whom they were ready to oppose, upon a supposition, that they entertained more favourable thoughts towards the Directors, against whom the others had left them but little to say. However, the Duke of Wharton observed, 'That they ought to have no respect of persons: That, for his part, he would give up the best friend he had: That the Nation had been plundered in a most flagrant and notorious manner; and therefore they ought to find out the Offenders, and then punish them with the utmost severity.' The Lord North and Grey, the Earl of Abingdon, and some others, urged also the ill effects of the South-Sea project, which the Bishop of Rochester compared to a pestilence. Earl Cowper spoke likewise on the same side, and in particular 'blamed those, who, by the act of Parliament, were appointed to overlook and check the South-Sea Directors, and who, in discharge of their trust, ought to have prevented their jumping from a subscription at 400 to 1000, which was the main cause of the misfortunes that ensued.' The Earl of Sunderland, finding himself and the other Lords of the Treasury thus attacked, said, 'That by the South-Sea act they were directed to appoint such persons, as they should think fit to be Managers and Directors, on the part of the Treasury, for the due execution of the act: That, as they had reason to look upon those persons, who had the principal share in framing this scheme, as the most able and proper to execute it, they had accordingly appointed some of the South-Sea Directors to be Managers and Directors for the Treasury: Concluding, that in this they had followed former precedents.' Upon this a question was propounded and stated, that the Commission issued out, by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, to three of the Directors of the South-Sea Company, was, according to former precedents, and legal. This occasioned a great debate; but, after the reading of some papers, the Lord Harcourt's opinion for the affirmative prevailed, by a majority of sixty-three against twenty-eight, most of whom entered their protest against that resolution. Then some Lords moved for appointing a secret Committee, to inquire into all the proceedings relating to the execution of the South-Sea act; but this was opposed by others, who said, they ought, in the most solemn manner, to examine the persons concerned. Which being agreed to, the Sub and Deputy-Governors, Directors, and Officers of the South-Sea Company were ordered to attend on the 12th of January.

On that day, the Sub and Deputy-Governors, about twenty-four of the Directors, Mr Knight Treasurer, Mr Surman his Deputy, and some other inferior Officers, attended the House, and at the bar were sworn to make true answers to such questions, as should be put to them. After this, the Governors and Treasurer were examined separately, and then the Directors. The examinations being ended, it was resolved, 'That the Sub-Governor and Directors of the South-Sea Company had prevaricated with them, in giving false representations of several matters of fact: That, by lending money on stock, and subscriptions, they were guilty of a notorious breach of trust; and that they ought to make good the losses, which the Company had sustained by their fraudulent management.' Some Lords were unwilling to involve all the Directors in this censure, and would distinguish the innocent from the guilty; but they were told, that the whole Court of Directors were guilty, either in acting or assenting; upon which they acquiesced in declaring them all criminal. The Directors being called in again, the Lord Chancellor gave them a severe reprimand for giving the House such lame accounts, and for having ordered their Clerks to omit several material things in the copies, that had been laid before the House; commanding them, at the same time, to produce either the originals themselves of several accounts of their Treasury, or authentic copies of them.

Soon after this, a bill passed the House of Lords, to disble the present Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Directors of the South-Sea Company, to enjoy any office in that Company, or in the East-India Company, or Bank of England, and from voting upon elections in the Company. Then the Lords examined several Brokers, as Stroude, Tessard, Lacour a Jew, and his son. By the three last great discoveries were said to be made. This done, the House adjourned to the 24th of January.

In the mean time, Mr Knight, Treasurer of the South-Sea Company, who was intrusted with the principal secrets of the South-Sea affair, either of his own accord, or (as it was suspected) at the suggestion of others, thought fit to retire out of the Kingdom (1). He absented himself the 22d of January from his house, and embarked the

(1) When Mr Knight attended at the House of Lords, a Peer spoke to the Earl of Sunderland, that a motion might be made to secure him immediately; for it was strongly surmized that he would soon make off. The Earl agreed in that surmise, but said, Earl Cowper should be consulted before any such motion was made, for, without his joining in with it, there was no likelihood of its passing; and then Knight would be alarmed to no purpose. The other Lord applied to Earl Cowper, who seemed very averse to the taking any such step, till, upon Knight's further examination, the House should come to a resolution, particularly with relation to him: Upon which the motion dropped; and it was suspected, that the Earl of Sunderland, knowing Earl Cowper's sentiments, referred that other Peer to him, on purpose to prevent the motion's being then made.

(1) The

the next morning in the river, on board a vessel, which carried him, the same day, to Calais. A letter, directed to the South-Sea Directors, was brought that morning, by a Porter, to Mr Surman (1), who delivered it to the Committee of Secrecy, then sitting at the South-Sea-House. They immediately repaired to the House of Commons, and acquainted them with what had happened. Two... sent for a proclamation to apprehend Mr Knights, and for another to stop the Ports to prevent him, or any of the Directors, from escaping out of the Kingdom. Then General Refs and other Members of the Secret Committee informed the House, 'That they had already discovered a train of the deepest villany... Nation, which, in due time, they would lay before the House; and that, in the mean while, in order to a further discovery, they thought it highly necessary to secure the persons of some of the Directors and principal South-Sea Officers, and to seize their papers.' Upon which the books and papers of Mr Knights, Mr Surman, Mr Turner, Sir George Caswall, and Mr Griffiths, were ordered to be secured, and Surman and Griffiths to be taken into custody; as were also Sir John Blunt, Sir John Lambert, two of the Directors, and Sir John Fellows, Sub-Governor of the South-Sea Company. Then, Mr Sawbridge and Sir Theodore Jansson being come into the House, a motion was made and carried, 'That they were guilty of a notorious breach...

and had occasioned very great loss to numbers of his Majesty's subjects, and highly prejudiced the public credit.' They were both expelled the House, and taken into custody, with Sir Robert Clapain and Francis Eyles, two other Directors, and Members of Parliament.

which Mr Aislabie resigned his places of Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Lord of the Treasury. Orders were also given for removing all South-Sea Directors from any place they had in the Government (2).

The Lords, on the 24th of January, examined Mr Joye, Deputy Governor of the South-Sea Company, who made a very frank confession of several important matters, and communicated Mr Knights' letter, which was read. After this, upon Earl Stanhope's motion, five Directors, Sir William Chapman, Mr Helditch, Mr Lawes, Mr Gibbon, and Mr Chister, were ordered to be taken into custody, with their papers, and those of Mr Clark, the Company's Solicitor. Of which notice was sent to the Commons with a message, that these persons and their papers should be produced in such manner as they should direct. This message contributed very much to the preserving a good understanding between the

Two days after, the Directors Mr Astell and Sir Harcourt Masters were examined by the Lords, and, among other discoveries, named several persons both in the Administration and in the House of Commons, to whom large sums in

(1) The letter was as follows:

Gentlemen,

'I write this from a true sense of the obligation I am under to make up my accounts with the Company, and to pay them their full demand: And, though self-preservation has obliged me to withdraw myself from the resentment against the Directors and myself, yet I am not conscious to myself of having done any one thing that I can reproach myself for, so far as relates to an honest sincere intention and zeal for the Company; but I can and do charge myself with a great many indiscretions, and am (besides the concern I must be under for leaving my own family, friends, &c.) very sensibly touched with what you are like to suffer on this account; and it will be the more I am afraid, from your want of unanimity, which I heartily recommend to you for the future, and, I am sure, wish you all well as you wish yourselves.

I... great deal of concern, so cannot be so particular, as otherwise I would have been. I have herewith sent Mr Surman the key of my desks, who knows so much of the state of the cash, as to be able to make it up. There are a good many bills of exchange, and other payments, to write off, and the weekly receipts to write on. There is cash in the Bank, in the Company's book, which, together with the notes taken on the third and fourth subscriptions, and the Company's bonds, will make up the balance, as I do believe: But, if it fall short, I have 3000 Equivalent stock, 1600 Bank stock, 2000 India and South-Sea stock, over and above what I owe the Company on the loan, as will be sufficient to make it up with money owing on securities on my particular account. The Company need not deliver or be answerable for the subscription-receipts or stock on the third and fourth subscriptions, unless these notes are paid; so the loss can only be the difference between the subscriptions and money in value; and I think, it would be hard for me to bear the loss, because the Clerks took by far the greatest part of them, as thinking them better than none; and most of refused: However, I submit this to the Company. I have taken with me but little more than a sufficiency to answer for all deficiencies. I have bought no land in trust for me, nor have I ever conveyed or settled any part of that I had formerly, or have bought lately; it remains to answer any demands on me from the Company or the Legislature. I have withdrawn myself only to avoid the weight of the enquiry, which I found too heavy for me; and I am sensible that it would been impossible for me to have avoided the appearance of... not from my own intention to do so, but from the largeness and extent of the enquiry, and the nature and largeness of the... I am sure I am a great deal concerned to add to your present difficulties; though I must say, that I have deserved better usage than I have had from the Court the last week: But this I say without any resentment, otherwise than that it has been an addition to the weight I had before upon me.

I am pressed for time, so can only assure you that I am, with all respect, in inclination though not in power,

GENTLEMEN,

Your most obedient,

humble Servant,

ROBERT KNIGHT.

Sunday Evening,
Jan. 22. 1720.

(2) Accordingly, Francis Hawes, Receiver-General of the Customs; Sir Harcourt Master, Receiver-General of the City of London; Mr Reynolds, Commissioner of the Victualling-Office; Mr Helditch, Treasurer of the Stamp-Office; and Arthur Ingram, Treasurer of the duty on salt, were all removed from their employments.

(1) Three

1720-21. in South-Sea stock had been given, for procuring the passing the South-Sea act. After this, upon the motion of Earl Stanhope, seconded by the Lord Townshend and Earl Cowper, it was unanimously resolved, 'That the taking in of stock, the transferring of stock belonging to the South-Sea Company, or giving credit for the same, without a valuable consideration actually paid, or sufficiently secured; or the purchasing stock by any Director or Agent of the South-Sea Company, for the use or benefit of any person in the Administration, or any Member of either House of Parliament, during such time, as the late bill relating to the South-Sea Company, was depending last year in Parliament, was a notorious and most dangerous corruption.' This resolution was soon followed by another, after the examination of Mr Waller, (son-in-law to Mr Aislaby) and Mr Astell, relating to a great quantity of South-Sea stock, transferred to, and negotiated by Mr Waller, who pretended not to have kept minutes of what he had done in Exchange-Alley. This being looked upon as prevarication, it was resolved, 'That the Directors of the South-Sea Company having ordered great quantities of their stock to be bought for the service of the Company, when stock was at a very high price, and on pretence of keeping up the price of the stock; and, at the same time, several of the Directors, and other Officers belonging to the Company, having, in a clandestine manner, sold their own stocks to the Company; such Directors and Officers are guilty of a notorious fraud and breach of trust; and their so doing was one great cause of the unhappy turn of affairs, that has so much affected public credit (1).

On the 4th of February, the Lords designed to have examined Sir John Blunt, the chief Projector of the South-Sea scheme, and it was expected, he would make great discoveries: But, instead of that, he would not so much as be sworn to answer to such interrogatories, as should be put to him, alledging, that he had already been examined before the Secret Committee of the House of Commons, and to such extent of affairs, that, unless he had a copy of his examination, he could not remember every particular; and, as no man is obliged to accuse himself, he would not run the hazard of prevaricating. The Lords were surprized at this proceeding; but, upon a surmise, that Sir John Blunt might design to break the harmony, which had hitherto been preserved in this affair between the two Houses, they thought fit not to shew immediately their indignation against his obstinacy. In the debate how they should proceed in this unprecedented case, some reflections were made against the Ministry by a noble Duke, who observed, that the Government of the best of Princes was sometimes made intolerable to their subjects by ill Ministers; and alledged the example of Sejanus, who had made a division in the Imperial Family, and rendered the Reign of the Emperor Claudius odious to the Romans. This reflection was highly relented by Earl Stanhope, who undertook to vindicate the Ministry. He spoke with such vehemence, that, finding himself taken suddenly with a violent headache, he went home, and was cupped, which eased him a little. The next morning he was let blood, and continued pretty well till about six o'clock in the evening, when he fell into a drowsiness, and then into a suffocation, in which he instantly expired. The King was so sensibly touched with the news of his death, that he retired for several hours into his closet, to lament the loss of a faithful and able Minister, whose service he so much wanted at that time. The Lord Townshend was appointed Secretary of State in his room.

Two days after, Mr Secretary Craggs was taken ill of the small-pox; of which he died the ninth day, on the 16th of February. Thus, in the space of eleven days, England lost two Secretaries of State.

Mr Knight, after his escape into France, went to Brussels, from whence (not thinking himself safe there) he intended to retire to Liege. As the King had sent orders to his Ministers in foreign Courts, to make application for the seizing Mr Knight, in case he should shelter himself in the Dominions of any State in Alliance with him, Mr Gaudot, Secretary to Mr Leathes, the British Resident at Brussels, having information, that Mr Knight was going towards Louvain, applied to the Marquis de Prié, Governor of the Austrian Netherlands, who ordered a Major and sixteen Dragoons to attend him, and follow his directions. With these Gaudot sets out for Louvain, where he was informed, that two English Gentlemen had, that morning, taken the road to Tirlemont. Upon this Gaudot, with the Major and four Dragoons, hastened to Tirlemont, and, by means of a Postilion sent before to make inquiry, they put up at the same Inn where the Gentlemen had stopped. Gaudot, entering the Inn, met Mr Knight and his Companion, who instantly yielded themselves prisoners. Soon after Mr Knight's son, who had followed his father from Brussels, arrived at Tirlemont, and was also seized. They were all carried back to Brussels, and, by a warrant from the Marquis de Prié, the Major conducted Mr Knight to the Citadel of Antwerp, where he was kept in safe custody by an Officer who lay in the room with him, and four centinels without the

(1) Three days after, Mr Hawes, a Director, having been examined with some Brokers, the Lords came to the following resolutions:

1. That the Directors, &c. buying the Midsummer dividend about the 4th of January 1719-20, and paying 5 s. down, and 3 l. after the receipt of the dividend, was a fraud to the persons, with whom they contracted.

2. That the giving a premium, for the refusal of stock, at higher prices than they knew the value was, was a fraudulent artifice to raise the price of stock.

3. That promoting the third subscription at 1000 per cent. was to answer a particular end, and to cheat the public.

4. That the declaring 30 l. per cent. dividend for the half year ending at Christmas, and 50 l. per cent. per annum for no less than twelve years after, was a villainous artifice to delude and defraud his Majesty's good subjects.

5. That the declaring the Midsummer dividend to be paid in stock, when they had money by them to answer the same, was a notorious fraud, and was one occasion of the misfortunes that ensued.

1720-21. the house, and as many within, and was not allowed the use of pen, ink, and paper. His son went with him to the Citadel.

Great was the joy at the news of Mr Knight's being in custody. Addresses were presented by both Houses to thank the King for giving such effectual directions for securing Mr Knight, and to desire that orders might be given to his Ministers at Vienna and Brussels, to make proper applications that Mr Knight, with his papers and effects, might be delivered to such persons as should be appointed to receive him. Pursuant to these addresses, the King sent Colonel Charles Churchill to the Court of Vienna, to make instances for the delivering up Mr Knight; who, on the other hand, made application to the States of Brabant, for the protection of their Constitution. By an article of the Charter, called the Joyful Entry (granted by the Emperor Charles V., and sworn to by all his Successors) no person charged with, or apprehended for, any crime, can be removed to be tried out of Brabant. When therefore Mr Leathes made pressing instances with the Marquis de Prié to have Mr Knight delivered up, the States of Brabant insisted upon their privilege, and the Marquis would proceed no farther in the affair, without particular instructions from Vienna; for which purpose, Colonel Churchill was sent to that Court. In the beginning of March, the Colonel sent word, that he was just arrived at Vienna, and would immediately apply to the Imperial Court, for the delivering up Mr Knight, and did not doubt of success, unless the privileges of the States of Brabant interfered. This letter being communicated to the House of Commons, reflections were made (particularly by the Lord Melbourn) upon the frivolous pretence, used to frustrate the King's endeavours to bring over Mr Knight. But the House came to no resolution in the affair. About three weeks after, a letter from the Emperor to the King was laid before the Commons, wherein 'the Emperor expresses his inclination to comply with his Majesty's desires, but, the States of Brabant insisting on their privileges, it would be necessary to make application to them, which he would not fail to support.' In a debate on account of this letter, Mr Hutchinson represented, 'How much, on the one hand, the Public was concerned in having the Authors of the present distress fully discovered, and brought to condign punishment; and how impracticable it was, on the other, to proceed in that important inquiry, so long as the principal Agent of the South-Sea Directors, and their Accomplices, was kept out of the way; that, in the mean time, the public calamity increasing every day, the Nation called aloud for justice; and therefore, if the means already used for bringing over Mr Knight proved abortive, it were advisable to have recourse to more speedy and effectual methods.' Sir Joseph Jekyll also shewed, 'That it was incumbent on some persons in the Administration to have Mr Knight brought over, in order fully to clear their own innocence, otherwise, though acquitted, they would still be looked upon as criminal: Urging, moreover, that it was matter of wonder, that so frivolous a pretence, as the privileges of the State of Brabant, should be used, to put a stop to so important an inquiry, especially considering how little those privileges had been regarded in more material points, and what obligations the House of Austria lay under to the British Nation.' On the other hand, Mr Lechmere represented, 'That, in all probability, the Court of Vienna had not fully considered the importance of the instances made to them in his Majesty's name, and at the desire of the Commons of Great Britain: But it was to be presumed, when so wise a Prince as the Emperor should be apprized, that the welfare and safety of England depended in some measure on the delivering up of Mr Knight, he would readily comply with their desires.' Then Mr Lechmere moved for an address to thank the King for the instances he had made, by a letter under his own hand to the Emperor about Mr Knight, to express their dissatisfaction at the obstacles raised against a compliance with his endeavours, and to desire his most pressing instances for the obtaining what was thought of such importance to the justice due to his people. This address was agreed to and presented to the King, who assured them, he would continue to use his utmost endeavours for obtaining what they desired, and hoped they would prove effectual. But, notwithstanding all this, before the Emperor had sent any instructions to the Marquis de Prié, Mr Knight found means to make his escape out of the Citadel of Antwerp.

The Committee of Secrecy, appointed to look into all the proceedings relating to the execution of the South-Sea act, made their first report to the House of Commons the 16th of February. On that day Mr Henry Crugge died. At the entrance into their enquiry, they observed, the matters referred to them were of great variety and extent. Many persons were intrusted with different parts in the execution of that act, and, in an unwarrantable manner, disposed of the properties of many thousands of persons, amounting to many millions. In the progress of their inquiry they found it attended with many difficulties.

In some of the books, false and fictitious entries were made; in others, entries with blanks; in others, entries with razures and alterations; in others, leaves torn out. They found, some books had been destroyed, others secreted: However, they were enabled to lay some matters of importance before the House.

The first matter, that occurred to their consideration, was a scene of iniquity and corruption, the discovery of which they conceived to be of the highest concern to the honour of Parliaments, and the security of the Government.

It appeared, that, before the passing the South-Sea act, and before any subscription could be made, a fictitious stock of no less than 574,000 l. had been disposed of by the Directors, in order to facilitate the passing the bill. This stock was set down as sold at several days, and at several prices, from 150 l. per cent. to 325 l. per cent. (amounting in all to 1,259,325 l.) and was from those times to be esteemed as holden of the Company, for the benefit of the pretended Purchasers, though no mutual agreement was then made for the delivery or acceptance of the stock at any certain time, and though no money was paid down, nor any security given for payment by the supposed Purchasers. So, if the price of stock had fallen, no loss could have 1720-21. been sustained by them; but, if it should advance, the difference was to be made good to the pretended Purchasers. As this fictitious stock was designed for promoting the bill, the Sub and Deputy-Governors, Sir John Blunt, Mr Gibbon, Mr Chester, Mr Holditch, with the Cashier Mr Knight, had the disposal of this stock, of which the following particulars were taken for several persons:

For the Earl of Sunderland, at the request of Mr Craggs, senr.	50,000
For the Ducheſs of Kendal	10,000
For the Counteſs of Platen	10,000
For the Counteſs's two Nieces	10,000
For Mr Craggs, ſenr.	30,000
For Charles Stanhope	10,000
For the Sword-blade	50,000

The difference of the laſt parcel amounting to 250,000*l.* was ſuppoſed to be paid to Mr Charles Stanhope by Sir George Caſwal and Company; but that Sir George ordered the name Stanhope to be partly erased out of the book, and made Stangape. It alſo appeared, that Mr Aſſlabie, Chancellor of the Exchequer, had great quantities of South-Sea ſtock given him; but that his affairs were chiefly managed by Mr Edmund Waller, his ſon-in-law, and Mr Weymondſel, a Broker: That Mr Aſſlabie's laſt account with Turner, Caſwal and Company, was 794,451*l.*: That 68,000*l.* part thereof, was paid in caſh to Mr Waller, as was alſo 44,600*l.* more by a bond of Caſwal and Company; and 33,000*l.* by another bond of Caſwal and Company, was paid to Mr Weddall: That Mr Aſſlabie, as a Commiſſioner of the Treafury, had 4000*l.* in the firſt money-ſubſcription; but that as ſoon as it came to bear an advance of about 40 per cent. he had 20,000 more: That no warrant was found for making the ſecond money-ſubſcription more than one million; but that afterwards ſome of the leading Directors, by the advice of Mr Aſſlabie, made it 500,000*l.* more: That the third money-ſubſcription at 1000*l.* was promoted by Mr Aſſlabie, whoſe liſt amounted to 70,000*l.* the Earl of Sunderland's liſt to 160,000*l.* Mr Secretary Craggs's liſt to 659,000*l.* and Mr Charles Stanhope's to 47,000*l.* That Mr Aſſlabie likewiſe adviſed the lending money on ſtock; and that the Directors ſold part of the pawned ſtock at high prices; but that of 2,800,000*l.* that ſhould have been transferred by Mr Knight to four of the Directors, there appeared to be but 2,400,000*l.* ſo that there was 400,000*l.* ſtock wanting. The Committee obſerved, that, in the account of ſtock ſold, they found the names of ſeveral Members of Parliament, not concerned in the Adminiſtration, whole caſes they could not particularly examine, without the direction of the Houſe in what manner to proceed. The Report ended, with an account of the divers practices uſed to raiſe the nominal value of South-Sea ſtock, to the extravagant rate to which it was afterwards advanced above the real value (1). This Report was followed by fix others, and, at the cloſe of the laſt, the Committee ſaid, they were under a neceſſity of ending their inquiry, by reaſon of the abſence of Mr Knight, who appeared to have been principally and in many inſtances ſolely intruſted in the execution of the black and deſtructive South-Sea ſcheme.

Soon after the firſt Report, the Commons having taken it into conſideration, came to theſe reſolutions:

1. That the late Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Directors of the South-Sea Company, and their Officers, and their Aiders and Abettors, in lending out the Company's money upon

(1) As this part of the report gives a brief hiſtory of all the contrivances for ſupporting the ſcheme, it will not be improper to infer it at large:

Your Committee find, that, by computation made by their direction, it appears, that the Directors of the South-Sea Company might have raiſed the whole ſum ſtipulated for the Public, with a profit of near one million and an half for the benefit of the Proprietors of the old ſtock, without ſetting their ſtock to ſale at any higher price than 150*l.* per cent.

That after the ſaid Directors had taken in the firſt money-ſubſcription at 300*l.* per cent. and the ſecond money-ſubſcription at 400*l.* per cent. and the firſt ſubſcription of the long and ſhort annuities at 375*l.* per cent. the value of 100*l.* South-Sea ſtock was but 120*l.* or thereabouts, ſuppoſing the whole money of the ſaid firſt and ſecond ſubſcriptions (amounting to 12,750,000*l.*) had been all paid in.

That the ſaid Court of Directors did afterwards proceed to take in a third and a fourth money-ſubſcription at the rate of 1000*l.* per cent., and a ſecond ſubſcription of the long and ſhort annuities, and a ſubſcription of the redeemable debts at the rate of 800*l.* per cent. after which the value of 100*l.* South-Sea ſtock was but 332*l.* or thereabouts, ſuppoſing the whole money of the ſaid four money-ſubſcriptions (amounting to 68,750,000*l.*) had been all paid in.

That, if all the remaining public debts had been taken in, and all the remaining ſtock of the Company ſold, on the terms which the ſaid Directors pretended to expect, 100*l.* South-Sea ſtock would have been worth but 547*l.* or thereabouts, ſuppoſing the money of the ſaid four ſubſcriptions, and the money for the remaining ſtock (which together would have amounted to 205,039,401*l.*) had been all paid in.

That, on the 30th day of Auguſt laſt, the Court of Directors of the South-Sea Company came to a reſolution (which on the 8th day of September laſt was confirmed by a General Court) to declare a dividend of 30*l.* per cent. to be made at Chriſtmas 1720, and of not leſs than 50*l.* per cent. per ann. for not leſs than twelve years to come from that time.

That ſoon after this reſolution (viz. at a General Court held the 20th day of September laſt) the Sub-Governor acquainted the General Court, that the affairs of the Company, in relation to the price of their ſtock, and ſubſcriptions, had taken an unexpected turn, and thereupon propoſed their giving a power to the Court of Directors to relieve the laſt Subſcribers of the public debts, and the Proprietors of the two laſt money-ſubſcriptions, which was accordingly granted; and, at a Court of Directors held the 29th day of September laſt, it was reſolved, That the ſaid Subſcribers ſhould have the ſame terms with the Bank, viz. That their ſubſcriptions ſhould be reduced from 1000*l.* and 800*l.* per cent. to 400*l.* and that they ſhould alſo have the benefit of the Midſummer dividend of 10*l.* per cent. which was accordingly confirmed by a General Court held the 30th day of the ſame month; upon which your Committee obſerves, That it appears to them very extraordinary, that the Directors on the 8th day of September (when the ſaid high dividend was declared in a General Court) ſhould have had no foreſight of the turn which ſo ſoon after (viz. on the 20th day of the ſame month) happened in their affairs.

1720 21.

upon stock and subscriptions, without taking security for repayment thereof, have been guilty of a notorious breach of trust, and have thereby occasioned great loss to the Company, for which they ought to make satisfaction out of their own estates.

2. That the selling or disposing of stock or subscriptions, transferred or deposited as a security for the repayment of the money so lent, was a notorious breach of the trust reposed in the Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, Directors, and their Officers, and a fraud on the Proprietors, in order to enrich themselves; for which they ought to make satisfaction out of their own estates.

3. That the taking in or holding of stock, by the South-Sea Company, for the benefit of any Member of either House of Parliament, or person concerned in the Administration, during the time that the Company's proposals, or the bill thereto relating, were depending in Parliament, without any valuable consideration paid, or sufficient security given for the acceptance of, or payment for, such stock; and the Company's paying or allowing such person the difference arising by the advanced price of the stocks, were corrupt, infamous, and dangerous practices, highly reflecting on the honour and justice of Parliaments, and destructive of the interests of his Majesty's Government.

4. That any of the Directors of the South-Sea Company selling their own stock at high prices to the Company or others, at the same time, that they gave orders for buying stock upon account of the Company, under pretence of keeping up the nominal value of the stock, was a scandalous practice, tending to enrich themselves, to the great loss and detriment of the Company, and of others his Majesty's subjects, for which they ought to make satisfaction out of their own estates.

5. That the declaring a dividend of 30 per cent. for Christmas last, and not less than 50 per cent. per ann. for not less than twelve years after, was an infamous contrivance to give his Majesty's subjects false notions of the value of the stock, that the Directors might more easily dispose of their own stock at exorbitant prices.

6. That the setting the stock of the South-Sea Company to sale by subscriptions, at high prices, above the intrinsic value of the same, by the Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Directors of the Company, was a gross and notorious fraud; and has been one great cause of the sinking of the public credit, and bringing upon the Nation the distress it at present labours under.

7. That the advising the Sub Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Directors of the South-Sea Company, to set the stock of the Company to sale by subscriptions at high and extravagant prices, or to declare the high and extravagant dividends for Christmas last, and twelve years after, by any persons in the Administration, was a notorious

That, on the said 8th day of September, the Sub-Governor acquainted the General Court, that their Directors had been unanimous in all their proceedings, which, amongst other things, includes the before-mentioned several subscriptions by them taken in, except the first; and upon the examination of the Directors it doth not appear to your Committee, that any one of them protested against, or declared any public dissent from any of the said proceedings; and it appears, that all of them took their shares and proportions of the subscriptions, which were allotted for the respective Directors to dispose of.

And your Committee have been informed by Sir Theodore Janssen, that there was a meeting at the house of Sir John Fellows, betwixt sixteen of the Court of Directors, Mr Secretary Craggs and Mr Aylmer, at which time it was proposed, that a subscription should be taken in at 300 l. per cent. which was approved of by Mr Secretary Craggs, and Mr Aylmer; and that, when the said Company broke up, it was agreed, that every person should use their best endeavours to promote it; which is also confirmed by the information of Sir Lambert Blackwell.

And, at a Court of Directors held the 13th day of April last, it was resolved to take in a subscription for two millions, at the rate of 300 l. per cent. but the same was afterwards increased, without any previous resolution to that purpose, to 2,250,000 l. and your Committee observe, that the imaginary value of the said subscriptions rose very fast; and that those who had the benefit of the said additional subscription, if they sold, and disposed of the same, made very great gains thereby.

That, at a Court of Directors held the 28th day of April last, it was resolved to take in a second money-subscription, at the rate of 400 l. per cent. for 1,000,000 l. but, by the accounts delivered into this House, it appears, that the said subscription was for 1,500,000 l. yet it does not appear that there was any previous resolution of the Court of Directors for the addition of 500,000 l. nor was the said addition declared till the 8th of September last, at which time the Sub-Governor acquainted the General Court therewith; upon which your Committee cannot but observe the great distance of time between the taking in of the second subscription at 1,000,000 l. and the 8th of September, when the same was reported to the General Court at 1,500,000 l. during which interval the imaginary value of that subscription was excessively increased, whereby the persons, who had the same, had the advantage of that extraordinary rise.

That, at a Court of Directors held the 15th day of June last, it was resolved to take in a third money-subscription at the rate of 1000 l. per cent. one tenth part whereof was to be paid down at the time of subscribing; and, at a Court of Directors held the 23d day of the same month, the Sub-Governor acquainted the Court, That the said third money-subscription was completed, without mentioning to what sum; but at the before-mentioned General Court, held the 8th day of September last, he declared the same to be for five millions; and Mr Knight, late Cashier of the South-Sea Company, by an article dated the 20th day of June last, in the cash-book, fol. 125, charges the said sum of five millions as received; which account was passed, and allowed by the Company's Committee of Treasury, on, or some time after the 4th day of August last; and yet, in the account of the third money-subscription delivered in to this House, it is stated at 4,400,000 l. only the remaining sum of 600,000 l. being entered on the credit side of the said cash-book on the 19th of December 1720, as a supposed deficiency of the payment on this subscription; although it appears to your Committee upon the evidence of Mr Lockyer, and others, that not only the whole sum of five millions, but even a considerable exceeding thereon was paid in; that a great deal of money was repaid back to reduce the subscription to five millions; and that they had money enough paid in for near eight millions.

That, at a Court of Directors held the 12th day of August last, it was resolved to take in a fourth money-subscription for one million, at the rate of 1000 l. per cent. And, at a Court of Directors held the 25th of the same month, it was declared, That, upon calling up the books, it was found the said fourth money-subscription, 1720-21. notorious breach of the trust reposed in them, to the prejudice of his Majesty's Government, and the interest of the Kingdom.

8. That the entry in the cash-book of the South-Sea Company of 574,500 l. stock, pretended to be sold for 1,213,575 l. between the 4th of February, 1719, and the 12th of April following, was contrived with a design to conceal the names of persons, for whose benefit stock was taken in by the Company.

9. That every person, for whom stock was taken in or held, such stock being part of the 574,500 l. pretended to be sold by the South-Sea Company, from the 4th of February 1719, to the 12th of April, without money paid, or sufficient security given for the acceptance of, and payment for such stock, be obliged to pay to the Company all such sums of money, as have been received by way of difference, or otherwise, for such stock.

10. That the addition of 250,000 l. to the first money-subscription, after it had been declared to have been opened for two millions, and the addition of 500,000 l. to the second money-subscription, after it had been declared to be opened for one million, were fraudulently contrived to give corrupt advantages to particular persons, and were injurious to public credit.

Upon these resolutions, a bill was brought in, for the relief of the unhappy Sufferers in the South-Sea Company.

Mr Stanhope, one of the Secretaries of the Treasury, having been charged, in the Report of the Secret Committee, for having large quantities of stock and subscriptions held for him, pressed the House, that a short day might be appointed to examine the matter, that he might have an opportunity to clear himself. A day being appointed, several of the Directors and others were ordered to attend, who were examined concerning the charge against him, consisting of two articles: 1. That 10,000 l. South-Sea stock was taken in for his benefit by Mr Knight, without any valuable consideration; and that the difference, arising from the advanced price thereof, had been paid him out of the cash of the South-Sea Company. 2. That Turner and Company had bought 50,000 l. stock at a low price of the South-Sea Company, in the name, and for the benefit of Mr Stanhope, the difference of the advanced price whereof, amounting to 250,000 l. had been paid him by Sir George Caswall and Company. To prove these articles, the Secret Committee caused the examinations of Sir John Blunt, Mr Holditch, Mr Sawbridge, Mr Henry Blunt, and others, to be read, and those subscription, instead of one million, was increased to 1,250,000 l. which was occasioned by taking the said subscription in several books; and at the before-mentioned General Court, held the 8th day of September last, the Sub-Governor declared the fourth money-subscription was completed to 1,250,000 l. And Mr Knight the Cashier hath, in an article dated the 30th day of August last, and entered in the cash-book, fol. 128, given the Company credit for the first payment made on the fourth subscription, viz. for 2,500,000 l. which account was passed, and allowed by the Committee of Treasury on the 4th day of October last; and yet, in the account of the said fourth money-subscription delivered into this House, it is stated at 1,200,000 l. only: That upon the examination of Mr Knight, and several of the Directors, in relation to the deficiency of the said third and fourth money subscriptions, their answers were very unsatisfactory: And your Committee cannot but observe, That as, by the before-mentioned additions to the first two money-subscriptions, some persons made great gains, whilst the price of the said subscriptions continued high; so, when the price of the subscriptions fell, many other persons were favoured, by having their subscriptions withdrawn, which was the cause of the deficiency.

That on the second money-subscription each Director was allowed, for himself and friends, 26,000 l. and that the remainder of the million, at first resolved to be taken in, was at the disposal of the Sub and Deputy-Governors; but, for whose benefit the additional subscription of 500,000 l. was intended, your Committee have not yet been able to discover.

That on the third money-subscription each Director was allowed 54,000 l. for himself and friends; and that several large lists of the names of persons were sent to the Sub-Governor, to be admitted into the said third subscription; viz. by the Earl of Sunderland, first Lord Commissioner of the Treasury, a list amounting to 167,000 l. by John Aylmer, Esq; late Chancellor of the Exchequer, another of the Lords of the Treasury, a list amounting to 75,300 l. by James Cragg, Esq; one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, two lists, amounting to 695,000 l. and by Charles Stanhope, Esq; one of the Secretaries of the Treasury, a list amounting to 49,700 l. Which four last mentioned lists amount to 987,000 l.

That, upon examination, it appears, that other lists have been given in, as well on the third as on the second subscription; but, the same being lost or mislaid, as your Committee have been informed, they are thereby disabled, at present, from making any report thereon.

They find 25,000 l. of the second subscription hath been given unto John Aylmer, Esq; about eight or ten days after the opening of that subscription, at which time the subscriptions were at an advanced price, of about 40 l. per cent. and soon after rose vastly higher.

That it doth not appear to your Committee that any of the persons, who had the honour to serve his Majesty in the Treasury, or in any other part of the Administration, used any endeavours to prevent the Directors of the South-Sea Company from taking in subscriptions at the aforesaid extravagant prices; but on the contrary it doth appear, that some of them, by the lists they gave in as aforesaid, did not only encourage and promote the said subscriptions, but did greatly enlarge the same.

Your Committee observing that Sir John Fellows, late Sub-Governor of the South-Sea Company, did at a General Court of the said Company, held the 21st of April, 1720, acquaint that Court, that the design of the Government's million of Exchequer-bills to be lent to the Company, by virtue of the late Act of Parliament for issuing Exchequer-bills to be circulated at or near the Exchequer, was to enable the Company to lend money upon their stock; and finding that by order of the Court of Directors of the said Company the same had been so lent out, your Committee proceeded to enquire into this affair.

And on the examination of Mr Robert Knight, late Cashier of the said Company, he declared, that he did not remember that any application was made by the Directors to have those bills issued; but that the first discourse of this matter was by John Aylmer, Esq; then Chancellor of the Exchequer, a week before the proposals of the South-Sea Company were offered to this House; that Mr Aylmer said, it would be more acceptable to have those bills circulated at the Exchequer, than to send them to the Bank or elsewhere, and that the Company might afford to circulate them for nothing, they being to be lent to the Company to enable them to execute their scheme. That the Examinant believed, the intention of lending the said bills upon stock had been communicated to Mr Aylmer, and that he (the Examinant) on his attending at the Treasury to solicit the issuing of these bills, did mention those persons themselves to be examined; but some of them rather weakened than confirmed their former depositions. Sir John Blunt, in particular, owned, as to the first article, that Mr Knight had shewn him a letter, which he told him was signed by Mr Stanhope, desiring him to take 10,000 l. stock for him; but that he did not know whether that letter was genuine, nor what was become of it: And, as for the 50,000 l. stock transferred to the Sword-blade Company in Mr Stanhope's name, Mr Sawbridge and Mr Turner owned they had made use of Mr Stanhope's name without his privity or consent. After the examinations, and the animadversions of the Members of the Secret Committee, Mr Stanhope said, 'That, for some years past, he had lodged all the money he was master of in Mr Knight's hands, and whatever stock Mr Knight had taken in for him, he had paid a valuable consideration for it. And as for the 50,000 l. he could not answer for what had been done without his consent.' When the question was put, whether he was concerned in the manner represented by the two articles, he was cleared, though by three voices only, 180 against 177. A few days after, Sir George Caswall having been heard in his place, it was resolved by the Commons, 'That it appeared to the House, 1720 21 that Sir George Caswall, one of the Copartners of Turner and Company, and a Member of the House, did, on the 14th of December 1720, after the House had begun to inquire into the conduct of the Directors of the South Sea Company, order Daniel Watkins, one of the Book-keepers of Turner and Company, to erase, in several places of the books, the name of Stanhope, and to make the same Stangape, which was accordingly done.' After this and some other resolutions concerning him, a bill was ordered to be brought in, to make the estates real and personal of Sir George Caswall, Jacob Sawbridge, and Elias Turner, answerable for 250,000 l. to the South-Sea Company, the advanced price of the forementioned 50,000 l. South-Sea stock.

The case of the Earl of Sunderland was also taken into consideration. By the report of the Secret Committee it appeared, that 50,000 l. stock had been taken by Mr Knight for the Earl's use, without any thing paid, or security given for payment for the same. The House seemed to be intent upon the inquiry: A warm dispute arose, and much was said for and against him: But, upon the question, the vote passed in his favour, by a majority of 233 against 132. Not-tion that design, and never heard that the Treasury disapproved of it.

That Sir John Blunt declared it would be better to employ those bills in the lending upon stock, than in paying of the redeemables, which would take up more time.

Hereupon your Committee examining Sir John Fellows, he said, that he and others of the Directors treated with Mr Aylmer and others at the Treasury about the issuing the said Exchequer-bills; but that it was first proposed to Mr Aylmer, and the Examinant believed, it was at first mentioned by Sir John Blunt, in a Committee of the Directors, and that it was the general opinion of the Directors.

Your Committee examining Sir John Blunt upon this transaction, he declared, that he spoke to Mr Aylmer to hasten the issuing of the said bills; and that himself, or some other of the Directors, acquainted Mr Aylmer (as he believes at the Treasury) with the Company's design to lend them upon stock; that it did not at first arise from the Directors, but that it was intimated to them before, or very soon after the Company's proposals were laid before the House, by some of the Treasury, and on recollection, the Examinant said, it was by Mr Aylmer, to enable the Company to carry on their business, and thereby to raise the price of their stock, the borrowers being enabled to buy stock.

That, by the book of loans delivered in to this House, it appears that the sum of 9,039,936 l. 11 s. was lent to several persons on the security of 2,567,117 l. 17 s. 5 d. stock: And that the further sum of 2,219,089 l. was lent on the security of 773,600 l. subscription-receipts; the money so lent, and still remaining due, amounting in the whole to the sum of 11,259,025 l. 11 s.

That by several resolutions of the Court of Directors of the 21st of April, the 20th of May, and the 9th of June last, for three several loans, it appears, that the sum, resolved by them to be lent on stock from the 21st of April to the 21st of May, was limited to 500,000 l. in the whole, and that not more than 5000 l. should be lent to any one person, and such loan to be only at the rate of 250 l. on 100 l. stock; that, from the 20th of May to the 9th of June, the rule of lending was at the rate of 300 l. on 100 l. stock; and that not more than 3000 l. should be lent to any one person; and, from the 9th of June, the rule of lending was at 400 l. on 100 l. stock, and that not more than 4000 l. should be lent to any one person.

That, on examination of the books of loans, it appears, that on the first loan the rules of lending were greatly exceeded, viz. That there was lent in the whole 943,631 l. more than the sum of 500,000 l. to which the said loan was confined. That the excess above 250 l. on 100 l. stock, amounts to 316,740 l. and the excess above 500 l. to one person, amounts in the whole to 779,231 l. That on the second loan the excess above 250 l. on 100 l. stock amounts to 39,750 l. and the excess above 500 l. to one person, amounts in the whole to 169,025 l. And that on the third loan the excess above 400 l. on 100 l. stock amounts to 59,473 l. and the excess above the rate of 400 l. to one person, amounts in the whole to 1,447,677 l. For the particulars of all which your Committee refer to the book marked No IV. in which the same are more fully expressed, and the resolutions of the General Court, and Court of Directors, in relation to loans, are transcribed.

That your Committee do not find any resolution, either of a General Court, or a Court of Directors, for lending money on subscription-receipts; but, by the examinations which they have taken, it appears, That Mr Knight, the late Cashier of the South Sea Company, and his Under-Cashier and Clerks, by his directions, did lend money on the subscription-receipts, by verbal orders from the Directors of the said Company, and under colour of an order of a General Court, made the 21st of April 1720, to empower the Court of Directors from time to time, as they shall see for the interest of the Company, to lend any sum or sums of the Company's money, on the Company's present and to be increased capital stock; and to do all such matters and things, as they should judge most for the good of the Company.

But your Committee find, that by the second by-law of the said Company, relating to the keeping the cash of the Company, it was ordained, That the cash of the Corporation should from time to time be kept under three several locks, with different wards, the keys of which to be kept, one by the Cashier, and the other two by such of the Governor, Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governors or Directors, as the said Court should from time to time appoint, except such sum or sums as the Court of Directors should think necessary to let remain in the custody of the Cashier; and no money relating to the trade or affairs of the said Company should be disposed of, without an order of the said Court of Di-1720-21. Notwithstanding this, it was generally thought, the Secret Committee need not have accused the Prime-Minister, if the charge had not been at least probable. The Earl did not lose the confidence of his Master, though he resigned his post of First Commissioner of the Treasury, which was given to Mr Walpole, as one of the most capable to hold it in such critical circumstances.

Mr Aillabie expelled the House.

Mr Aillabie did not escape so well as the Earl of Sunderland. When that part of the Report of the Secret Committee, which related to Mr Aillabie, came to be considered, Mr Hawes's deposition against him, 'That he had caused the book of accounts between them to be burnt, and given him a discharge for the balance, amounting to 842,000*l.*' appeared so strong, that the Commons came to several resolutions against him, particularly, that he had promoted the destructive execution of the South-Sea scheme, with a view to his own exorbitant profit, and combined with the Directors in their pernicious practices, to the ruin of the public credit; and therefore he was expelled the House, and ordered to be committed to the Tower,

Mr Craggs sent down.

Mr Craggs would have been called to an account on the 17th of March, but he happened to die the day before of a lethargic fit, leaving behind him an immense estate to be divided among his three daughters, who were married to three Members of Parliament, Mr Trefusis, 1720-21. Mr Newsham, and Mr Elliot. About six weeks after his death, the Commons having taken Mr Craggs's affair into consideration, it was resolved that a large quantity of South-Sea stock had been held by the Company for his use, and that he was a notorious accomplice with Robert Knight, and some of the Directors, in carrying on their scandalous practices; and therefore that all the estate, he was possessed of from the 1st of December 1719, should be applied towards the relief of the unhappy Sufferers in the South-Sea Company,

The Directors having delivered in the inventories of their estates, it was debated what allowance should be given them. Mr Lowndes proposed an eighth part: But it was objected, such an allowance would be too much for some who had the largest estates, and consequently had been deepest in the guilt; and too little for others who had but small estates, and were only passively criminal, by not entering their dissent to the fraudulent management of the rest. It was at last agreed, that the affair of each Director should be particularly considered, and more or less favour shewn, according as they should appear more or less guilty. The Commons began with the Sub and Deputy-Governors, and proceeded alphabetically to the rest. The value of their estates, as given in upon oath, amounted rectors; and that the interest of all other advantages, arising and growing upon the cash of the said Company, should be brought to the account of the said Company. However, it appears that the said loans on subscriptions were generally known, and never objected against, by any of the Directors in a General Court, or in any Court of Directors.

Allowedances to the South-Sea Directors out of their estates.

That, on the said loans on stock, the stock was transferred to persons for that purpose nominated in the same manner as if the same had been absolutely sold, without any defeasance on the part of the Company, or of the persons to whom the stock was transferred, for re-transferring the same, on repayment of the money; nor was any covenant or other security taken, for repayment from the Borrowers, except the stock so transferred; nor doth there appear any distinction between the said transfers on loans, and the other transfers, which were made of stock absolutely purchased, on account of the Company: Upon which your Committee observe, that it was in the power of the persons, to whom the said pawned stock was transferred, to dispose thereof at any time, as they thought fit, when the price of stock was high, and to replace the same when it fell.

And your Committee do find, that, on the 19th day of October last, the said Mr Knight, to whom the said pawned stock was transferred, did, pursuant to an order of the Court of Directors, transfer stock to the amount of 2,141,867*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* to Sir Harcourt Masters, Colonel Hugh Raymond, Edward Gibbon, and John Gore, Trustees, for that purpose nominated by the Court of Directors, in whose names the same now remains; but the sum is 421,250*l.* short of the aforesaid sum of 2,563,117*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* which is mentioned in the said book of loans to have been pledged for the security of the repayment of the aforesaid sum of 9,039,936*l.* 11*s.* from which it is evident, that the said sum of 421,250*l.* of the stock mortgaged or pawned on loans, as aforesaid, has been sold, or otherwise disposed of, by the Trustees, or Agents of the South-Sea Company; and, till replaced, cannot be re-transferred to those, by whom the same was pawned or mortgaged: Upon which your Committee observe how easy it was for the Trustees of the Company to have sold the said stock, when it was at high prices, and to have replaced the same again when it fell; for on examination it appears, that there was no distinct and separate account kept of the said mortgaged and pawned stock, nor was the same any ways distinguished from the other stock of those persons, to whom it was at first transferred.

That, as to the said sum of 2,219,087*l.* lent on 773,600*l.* subscription-receipts, it appears by the aforesaid book of loans, that the general rule of lending was at the rate of 300*l.* on 100*l.* subscription-receipts; but, excluding from the said loans on subscriptions the two great loans, the one to the million-bank, and the other to Turner and Company, the loans to the other Borrowers will at an average come out above 300*l.* per cent. It appears that on the first subscription-receipts, at the time of the said lending, there was paid in only from 90*l.* to 120*l.* per cent. and on the second subscription-receipts generally 40*l.* and on some few 80*l.* per cent. but how much more there hath been paid in since, or whether all the said subscription receipts on which money was lent be now remaining in the custody of any person for the security of the Company, your Committee cannot at present discover, the receipts not having been as yet produced to them.

That it appears that Turner and Company were employed by the Directors, to lend out 500,000*l.* on subscription-receipts, and that they accordingly lent 150,000*l.* on such receipts, after the rate of 190*l.* per cent. on the first subscription, and 40*l.* per cent. on the second. But, such rates being by the said Directors thought too low, the said Turner and Company were ordered to proceed no farther in disposing of the remaining part of the said 500,000*l.* and were told at the same time, that by lending at such low rates on subscriptions, they were ruining the stock. And it also appears, that Mr Knight did issue a considerable sum to be disposed of by Brokers, for the refusal of South-Sea stock at certain times, at very high prices; and likewise, that, on the declension of the price of the stock, large sums were issued to purchase stock, on account of the Company, at very high prices; and part of the stock then bought appears to have belonged to some of the Directors of the said Company. And although your Committee are not yet prepared to set this matter in a full light, they cannot but observe, that the said Directors, in all their proceedings in the execution

ed to about 2,014,000*l.* of which 334,000*l.* was left to the Proprietors (1).

Mr Aislaby's affair occasioned debates proportionable to his great riches, and the multitude of his friends. He was allowed all the estate he was possessed of, on the 20th of October 1718. His country-house, gardens, and park, with his wife's jewels, and household-goods, were also excepted from the forfeiture.

Soon after, an act passed for raising money upon the estates of the Sub and Deputy-Governors, Directors, Cashier, Deputy-Cashier, and Accountant of the South-Sea Company, and of Mr Aislaby and Mr Craggs, towards making good the damages sustained by the Company, and for disabling such of these persons, as were living, to hold any place, or sit in Parliament, for the future.

When the motion was made in the House of Commons, for joining Mr Aislaby in the same bill with the Directors, his friends represented the hardship of putting a man of his eminence on the same level with them, and the danger of such a precedent: But it was to no purpose, for the motion was approved. Mr Aislaby, when the bill was depending in the House of Lords, petitioned to be heard by his Counsel. He was himself heard at their bar, and made two very long and eloquent speeches in his defence, but they met with more applause than success, for the bill passed as sent up by the Commons.

After these proceedings against the Managers of the South-Sea scheme, the Commons, with the same moderation and wisdom, applied themselves to repair the mischiefs, that scheme had produced, and at several times came to the following resolutions:

I. That, for the re-establishing of public credit, relief be given to the South-Sea Company, with regard to the payment of the 4,156,306*l.* and the four years and a half's purchase on the annuities and other national debts, the Company giving such consideration to the Proprietors, as the House shall think proper.

II. That, in order to put an end to all disputes between the Company and the Proprietors of the redeemable funds, and of the second, third, and fourth money-subscriptions, who have stock allowed them at 400*l.* per cent. with the Midsummer dividend, an addition of 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* be given to the Proprietors by the Company.

III. That the seven millions, payable to the Public by the Company, be remitted so, as, from the 24th of June 1722, two millions of the stock be annihilated, and a proportionable part of their annuity or yearly fund from that time, cease.

IV. That the second subscription of the irredeemables be made equal to the first, by an addition of stock at 150*l.* per cent.

V. That all the stock belonging to the Company, which, after the proposed distribution, execution of their scheme, appear to have had chiefly in view the raising and supporting the imaginary value of the stock, at an enormous price, to the benefit of themselves, and those who were in the secret with them.

That, as to the aforesaid loans on subscription-receipts, it appears, there were no discharges executed by those with whom the receipts were deposited, for a re delivery of the same, on repayment of the money, nor any security given by the Borrowers, besides the receipts by them so delivered; nor doth any thing else appear to distinguish the receipts so pledged from such receipts as were, or might have been, absolutely sold to the Company; for all the said receipts were made out in one name, viz. Joseph Safford, and by his indorsement the bearer became intitled to the property thereof: Upon which your Committee observe, the security of the Company, as to the money lent on the said subscription-receipts, is more precarious than the loans on stock; for by the transfer-book it might appear by whom such stock was transferred; but it hath not yet appeared to your Committee that any books have been kept, or entries made, of the names of the persons to whom such loans have been made on subscription-receipts: And your Committee do farther observe, That it was in the power of the persons, with whom such subscription-receipts were deposited, to sell the same at high prices, and to replace them again when the price fell. And upon the whole it doth appear to your Committee, that the said loans on stock, and on subscriptions, have been managed with the utmost negligence, with respect to the interest of the Company, and were contrived for the raising and keeping up the price of stock at an extravagant height.

Before your Committee concludes this report, they think it proper to observe, That it has appeared to them throughout their examination, that Mr Knight, Cashier of the South-Sea Company, was principally concerned in their most secret transactions. And your Committee have been informed by Sir Thodore Janßen, soon after Mr Knight's withdrawing himself, That upon his pressing Mr Knight, two or three days before he went away, to make a discovery of whatsoever he knew relating to the whole proceedings; Mr Knight answered, that, if he should disclose all he knew, it would open such a scene as the world would be surprized at.

(1) The debates in the Grand Committee about settling the allowances were as follow:

They began with Sir John Fellows, the Sub-Governor, in whose behalf Mr Sleper moved, 'That, since it did not appear, that he had been so active in the late vile and pernicious practice, as some others, he might be allowed 20,000*l.* out of his estate.' Mr Hungerford reduced it to 15,000*l.* others to 12,000*l.* and Mr Walpole having at last proposed 10,000*l.* it was agreed to without any division. Mr Joye, the Deputy-Governor, appearing to have been deeply concerned in the guilt, it was agreed to allow him only 5,000*l.* The same sum was allowed Mr Astell: And the question being put to allow Sir Lambert Blackwell 10,000*l.* some proposing only 5,000*l.* it was carried for the former by a majority of four voices, one hundred and twelve against one hundred and eight. The allowance to Sir John Blunt occasioned a long debate. Mr Laurence Carter moved to allow him one shilling only; the Lord James Cavendish, 1,000*l.* Mr Plummer, 5,000*l.* Sir Joseph Jekyll, 10,000*l.* which was seconded by General Roffe, the Lord Millsworth, Mr Jeffreys, and Mr Windsor: But Mr Sleper, Mr John Smith, Mr Horace Walpole, and Mr Milner, were of opinion, that he ought to be most severely punished. Mr Sleper said, That he was grown to that height of pride and insolence, that he could not give a civil answer to persons far above him; instancing in his behaviour one day at the Treasury, when, a relation of a great man asking Sir John, in his (Mr Sleper's) hearing for a subscription, Sir John, with a great deal of contempt, bid him go to his cousin Walpole, and desire him to sell his stock in the Bank, and by that means he might be supplied.' Mr Walpole entered fully into Sir John Blunt's life and character, and shewed, that he had been a projector of many years standing, and had been the Author of several fallacious schemes, by which unwary people had been drawn in to their utter ruin, particularly 1721. shall remain undisposed of, shall be divided among the Proprietors.

VI. That such Persons as have borrowed money of the Company upon South-Sea stock, or upon subscription-receipts, shall, upon payment of 10 l. per cent. be discharged from all future demands.

VII. That all contracts for the sale or purchase of subscriptions or stock of the South-Sea Company, or any other, which shall be unperformed before the 29th of September next, be entered in books before the 1st of November next, or else be void.

VIII. That no special bail be required for any action brought upon any contract, since the 1st of December 1719, for the sale or purchase of any subscription or stock.

IX. That no execution be awarded, or any judgment obtained in any such action, till the end of the Session of Parliament, which shall be next after the 29th of September ensuing.

X. That all contracts for the sale or purchase of any subscription or stock, unperformed before the 29th of September next, where the Seller, or the person on whose behalf such contract was made, was not, at the same time of such contract, or within a time to be limited, actually possessed of or intitled to such subscription or stock, shall be declared null and void.

With these resolutions, the Commons presented to the King an address, demonstrating both the necessity and wisdom of their proceedings, and which deserves to be inserted at large:

'We your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Great-Britain in Parliament assembled, being sensibly affected with the misery and calamities, that have befallen great numbers of your Majesty's faithful subjects, occasioned by the heavy losses they have sustained, from the fatal execution of the South-Sea scheme; and taking into our serious consideration the low state of public and private credit, which it seems impossible to us should ever revive under the present uncertain and unsettled posture of affairs, have come to several resolutions, which we humbly beg leave to lay before your Majesty.

When we first entered upon the consideration of this extensive and perplexed affair, we thought it most advisable to leave every man's property to be determined by due course of law, and were of opinion, that no relief or abatement could properly be prescribed or given, but from the South-Company. But, the discontents of the people daily increasing, and the uncertain and doubtful events, that threatened very great and valuable properties, creating such infinite anxieties and dissatisfaction, as had a most fatal and general influence upon all public and private credit, the interposition of Parliament became unavoidable, and we found ourselves under a necessity of refusing the consideration of this nice and intricate matter, and to endeavour to remove, as far as possible, the chief and greatest inconveniencies.

The great difficulty in remedying these mischiefs seemed to arise from the several contending interests engaged in the South-Sea Company, which made it impossible to give relief to some but at the expence of others: And as all the new Proprietors, as well those concerned in the public funds, as the other Adventurers, were equally imposed upon by the artifices of the late Directors, and equally drawn in by their own too great credulity and desire of gain; to have discharged any particular sett had been not only an injustice to the rest, but, by dissolving the whole system, had involved them in utter ruin, which made a distribution of losses, and some abatement to all, absolutely necessary. It was indeed very much to be wished, that such ease could have been given to the Proprietors of the public debts, as would have made their property as valuable to them, as they had enjoyed it for many years: But as they had voluntarily consented to take stock at some rate or other, even particularly in a project for the linen manufacture. To this Mr Horace Walpole added, 'That was not the fact; for there was a Gentleman, who sat next to him, meaning Mr Jesse, whom Sir John Blunt had drawn into a project for bringing water to London from a great distance, which was to out-do the New River water; by which the Subscribers lost all their money, though Sir John himself got some thousands by it.' This Mr Jesse confirmed. However, the Lord Hinchinbroke moved for allowing Sir John Blunt 10,000 l. but the question being put for allowing him 1,000 l. it was carried in the affirmative by a majority of one hundred thirty-eight against ninety-four.

at

The next allowance in debate was for Sir Robert Chaplin, for whom the Lord Molesworth, Sir John Eyles, and other Members spoke; and it was agreed, without dividing, to allow him 10,000 l. The same allowance was given to Sir William Chapman, Mr Chester, and Mr Cibd. A motion being made to give Mr De la Porte the like sum, the Lord Molesworth was for reducing it to 7,000 l. but upon the question it was carried for 1,000 l. by a majority of one hundred and fifty against sixty-nine. The case of Mr Francis Eyles appeared in so favourable a light, that he was allowed 20,000 l. without dividing. Mr Edmondson's estate amounting to little more than 5,000 l. it was moved to allow him the whole, and leave him out of the bill; but, after some debate, it was agreed to allow him only 3,000 l. The question being put to allow

Mr Gibbon 15,000 or 10,000 l. it was carried for the latter without dividing. It appearing, that Sir William Hammond and Mr Gore had little or no share in the fraudulent contrivances of the leading Directors, Mr Gore was allowed 20,000 l. and Sir William Hammond 10,000 l. It was proposed to give Mr Hawes, late Receiver-General of the Customs, 1,000 l. But, Sir Nathaniel Gould and some other Members having observed, that he was very active in the late vile practices, and had occasioned the ruin of many people, Mr Ducminique moved, and it was agreed to allow him only 31 l. the odd money of his inventory. Several Members spoke in favour of Mr Horsey, particularly the Lord Hinchinbroke and Sir Robert Rich, who moved for allowing him 10,000 l. which was carried without a division. It was then debated, whether to allow Mr Holditch 500 l. 1,000 l. or 5,000 l. The voices were equally divided, eighty-six and eighty-six; upon which Mr Clayton, the Chairman, gave the casting vote for 5,000 l. which met with general approbation. Mr Horace Walpole and Sir Richard Steele spoke in favour of Sir Theodore Janßen, and were answered by General Rosse and the Master of the Rolls. But, after a small debate, Mr Trenchard moved for allowing him 50,000 l. which was carried by a majority of one hundred and thirty-four voices against one hundred and eighteen. Sir Jacob Jacobson's case coming next under consideration, Mr Hungerford moved for allowing him 11,000 l. which was all his estate, except 1721. at the time when they saw the stock raised to the highest pitch, the giving stock at one and the same price to them and all others, that were most immediately concerned, make the provision as just and equitable, as the nature of the thing will admit; it being impracticable, so far to remove the two different interests in this general concern, as to make the conditions of trade equal, that had engaged themselves at different rates, and upon unequal terms.

481 l.

The great and principal mischiefs arise from several concurring circumstances; from the hard terms of sale of the Proprietors, occasioned by the high price at which they had purchased stock, or the excessive rates, at which, as well the Proprietors of Public debts, as the Money-lenders, had obliged themselves to take stock; from the demand of above seven millions, payable to the public, which could only be raised out of the properties of those, that were already too great sufferers, and which rendered the Company incapable of giving them any farther ease or relief; from the disputes and contests at law, which were preparing to be carried on, not only between the Company and the Subscribers of the redeemable funds, but between infinite numbers of private persons engaged in contracts for the sale and purchase of stock and subscriptions; from the impossibility of the Money-subscribers making any farther payments; from the great loss the Company had sustained by the late Directors, having lent out above eleven millions of the Company's money, without any, or without sufficient security; and from the very little prospect of recovering any considerable part thereof; without which it was impossible for the Company to comply with the demand of the Public, but at the infinite expence and insupportable loss of all their Adventurers, which must have proved destructive to the trade and credit of the Kingdom.

These considerations induced us to come to the foregoing resolutions; being, as we conceive, the most proper means to enable the Company to give relief to such of their Proprietors, as most wanted and deserved it; to put an end to all disputes at law; and to fix, settle, and ascertain the several properties and interests of all persons concerned with the South-Sea Company; to deliver infinite numbers of your Majesty's good subjects from the apprehension of vexatious law-suits and prosecutions, and from the farther demand of such excessive sums of money, as must sink and deprecate all public and private credit.

And as the greatest mischiefs, which we now

481 l. and it was agreed to without a negative. Mr Ingram's case being much the same, Mr Pulteney moved for allowing him 10,000 l. near three parts in four of his estate; and, being seconded by the Lord Hinchinbroke, it was carried without dividing. Sir John Lambert was allowed 5,000 l. without a division, as was Sir Harcourt Masters, and Mr John Sturt 1,800 l. near his whole estate. Mr Page had an allowance of 10,000 l. without dividing. Mr Hosham moved for allowing Colonel Raymond 30,000 l. and, being seconded by Mr Tufnel, the Attorney-General, and Mr Hungerford, no opposition was made to that motion. Mr Sloper moved for allowing Mr Read 10,000 l. He was seconded by Sir John Ward and Mr Dominique; and the motion carried without a debate; as was the allowance of 14,000 l. to Mr Reynolds. Mr Hungerford moved for allowing Mr Saubridge 10,000 l. and was opposed by Mr Lennox, the Lord Boleworth, Sir Adolphus Oughton, and Mr Horace Walpole. But another Member moving for 5,000 l. it was agreed to without a division. Mr Tillard had in like manner an allowance of 15,000 l. and Mr Turner 800 l. which was near his whole estate. The case of Mr Surman, the Deputy-Cashier, occasioned a debate of about an hour and a half. He had not the best character amongst the offenders; but, acting only as a servant, and by the command of Mr Knight, or the Directors, several Members thought there should be a mitigation in his punishment, as there was no crime. Mr Lord North attended, and made it, that he might be let out of the bill. Another Member would have allowed him 30,000 l. Mr Hungerford would have reduced it to 20,000 l. Mr Lechmere to 12,000 l. and two other Members to 10,000, and 5,000 l. All these were opposed by Sir Joseph Jekyll, Serjeant Pengelly, and Mr Horace Walpole, who would not have allowed him above 20 or 30 l. but at last the question being put for allowing him 5,000 l. it was agreed to without dividing. Mr Arthur Moore moved for allowing John Grigby, Accountant to the South-Sea Company, 10,000 l. But another Member said, 'That, since that uplift was once so prodigally vain, as to bid his coachman feed his horses with gold, no doubt but he could feed on it himself: And therefore he moved he might be allowed as much gold, as he could eat; and that the rest of the money might go towards the relief of the sufferers.' However a motion being made for allowing him 2,000 l. it was carried without dividing.

The particulars of the estates and allowances were as follow:

	Inventories.			Allowances.
	l.	s.	d.	l.	s.	d.
Sir John Fellows, Sub-Governor	243,096	00	06	10,000	00	00
Mr Charles Jere, Deputy-Governor	40,105	02	00	5,000	00	00
Mr Astell	27,750	19	08	5,000	00	00
Sir John Blunt	18,241	10	00	1,000	00	00
Sir John Blackwell	4,549	10	11	1,000	00	00
Sir Robert Chaplin	45,875	14	05	1,000	00	00
Sir William Chapman	39,161	06	08	10,000	00	00
Mr Chester	140,372	15	06	10,000	00	00
Mr Child	52,437	19	01	10,000	00	00
Mr Delaport	17,151	04	06	10,000	00	00
Mr Eyles	31,370	16	07	20,000	00	00
Mr Edmondson	5,365	00	00	3,000	00	00
Mr Gibbon	100,513	05	06	10,000	00	00
Mr Gore	38,400	15	06	2,000	00	00
Mr Hawes	40,031	00	02	31	00	02
Sir William Hannon	27,000	04	00	10,000	00	00
Mr Hays	10,000	05	03	10,000	00	00
Mr Hatched	3,500	10	04	5,000	00	00
Sir Isaac Jacobson	24,000	00	00	50,000	00	00
Sir Jacob Jacobson	11,400	00	00	11,000	00	00
Mr Ingram	16,795	00	00	12,000	00	00
Sir John Lambert	72,508	01	05	5,000	00	00
Sir Harcourt Masters	11,814	12	03	1,800	00	00
Mr Morley	1,869	10	03	1,800	00	00
Mr Page	31,817	12	03	10,000	00	00
Mr Raymond	64,373	06	03	30,000	00	00
Mr Read	117,297	16	00	10,000	00	00
Mr Reynolds	18,368	13	02	14,000	00	00
Mr Saubridge	77,254	07	08	5,000	00	00
Mr Tillard	19,175	14	04	15,000	00	00
Mr Turner	881	10	00	00	00	00
Mr Surman, Deputy-Cashier	121,321	10	00	5,000	00	00
Mr Grigby	31,687	06	00	2,000	00	00

Some alterations were afterwards made in these allowances. Mr Astell had 10,000 l. instead of 5,000 l. Sir John Blunt 5,000 l. instead of 1,000 l. Sir Lambert Blackwell 15,000 l. instead of 10,000 l. and Mr Hawes 5,000 l. instead of 31 l. A motion was made to reduce Sir John Blackwell's allowance to 30,000 l. but it was rejected.

1721. so justly complain of, have arisen from the unwarrantable methods used by the late Directors of the South-Sea Company, in selling and disposing of such part of their increased capital stock, as belonged to the Company; to remove such a foundation of stock-jobbing, and to prevent the like fatal consequences for the future, we thought it necessary to take care, that all the increased capital stock belonging to the Company, which, after the proposed distribution is made, shall remain undisposed of, be divided among all the Proprietors of the Company, in proportion to their several and respective interests.

These resolutions, if passed into a law, and duly put in execution, we humbly hope will tend very much to the re-establishing of public credit, to the quieting of the minds of your Majesty's subjects, and contribute to the ease and relief of great numbers, though not sufficient to give satisfaction to, or repair the losses of all that are unhappily involved in the present calamity.

But, as the ancient usage and established rules of Parliament make it impracticable for us to prepare bills for the Royal assent, during the present Session of Parliament, for some of the purposes contained in our resolutions, we have humbly presumed to lay the same before your Majesty for your Royal consideration; not doubting but that your Majesty will, out of your great wisdom and accustomed grace and goodness to your people, as soon as the public and private bills, now depending in Parliament, shall be dispatched, give us an early opportunity of perfecting this great and necessary work.

The King returned for answer, 'That he had such an entire confidence in the Parliament's duty and affection to him, and their zeal for the public service, that he should very readily comply with what they desired, and would soon give them opportunity of doing what they proposed for settling and establishing the credit of the Kingdom.'

The next day being the 29th of July, the King came to the House of Peers, and, passing the bills that were ready, the Lord Chancellor prorogued the Parliament for two days only to the last of July, when the King came again to the House of Lords, and made the following speech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THE occasion of my calling you together again, so suddenly, is to give you an opportunity of resuming the consideration of the state of public credit.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

The progress, that you made in this affair during the last Session, laid such a foundation of this necessary work, that the world is fully apprised of what is reasonably to be hoped for at this present conjuncture.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I must recommend to you all possible dispatch, and am persuaded, that at this season of the year your deliberation will be confined to what is absolutely necessary upon this extraordinary occasion.'

Pursuant to this short speech, the Commons came again to their former resolution, and ordered a bill to be brought in under the title of, 'A bill for making provisions to restore public credit, which suffered by the frauds and mismanagements of the late South-Sea Directors and others.'

This bill was formed upon the forementioned resolutions, and it may here be observed, that the whole capital stock, at the end of the year 1720, amounted to above 37,800,000*l.* and the stock, allotted to all the Proprietors in their several shares, did not amount to 24,500,000*l.* The remaining capital stock, being about 13,300,000*l.* belonged to the Company in their corporate capacity, and was the profit arising from the execution of the South-Sea scheme, and out of which the seven millions was to be paid to the Public.

When this scheme was blown up, and the calamities and ruin attending numberless families appeared, the Parliament, in favour of the unhappy Sufferers, by the present act directed several additions to be made to the stock of the Proprietors out of the stock possessed by the Company, in their own right; and made a particular distribution of stock, which amounted to above 2,200,000*l.* and upon remitting five millions of the seven, that was to be paid to the Public, annihilated two millions of their capital, which was inflicting upon the payment of two millions: Then they enacted, that, after these distributions, the remaining capital stock should be divided among all the Proprietors which came to 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per cent. and this took from the Company above 8,900,000*l.*

There was then due, and owing to the Company, above eleven millions for money lent by them on stock unredeemed, and of this the Parliament discharged all the Debtors to the Company upon paying 10*l.* per cent. (which some did comply with, and others refused) and the loss to the Company was upon this article above 6,900,000*l.*

This act gave some relief to the Sufferers, and the cries and lamentations of undone multitudes were less heard, but the Proprietors of the stock loudly complained of the two millions taken from them: Upon which (as will hereafter be related) the Parliament, in 1723, revived the two millions that had been annihilated, and directed it to be distributed among the Proprietors which made an addition of 6*l.* 5*s.* to every man's capital.

Whilst the affair of the South-Sea was depending in Parliament, petitions from Counties, Cities, and Boroughs were sent up, crying for justice, and pamphlets were daily published, exasperating the minds of the people against the South-Sea Directors and their Abettors. But the loudest cries for justice were contained in letters directed to the Author of the London Journal, and supposed to have been mostly penned by Mr Gordon, under the borrowed name of Cato (1).

The

(1) A Committee was appointed to inquire into the Authors, Printers, and Publishers of seditious libels. No. 98. VOL. IV.

1721.
General Court of Sept. 1.

The affairs of the South Sea being thus settled, the Company were soon in condition to satisfy their engagements with the public. On the 11th of September a General Court was held, which Sir John Eyles, the Sub-Governor, opened with a speech, setting forth the regulations of the Parliament, without which the Directors would have been involved in difficulties insuperable, and confusions without end. He enlarged upon his Majesty's care of their interests in the late treaties with Spain, and upon the advantages that might be gained by the Assiento contract, to which end the Directors were fitting out the Royal George, whose cargo amounting to 280,000*l.* was loaded. He acquainted them with the intention of carrying on a trade hitherto not meddled with by the Company, the Greenland trade, so beneficial to Holland and Hamburg. He then told them, that the forfeited estates of the late Directors, and the 10*l.* per cent. on the borrowed stock, with some other particulars, were abundantly sufficient for discharging the debts of the Company, and maintaining the credit of their bonds: That therefore the Directors had discharged part of the bonds due at Christmas, and hoped to give a speedy determination to the rest, that so their credit might be established upon a solid foot: That the Court of Directors had also resolved to divide (if thought fit) 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in stock upon the present capital. That, as all the remaining stock was, by act of Parliament, to be divided equally among the Proprietors, the Directors had, in great measure, executed that appointment, amounting, upon a calculation, to 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* upon every 100*l.* capital. After this, he mentioned the Company's being empowered, by a late act, to ingraft part of their stock into the capitals of the Bank and East-India; but, as the act for restoring public credit had adjusted the concerns of the Company upon a new foot, he only barely mentioned the ingraftment.

This speech met with applause, not only in the Court, but from the Public; and the matters contained in it were agreed to, except the affair of the ingraftment, which was left. At this Court it was unanimously resolved, that the Directors should take the most effectual measures to oblige the Bank to stand to their contract, for taking stock at 400*l.* per cent. in lieu of the 3,775,000*l.* the Company was to have paid them; and the contract was ordered to be registered.

During these proceedings concerning the affairs of the South-Sea Company, the following transactions passed in the Parliament.

There was formed (at least, it was pretended Hell-Fire-Club) a scandalous Society at London, with the shocking name of the Hell-Fire-Club. The Members whereof were guilty of the like extravagancies with the Mobacks, formerly mentioned. Several persons of Quality, particularly the Duke of Wharton, were marked out as belonging to this Club. The King, being informed of their wicked proceedings, published a proclamation (April 29) against blasphemous and scandalous Clubs, declaring, he was determined to shew all marks of displeasure to any, who even lay under the suspicion of such destructive practices. He gave orders also to the Officers of his Household, to make strict inquiry, whether any of his servants were guilty of such horrid impieties. The same day this order was given, the Earl of Nottingham, who had lately returned from France, took the occasion to complain, in the House of Lords, of the growth of atheism, profaneness, and immorality. Upon this, Dr Verney, Lord Willoughby of Brooke, Dean of Windſor, brought in a bill for suppressing blasphemy and profaneness. It contained several articles, which had little relation to the practices complained of, and was chiefly designed to secure the belief of the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England, and restrain the liberty granted by the laws of the former Session to the Non-conformists. The substance of it was:

I. If any one spoke or writ against the Being of God, the Divinity of Jesus Christ, or the Holy Ghost, or the Doctrine of the Trinity, as set forth in the thirty-nine articles, or the Truth of the Christian Religion, or the Divine Inspiration of the Scriptures, he should, upon conviction,

They sent for Mr Peele, Publisher of the London Journal, and for the reputed Author of the letters, but Adit, the Printer and Publisher of a Weekly Journal, was, for reflections cast on the King for his interpolations on behalf of the Protestants in the Palatinate, sentenced to stand in the Pillory, to pay a fine of fifty pounds, and after three months imprisonment to give security for his good behaviour seven years. His Journal was carried on under the title of Fog's, and two months after (May 27) was censured again by the Commons as a traitorous libel, tending to alienate the affections of his Majesty's subjects, and excite Rebellion. However, the Journal continued many years afterwards.

(1) About the latter end of March, a full Convocation of the University of Oxford unanimously resolved, That the solemn thanks of the University should be returned to the Earl of Nottingham, for his most noble defence of the Christian Faith, contained in his answer to Mr Whiston's letter to him, concerning the eternity of the soul. Adit, the Printer and Publisher of a Weekly Journal, was, for reflections cast on the King for his interpolations on behalf of the Protestants in the Palatinate, sentenced to stand in the Pillory, to pay a fine of fifty pounds, and after three months imprisonment to give security for his good behaviour seven years. His Journal was carried on under the title of Fog's, and two months after (May 27) was censured again by the Commons as a traitorous libel, tending to alienate the affections of his Majesty's subjects, and excite Rebellion. However, the Journal continued many years afterwards.

Wing, Chipping-norton, and Henley. The Archdeacon of Hereford, and forty-five of the Clergy, signed an address of thanks to the Earl, wherein they hinted, that he had asserted the Convocation to be a part of the Parliament. The same was done likewise by the Clergy of Chesler and Shropshire. About the same time Mr Joseph Hall, Mace-bearer to the King, and Justice of the Peace, was sentenced to stand in the Pillory, to pay 200*l.* fine, to lie three months in prison, and give security also for seven years, for his seditious reply to Mr Higgs's merry argument for the Trinitheistical Doctrine of the Trinity.

In May, the King published directions to the Arch-Bishops and Bishops, for the preservation of unity in the Church, and the purity of the Christian Faith, particularly in the Doctrine of the Trinity. They were required to see, That no Preacher whatsoever, in his sermon, or lecture, do presume to deliver any other doctrine, concerning the great and fundamental truths of our most holy Religion, and particularly concerning the blessed Trinity, than what are contained in the Holy Scriptures, and are agreeable to the three Creeds, and to the doctrine of the Persons in the Trinity to be God, &c. were to be incapable of any office, and to suffer imprisonment three years.

1721. viction, be imprisoned many months, unless he should, within such a time, publicly renounce his error, in a form prescribed.

II. If any Preacher in a separate Congregation should deny any of the fundamental articles of the Christian Religion, he should be deprived of the benefit of the act of Toleration.

III. The Archbishops in their Provinces, and every Bishop in his Diocese, should be authorized to summon any person in Holy Orders, to appear before, and subscribe the declaration above-mentioned, and upon refusal, such person should be incapable to hold any Ecclesiastical benefice.

IV. The Justices at their Quarter-Sessions are authorized, in like manner, to summon any Dissenting Preacher, and upon his refusal to subscribe the Declaration of Faith, he should be deprived of the benefit of the act of Toleration.

At the second reading of this bill (May 2) all the Lords about London being summoned to attend, the Archbishop moved to have it committed. Upon which the Lord Onslow said: 'He was as much against Blasphemy, and for promoting Religion, as it is professed in the Church of England, as any body; but he could not be for any law, that was for Persecution, of which nature he took this bill to be; and therefore he moved, that it might be thrown out'. He was seconded by the Duke of Warton, who said, 'He was not insensible of the common talk and opinion of the town concerning himself, and therefore he was glad of this opportunity to justify himself, by declaring, he was far from being a patron of Blasphemy, or any enemy to Religion; but, on the other hand, he could not be for this bill, because he conceived it to be repugnant to the Holy Scripture.' Then, taking an old family Bible out of his pocket, he quoted and read several passages of the Epistles of St Peter and St Paul; concluding, That the bill might be thrown out. He was supported by the Duke of Argyle, and the Earls of Sunderland and Illy, the Lord Townshend, and Earl Cowper. The Earl of Peterborough said, 'Tho' he was for a parliamentary King, yet he did not desire to have a parliamentary God, or a parliamentary Religion: And, if the house were for such a one, he would go to Rome, and endeavour to be chosen a Cardinal; for he had rather sit in the Conclave, than with their Lordships upon those terms.' Dr Kenner, Bishop of Peterborough, spoke likewise on the same side, and said, 'That neither himself, nor, he hoped, any of that Bench, would be executioners of such a law, which seemed to tend to the setting up of an Inquisition.' On the other hand, the Earl of Nottingham, the Lord Balburst, the Bishops of London, Winchester, Lichfield and Coventry, and some others, spoke for the bill; as did likewise the Lord Trevor. One of these having said, 'That he verily believed, the present calamity, occasioned by the South-Sea project, was a judgment of God on the blasphemy and profaneness the Nation was guilty of.' The Lord Onslow replied, 'That noble Peer must then have been a great sinner; for he heard, he had lost considerably by the South-Sea.' After some other speeches, the bill was put off to a long day, by a majority of 60 voices against 21.

The Supplies were, contrary to custom, granted very late, and not with the usual readiness. The King, not to increase the ill humour, had not mentioned the Subsidy he was obliged, by the last year's treaty, to give Sweden for her support against Russia. However, on the 16th of June, he thought proper to send the following message to the House of Commons:

'His Majesty, having taken the first opportunity, upon the death of the late King of Sweden, to renew the antient Alliances between this Kingdom and Sweden, and having stipulated by a treaty to pay a Subsidy to that Crown, hath ordered that treaty to be laid before the House of Commons; and hopes from their known zeal and affection for the Protestant Religion, and the true interest of their Country, that they will enable him to make good the engagements he has entered into upon this occasion.

His Majesty being informed, that two ships called the Bristol Merchant and Turkey Merchant (now lying under quarantine) did arrive from Cyprus, and other parts of Turkey, infected with the plague, and have cotton wool and other goods on board, which are dangerous to spread the infection; and conceiving it necessary for the preservation of the health of his subjects, that these ships and their ladings be burnt and destroyed, and that a reasonable satisfaction be given to the owners, hath, by advice of his Privy-Council, caused the value thereof to be computed by his Majesty's Officers, and ordered those computations to be laid before the House of Commons, that provision may be made for satisfying the same.'

This message occasioned a long debate. Mr Shippen, Sir William Wynham, Sir Joseph Jekyll, the Lord Moleworth, Mr Butler, and some others, desired to know, 'Whether we were to give 72,000*l*. (for that was the Subsidy) to Sweden, besides the maintaining a great fleet, with six thousand seamen in the Baltic, which they thought a sufficient charge to the Nation, without paying so great a subsidy? Urging, that, before this last treaty with Sweden, there had been a rupture between the two Nations, and hostilities, and great depredations committed by the Swedish Privateers on our Merchants; so that, before any Subsidy be given to that Crown, accounts ought first to be stated and settled, and it might appear upon the balance, that Sweden is indebted to us.' To this it was answered by Mr Walpole and his brother, Mr Lechmere, the Lord Barrington, and some others, 'That the Subsidy allowed to Sweden by this last treaty, and the Squadron sent to their assistance, was no more than had been stipulated by former engagements; but that the subsidy was not like to be demanded any more, the preliminaries of the peace between the Czar of Moscow and the Crown of Sweden being in a manner settled. Neither did the King desire any new tax for it, the land and malt tax being sufficient to answer all this year's expence.' Mr Walpole added, 'He was extremely glad, he could at the same time acquaint the House, that his Majesty's endeavours to procure a general peace had been so successful, that an advantageous treaty with Spain was actually agreed on and signed.' The Lord Moleworth observed, 'That he would go as far as any man to maintain and support the honour and dignity of the Crown of Great-Britain; but that, on the other hand he was not for squandering away unnecessarily the small remainder of the wealth of the Nation. That by our late conduct we were become the Allies of the

the whole world, and the bubbles of all our Allies; but, when we have occasion for our Allies, we are obliged to pay them well? And to that purpose, he instanced in the Dutch troops, that came over to our assistance in the Rebellion in 1715. He added, 'That, as to our Alliances with Sweden, it was a matter of great intricacy and nicety, because the treaties, which England has at several times made with Sweden, are partly contradictory.' He then entered into a detail of the treaties of Roschild and Travendal made in the Reigns of King Charles II. and William III. 'That the engagements lately entered into with the Crown of Sweden were likewise, in some measure, contrary to the Treaties subsisting with Denmark; particularly as to the securing to the Duke of Holstein the Duchy of Sleswick; and directly opposite to the measures formerly concerted with the Czar of Moscow, in order to engage him to check the fierceness and ambition of the late King of Sweden: And therefore, in order to engage the Czar to yield what he had gained, it were but just, that the King of Prussia should give up Stettin, and the Elector of Hanover, Bremen and Verden. He owned, that the distressed condition, to which the Swedes had been reduced, was really worthy of compassion: But that, on the other hand, it must be considered, they had been, in great measure the authors of their own misfortunes by their tame submission to a despotic tyrannical Prince, and by sacrificing their whole substance to enable him to carry on his unjust, rash, and ambitious designs; and that any Nation who followed their example, deserved the same fate. To this purpose he took notice of the hard usage of the subjects of Mecklenburgh from their Prince, which he insinuated to have been one of the causes of the late rupture with the Czar; but that, after all, England ought not to intermeddle with the affairs of the Empire: That the getting naval stores for our shipping was the main advantage we reaped from our trading in the Baltic: And he owned, that Linn was a very necessary commodity, particularly at this juncture; but that, if due encouragement were given to some of our Plantations in America, we might be supplied from thence at a much cheaper rate than from Sweden and Norway.' Mr Lechmere distinguished himself also on this occasion; but the Subsidy was at last granted by a majority of 100 yeas to 40 nays. A Supply was also given to satisfy the owners of the ships that were to be burnt, on account of their being suspected to be infectious.

Notwithstanding this warm debate about the Swedish Subsidy, the King sent, about three weeks after, another message to the Commons, relating to the debts of the Civil List.

His Majesty finds it necessary to acquaint his loyal House of Commons with the difficulties he labours under, by reason of debts contracted in his Civil Government; which, being computed at Lady Day last, do amount to more than 550,000 l.

If the provision, made by an act of the last Session of Parliament for discharging this debt, had not hitherto proved in a very great degree ineffectual, his Majesty had not been under a necessity of applying again to Parliament upon this occasion. But being resolved to cause a retrenchment to be made of his Civil List expences for the future, and finding, that such a retrenchment cannot well be effected, without discharging the present arrears, has ordered the accounts thereof to be laid before the House, and hopes he may be empowered to raise ready money for that purpose on the Civil List revenues, which, to avoid laying any new burden on his people, his Majesty proposes shall be replaced to the Civil List, and reimbursed by a deduction to be made out of the salaries and wages of all officers, and the pensions, and other payments from the Crown.' After the reading of this message, Mr Shippen stood up, and made a long speech, wherein he took notice of 'this new and unusual method of asking for money, not from the Throne, and at the beginning of a Session, as it had always been the custom in the former Reigns; but now, by a message, towards the end of the Session, when most of the Members were gone home. Look round about the House, Gentlemen, said he, and see how few Members are present, when a business of this consequence is to be debated.' But, besides the unseasonableness of the time, he observed, 'That this message was no less extraordinary as to another circumstance; for, whereas the ways and means of raising Supplies were always left to the Commons, here, not only the sum, but the way of raising it, was pointed out to them, which was making the House a perfect parliament of Paris. That, if things were brought to that pass, it might be easy for any King, whenever he thought fit, to make himself arbitrary and absolute Master of our liberties and properties; concluding, he was sure, that the Gentleman who had advised the asking for such a sum in that manner, would have been of a quite contrary mind two years ago; but that it was usual for men's judgments to alter as their interests lead them.' Mr Shippen was answered by Mr Walpole, who shewed the occasion and the reasonableness of the King's message, the tenderness and regard he expressed in it for the ease of his subjects, and the necessity of complying with his desires. He was seconded by Mr Lowe, who said, that six-pence in the pound on all the Civil List funds would answer the purpose. But Mr Pulteney, and Sir Josiah Jekyll were of opinion, that it would not do, and therefore moved for one shilling in the pound; adding, that, if this were too much for the present occasion, the overplus might go towards the discharge of the public debts. Mr Steele agreed with them, and upon this last consideration moved for one shilling and six pence in the pound; and that the tax might extend to all military Officers, whose pay was above ten shillings a day. But this motion was dropped, and after some other debates it was at last agreed, that 500,000 l. should be raised for the debts of the Civil List, by a deduction of six pence in the pound out of salaries, wages, pensions, and other payments from the Crown. For this purpose a bill passed both Houses, and received the Royal assent. At the same time passed also an act for a general pardon.

The act for restoring public credit was passed the 10th of August, when the King came to the House of Peers, and concluded the Session with the following speech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

'I Am glad, that the business of this, and the former Session, is at length brought to such a period, that I have now an opportunity 1721.

The Parliament began Aug. 1

1721. 'tunity of giving you some relief, after the great pains you have taken in the service of the Public.

'The common calamity, occasioned by the wicked execution of the South-Sea scheme, was become so very great before your meeting, that the providing proper remedies for it was very difficult. But it is a great comfort to me to observe, that public credit now begins to recover, which gives me the greatest hopes, that it will be entirely restored, when all the provisions, you have made for that end, shall be duly put in execution.

'I have great compassion for the sufferings of the innocent, and a just indignation against the guilty; and have readily given my assent to such bills, as you have presented to me, for punishing the Authors of our late misfortunes; and for obtaining the restitution and satisfaction due to those, who have been injured by them, in such a manner, as you judged proper. I was at the same time willing and desirous, by my free and general pardon to give ease and quiet to the rest of my subjects, many of whom may, in such a general infatuation, have been unwarily drawn in to transgress the laws.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

'I return you my hearty thanks for the Supplies you have granted for the current service of this year, and particularly for your enabling me to discharge the debts and arrears on the Civil List, and to make good the engagements I was under for procuring peace in the North, which, in all probability, will now very soon be concluded. These instances of your faithful endeavours to support the honour and dignity of the Crown at home and abroad, are fresh marks of your zeal and affection to my person and Government.

My Lords and Gentlemen.

'I take this opportunity of acquainting you, that we have renewed all our treaties of commerce with Spain, upon the same foot as they were settled before the late war, which must necessarily prove an immediate and valuable advantage to the trade and manufactures of this Kingdom.

'I earnestly recommend to you all, in your several stations, to suppress profaneness and immorality, and to preserve the peace and quiet of the Kingdom.

'You are all sensible that the discontents occasioned by the great losses that many of my subjects have sustained, have been industriously raised and inflamed by malicious and seditious libels: But I make no doubt, but that, by your prudent conduct in your several Countries, all the enemies of my Government, who flattered themselves they should be able to take advantage from our misfortunes, and blow up the sufferings of my people into popular discontent and disaffection, will be disappointed in their wicked designs and expectations.'

The zeal of the Parliament deserved the praises bestowed by the King, for having in great measure restored the public credit, when under such difficulties, and his thanks, not only for the Supplies for the service of the year, but for the discharge of the Civil List debts, and the Subsidy to Sweden. The King was sensible of the injurious suspicions raised on his account with regard to the South-Sea Company: The Emperor's refusal to deliver up Mr Knight, and the favour shewn to the Directors and their Abettors, were considered as his work, and greatly increased the number of the disaffected. Hence it was that he strongly expressed his apprehensions, that the enemies to his Government would endeavour to blow up the sufferings of the people into discontent, that the Members of Parliament might be the more zealous to disappoint their designs.

After the speech the Parliament was prorogued to the 19th of October.

During those proceedings, several changes had been made in the Ministry. Mr Walpole (as has been said) was made First Commissioner of the Treasury, and Chancellor of the Exchequer (1). The Lords Townshend and Carteret were appointed Secretaries of State. The Earl of Illy was made Privy-Seal of Scotland, and the Earl of Bute a Lord of the Bed-Chamber.

Whilst the Parliament was employed in settling affairs at home, the King had continued his Negotiations abroad, and ended them with success.

On the 13th of June, N. S. the treaty of Peace between Great-Britain and Spain was signed at Madrid. It contained only six articles, by which all the regulations with regard to commerce, agreed upon by the former treaties, were renewed; and both the contracting parties promised to execute it with the utmost sincerity, and to renounce all interpretations, which had been made use of to restrain and to weaken these Conventions. They engaged to restore mutually all the effects seized and confiscated on both sides. His Britannic Majesty, in particular, was to restore all the ships of the Spanish fleet, which had been taken by that of England, in the action near Sicily, with the Guns, sails, rigging, &c. in the same condition, in which they then were, or the value of them, if they were sold.

The decision of the other difficulties and pretensions was referred to the congress of Cambray. It was stipulated likewise, that the publication of this treaty should be deferred till the general peace, which was negotiating at Cambray, or some other agreement should be made. It was, however, to take place immediately after its being ratified, and the letters of which ratification were to be exchanged in six weeks, or sooner, if possible. To these was added a secret

(1) The other Commissioners of the Treasury were Bailie, Turner, Edgeworth, and Pelham. Mr Horatio Walpole was made Secretary of the Treasury: and Edward Carteret and Gafridu Walpole, Post-Master General. Benjamin Mildmay, Brother to the Lord Numb. XCIX. Vol. I. IV.

Fitzwalter, was made a Commissioner of the Excise, and Charles Stanhope, Treasurer of the Chamber to the King. Hugh Fortescue was called up to the House of Lords by the title of Baron Clinton.

1721. cret article, by which King George promised not to interfere any longer in the affairs of Italy, and the King of Spain made an absolute cession of Gibraltar and Port-Mabon.

The same day another treaty was signed at Madrid, which was little expected: It was a defensive Alliance between Great-Britain, France, and Spain; by which they were to defend the Dominions of each other, wherever situated, as they were fixed by the treaties of Utrecht, Baden, and London. Each of the Allies was to furnish him, who should have occasion for assistance, or be attacked, with 8000 foot and 4000 horse, or an equivalent in money and ships.

One design of this Alliance was the maintenance and observation of the treaty, which was to be made at Cambray, in order to terminate the differences between the Emperor and King of Spain.

Their Britannic, most Christian, and Catholic Majesties (said the fifth article of this treaty) being entirely satisfied with the sentiments, the Duke of Parma has always shewn towards them, and being desirous to give him marks of the singular esteem and affection they have for him, promise and engage, by virtue of the present treaty, to grant him a particular protection for the preservation of his territories and rights, and for the support of his dignity; so that, if he shall be disturbed, they will join their good offices and endeavours to obtain a just satisfaction; and, if that be refused, they will agree upon measures to procure it him by all other methods, which shall be in their power.

The States-General were, on the first opportunity, to be invited to enter into this treaty; and it was promised to maintain the treaty of defensive Alliance, made at the Hague, the 4th of January 1717, and that nothing should be done, either directly or indirectly, to the prejudice thereof.

Congress of Cambray
fruitless.

The Congress at Cambray, to which all the difficult points were referred, was at last opened. The Ambassadors of England and France had the title of Mediators, and were to terminate the numberless differences between the Courts of Vienna and Madrid; but they could not succeed, the demands on both sides being so opposite. The Imperial Ministers talked in so high and decisive a strain, that there was no treating with them: 'All the pretensions of their Master were incontestable, and equity itself; to oppose or contest them, was attacking his sacred Majesty.' It was thus they expressed themselves, in speaking of the pretensions of the Duke of Parma, who had insisted, That the Emperor and Empire had no right to exercise any superiority over the Duchies of Parma and Placentia. The Imperial Ministers declared, 'They were amazed the Duke of Parma should have the assurance to draw up such a memorial, and engage the Mediators to present it to them. It violates (said they) the respect due to his Imperial Majesty, by denying, he has any sovereignty over the Duke. The Mediators should have suppressed such unreasonable pretensions, which they neither could regard, nor had time to discuss. If the Duke had any just complaints to propose, and would represent them with respect to the Imperial Court, they would undoubtedly be treated there with equity.'

The Mediators answered, that the terms used by the Imperial Ministers were not very becoming between Princes: That the memorial in question could not, without censure, have been suppressed: That the Duke of Parma had reason to apply to the Congress for justice, and that he had not met with sufficient encouragement, in his representations to the Court of Vienna, to address himself thither again. To this it was added, that the Negotiations had been always delayed, by continual obstructions from the Plenipotentiaries of the Emperor.

With such dispositions, nothing was concluded, and never was Congress more fruitless. To amuse and surprise one another was the chief business; and, when they broke up, they were farther than ever from agreeing.

After the peace with Spain, King George had the satisfaction to see the tranquillity of Europe restored, by a reconciliation between Sweden and Russia. Though this was not done by his mediation, yet, it is certain, the assistance he had given Sweden, and the peace he had procured between that Crown and those of Prussia, Denmark, and Poland, had determined the Czar to bound his pretensions, and hearken to an accommodation. As the Czar had no quarrel with France, he accepted the mediation of that Crown, but absolutely refused to hear of the mediation of Great-Britain.

Sweden was forced to yield up to the Czar almost all his conquests, after the battle of Pultowa; as Livonia, Ingria, Estonia, part of Carrelia, and of the territory of Wyburg, Riga, Revel, Nerva, &c. and, in return, the Czar restored only part of Finland, with two millions of Rix-dollars, promising not to concern himself with the regulations of their Government.

The Czar included in the treaty the King and Republic of Poland, and consented also to the including of the King of Great-Britain, in such sort, that the differences between them should be adjusted in an amicable manner.

These differences daily increased; and, if these Princes had been neighbours, a war would certainly have ensued. Their enmity was in great measure personal. The Czar's was founded upon the conduct of King George, who, whilst only Elector of Hanover, had entered into the views of the Northern States against Sweden, and, after reaping the fruit of that Alliance had declared, on all occasions, against Russia. Hence the Czar always distinguished the King of England from the Elector of Hanover, and shewed all possible regard for the English, whilst he endeavoured, by all methods, to annoy their King; and, perhaps he would have succeeded, had it not been for the Death of Charles XII. That Prince and the Czar, how much soever they were offended with each other, were more so with King George, and were going to lay aside or suspend their resentments, in order to be revenged. About the time of the King's last arrival from Hanover, Mr Bassenge, the Czar's Resident at London, for some expressions in a memorial, was ordered to depart the Kingdom in a fortnight. The Czar, in revenge of this affront, took occasion to publish a declaration (which was delivered to the English factory at Petersburg, and printed in Holland) in order to raise discontents in England. The declaration was as follows:

Petersburg, July 29, 1720. 27.

'It is notorious in what an unjust and injurious manner our Resident was sent away from 1721.

Peace between Russia and Sweden.

Treaty of Pultowa.

Personal enmity between King George and the Czar.

the

1721. the Court of England; which, having done us a great and sensible wrong, ought naturally to have engaged us to use reprisals, according to what is practised every where else. But as we perceive that all this is done without any regard to the interest of England, and only in favour of the Hanoverian interest; for which the Ministers of Great-Britain not only neglect the friendship of foreign powers, but do not even spare their own Country, which more nearly, and more sensibly concern them; we were unwilling that the English Nation, which has no share in that piece of injustice, should suffer for it; and therefore we grant to them all manner of security and free liberty to trade in all our Dominions.*

These two Princes, without mentioning their other qualities, had great talents for Negotiation; but King George excelled; for, it must be owned, no Prince could more wisely improve any favourable circumstances to disconcert his enemy's projects.

Besides these treaties in which King George had so great an influence, there was one made with the Moors, and signed the 12th of August. Spain, being then at war with the Moors, loudly complained of the treaty, but without any effect.

Death of Clement
XI.

This year died Pope Clement XI. His name was John Francis Albani, native of Urbino. He had fate in the papal chair above twenty years. When he was Cardinal, he was for his abilities courted by all the powers of Europe, and had a great hand in the will of King Charles II. of Spain. He was revengeful to the last degree, inflexible in his resolutions, and rejected all advice. His greatest policy was to keep Princes at variance. He expressed great kindness for the Pretender. When he found he was going to die, he sent for the Pretender, who being come, he told the Cardinals then in his Bed-chamber, that he wanted to speak with him in private; but, one of them representing, that it would redound most to his Holiness's honour to deliver his last thoughts to him in their presence, the Pope complied, and recommended to them the three following points:

1. To let the Pretender reside constantly in the palace which he had assigned him.
2. To continue the pension granted to him, that he may be always enabled to support the Royal dignity, till he recover his Kingdoms.
3. To oblige the Successor in the holy see, to assist the Pretender in all things against the attempts of his enemies.

The Cardinals assured the Pope they would take care to perform the 1st and 3d articles; but that, as to the 2d, they would be inexcusable, if they should continue to exhaust the treasure of the Church, which was by no means appropriated for the preservation of one Prince alone, but for the defence of the Roman Catholic Religion in general. To this the Pope answered, that his Successor might, with a very safe conscience, draw out sums from the Treasury for the maintenance of the Pretender, because he had been deprived of his Dominions for the sake of the Catholic Religion; moreover, the Pretender himself made a very moving speech against the inhumanity of abandoning one that was so helpless: But the Cardinals replied, That they would consider of it, and give their answer next day. The Pope, acquiescing therewith, desired the Cardinal d'Alban to engage the Emperor to espouse the Pretender's interest, and not to forsake him in the present juncture; but that Cardinal begged to be excused, and shewed, that it was impossible to be done, not only on account of solemn treaty, but also by reason of the signal services which England did to his Imperial Majesty, in the late war against the Spaniards.

Clement XI. was succeeded by Michael Angelo, of the family of Conti, who took the name of Innocent XIII, in memory of Pope Innocent III. the most worthy of all the Popes chosen from among the Cardinals of that family (1).

On the 15 of April, the Princess of Wales was delivered of a Son at Leicester-House, and the next day the City of London having presented a congratulatory address, the King in his answer, said, 'I cannot omit taking this opportunity of assuring you, that I am truly concerned at the calamity brought upon you by the wicked management of the South-Sea Company. I have, however, this comfort, that the report of any part of this misfortune cannot with the least justice be imputed to me. Nothing will give me more ease and satisfaction than the seeing you delivered from your present sufferings, your trade revived, and public credit re-established.' This declaration was thought to be necessary, by reason of the insinuations raised by the disaffected.

The young Prince was christened the 2d of May: The Godfathers were the King of Prussia and the Duke of York, represented by the Earl of Granby and the Lord Lumley. The Godmother was the Queen of Prussia, represented by the Duchess of Dorset. The young Prince was named William Augustus, who, this very year 1746, defeated the Rebels in Scotland.

The King held, on the 27th of March, a Chapter of the order of the Garter, to fill up the vacancies occasioned by the death of the Dukes of Rutland and Buckingham (2). In their room were chosen Charles Fitzroy, Duke of Grafton, and Henry Clinton, Earl of Lincoln.

The Parliament had but one Session left, since the seven years expired at Lady-day next. It was

(1) The family of Conti is one of the four chief families of Rome; the other three are those of Colonna, Orsini, and Savelli, which last is extinct.

(2) John Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham, died February 24, 1720-21. He had himself made the following Epitaph, and ordered it to be engraved on his tomb: But it was not orthodox enough:

Pro Rege sæpi, pro Republicâ semper, dubius non improbus vixi. Incertus nec perturbatus morior. Christum veneror. In Deo confido æterno ac omnipotente. ENS ENTUM MISERERE MEI.

He was made Knight of the Garter by King Charles II, and Lord Chamberlain by his Successor: He was always in the opposition against King William, and made Privy-Seal by Queen Anne. Notwithstanding his dying in a state of uncertainty, as he owned in his Epitaph, he had appeared very zealous for the Church. He left a son by a natural daughter of King James II, who are since both dead, and the family extinct.

This year Sept. 25, died Matthew Prior, for whom a monument was erected in Westminster-Abbey.

1721. was proposed in Council to dissolve the present, and call a new Parliament; but it was represented by the majority, that it would be more expedient to hold another Session, as farther measures were to be taken towards a perfect restoration of the public credit, which another Parliament might not so readily come into. It had been insinuated, that a design was formed for the continuance of the Parliament beyond the next Session; and so far believed, that several Members of the Common-Council of London demanded, in form, of the Lord-Mayor, that a Council should be summoned, in which it was intended to move for an address to the King, to thank him for his great care of the trade and commerce with Spain, but principally to express their hopes of his calling frequent and new Parliaments. The Lord-Mayor, perceiving their intentions, refused to comply with their request on various pretences. Upon this, they published an account of their proceedings, with the heads of their intended address, under the artful title of An Apology for the Citizens of London, for their not addressing his Majesty under the present circumstances of affairs.

The plague raged this year in the southern parts of France, particularly at Marseilles. On this occasion a proclamation was published, forbidding any person to come into England from any part of France, between the day of Biscay and Dunkirk, without certificates of health. The streets were ordered to be paved and kept clean; and an act of Parliament passed the last Session for prevention of infection, by building of Pest-houses (to which the infected persons, or healthy of an infected family, were to be removed) and by ordering trenches or lines to be drawn round any city, town, or place infected. These precautions, appearing to some to be unreasonable, caused great debates, as will hereafter be seen.

The Parliament met on the day appointed, October 19, and the Session was opened with the following speech from the Throne:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Acquainted you, when we parted last, with our having renewed all our treaties of commerce with Spain; since which, peace is happily restored in the North, by the conclusion of the treaty between the Czar and the King of Sweden, and by that, which I have made with the Moors, a great number of my subjects are delivered from slavery; and all such of them, as trade to those parts of the world, are, for the future, secured from falling under that dreadful calamity.

In this situation of affairs, we should be extremely wanting to ourselves, if we neglected to improve the favourable opportunity, which this general tranquillity gives us of extending our commerce, upon which the riches and grandeur of this Nation chiefly depend. It is very obvious, that nothing would more conduce to the obtaining so public a good, than to make the exportation of our own manufactures, and the importation of the commodities, used in the manufacturing of them, as practicable and easy as may be. By this means, the balance of trade may be preserved in our favour, our navigation increased, and greater numbers of our poor employed.

I must therefore recommend it to you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, to consider how far the duties upon these branches may be taken off and replaced, without any violation of public faith, or laying any new burthen upon my people. And I promise myself, that, by a due consideration of this matter, the produce of those duties, compared with the infinite advantages, that will accrue to the Kingdom by their being taken off, will be found so inconsiderable, as to leave little room for any difficulties or objections.

The supplying ourselves with naval stores, upon terms the most easy and least precarious, seems highly to deserve the care and attention of Parliament. Our Plantations in America naturally abound with most of the proper materials for this necessary and essential part of our trade and maritime strength: And if, by due encouragement, we could be furnished from thence with those naval stores, which we are now obliged to purchase and bring from foreign Countries, it would not only greatly contribute to the riches, influence, and power of this Nation, but, by employing our own Colonies in this useful and advantageous service, divert them from settling up and carrying on manufactures, which directly interfere with those of Great-Britain.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

It will be a great pleasure to me, if, in raising the Supplies of this year, it may be so ordered, that my people may reap some immediate benefit from the present circumstances of affairs abroad. I have ordered estimates to be prepared for the service of the ensuing year, and likewise an account of the debts of the Navy to be laid before you. You cannot but be sensible of the ill consequences, that arise from such a large debt remaining unprovided for; and that, as long as the Navy and Victualling bills are at a very high discount, they do not only affect all other public credit, but greatly increase the charge and expence of the current service. It is therefore very much to be wished, that you could find a method of discharging this part of the national debt, which of all others is the most heavy and burdensome; and by that means have it in your power to ease your Country of some part of the taxes, which, from an absolute necessity, they have been obliged to pay.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The unspeakable misery and desolation, that has of late raged in some parts of Europe, cannot but be a sufficient warning to us, to use all possible precautions to prevent the contagion from being brought in among us; or, if these Kingdoms should be visited with such a fatal calamity, to be in a condition, with the Blessing of God, to stop its farther progress. And as all other provisions will be altogether vain and fruitless, if the abominable practice of running goods be not at once totally suppressed, I most earnestly recommend to you, to let no other consideration stand in competition with a due care of preserving so many thousand lives.

The

1721. 'The several affairs, which I have mentioned to you, being of the highest and most immediate concern to the whole Kingdom, I doubt not but you will enter into the consideration of them with that temper, unanimity, and dispatch, that the necessity and importance of them require.'

The King, in this speech, proposes the affairs to be considered: Shews the best manner of extending commerce, and supplying naval stores: Expresses his concern for the debts of the Navy, and hopes they will be taken care of in the Supplies for the present year: Concludes with recommending all possible means to prevent the plague, or stop the progress of its contagion, particularly by providing against the practice of smuggling.

The addresses of thanks were suitable to the speech; the King was congratulated upon his success for restoring the tranquillity of Europe, and securing the trade of the Nation by treaties: Assurances were given to proceed to the consideration of the affairs recommended by him, with temper, unanimity, and dispatch. Notwithstanding these assurances of unanimity, the debates ran very high this Session, and nothing passed without great opposition.

One of the first debates which happened in the House, of Lords was about the famous Mr Law. He came to England, on the 20th of October, in the fleet under Sir John Norris from the Baltic. Mr Law after the downfall of the Mississippi stock had been forced to leave France, to avoid the resentment of the enraged people, who had more than once attempted his life. Having spent some time at Venice, and paid a visit to the Pretender at Rome, people were not a little surpris'd, some time after, to hear, that he was gone to Hanover, from whence he designed shortly to come into England. He was brought up to London by a Lord, with whom he had negotiated for great parcels of South-Sea stock; was privately admitted at Court; and having taken a house in Conduit-Street, near Hanover-Square, he was, for some days, visited by great numbers of persons of quality and distinction. This gave so much umbrage, that, on the 26th of October, Earl Coningsby represented to the House of Lords, how dangerous it might be, on several accounts, to entertain and countenance such a man as Mr Law; and a day being, at his motion, appointed to consider of that matter, the Earl said, 'That he, the Earl, could not but entertain some jealousy of a person, who had done so much mischief in a neighbouring Kingdom, and who being so immensely rich, as he was reported to be, might do a great deal more hurt here, by tampering with any, who were grown desperate, by being involved in the calamity occasioned by the fatal imitation of his pernicious projects. That this person was the more dangerous, in that he had renounced, not only his natural affection to his Country, and his allegiance to his lawful Sovereign, by being naturalized in France, and openly countenancing the Pretender's friends, but, which was worst of all, he had also renounced his God, by turning Roman Catholic: Concluding, that they ought to inquire, Whether Sir John Norris had orders to bring him over?' The Lord Carteret answered, 'That Mr Law had, many years ago, the misfortune to kill a Gentleman in a duel; but that, having, at last, received the benefit of the King's clemency, and the appeal lodged by the relations of the deceased being taken off, he was come over to plead his Majesty's pardon. That there was no law to keep any Englishman out of his Country; and as Mr Law was a subject of Great-Britain, it was not even in the King's power to hinder him from coming over, if he thought fit.' To this the Lord Trevor replied, 'That Mr Law was indeed a subject of Great-Britain, and, therefore, as such, had an undoubted right to come hither; but the circumstances of a person of his character being brought over on board an English Admiral, and at this juncture of time, might deserve the consideration of that House.' Earl Cowper spoke much to the same effect: But, however, the affair was dropped, and Mr Law, attended by the Duke of Argyle and the Earl of Ilay, pleaded his pardon at the King's-Bench according to form.

No. 99. Vol. IV.

The Navy debt, which was increased to 1,700,000 l. and of which the consideration had been recommended from the Throne, occasioned great debates in both Houses. Mr Freeman, in the House of Commons, reflected with some warmth upon the persons concerned in that part of the Administration, saying, 'It was matter of wonder, how so great a debt could be incurred, when the Parliament had provided what had been desired upon that head.' Mr Shippen hinted, 'That such extraordinary expences could not be for the immediate service of Great-Britain, but, in all probability, for the preservation of some foreign acquisitions.' Sir Joseph Jekyll said, 'That he was not against providing for any just public debt; but that, in his opinion, they could not answer it, either to themselves, or those they had the honour to represent, if they gave away the Nation's money blindfold; and therefore he desired, that the House might be informed, How so great a debt had been contracted?' To this Mr Walpole replied, 'Nothing in the world was more reasonable; and therefore he backed the motion, for having a particular account of that debt laid before the House; but, in the mean time, he might assure them, that near 1,100,000 l. of it was contracted in the last Reign; and, as the persons now in the Administration were not answerable for that part, neither did they desire, that above one million of it should be this year provided for.' This was agreed to without dividing.

The same affair was more warmly debated in the House of Lords: When a surprize was expressed, how the Navy debt came to be so large, it was answered (as in the House of Commons) that near two thirds of the debt had been contracted in the last Reign, of which the proofs were ready. Upon this the Earl of Rochester said, 'That, since the debt was incurred, it was but justice, that they, who trusted the Government, should be paid; but, on the other hand, it became the wisdom of that House to endeavour to prevent the like for the future, and to restore the Navy on the antient foot, that is, not to exceed the expences provided for by Parliament.' And moved for an address to that purpose. This was opposed by the Earl of Ilay, who urged, that, the public good, and the safety of the Nation, being the grand object and rule of Government, some latitude must of necessity be given, and allowance made, to those who are in the Administration, for extraordinary 1721. ry expences, upon unforeseen exigencies. And therefore, if the Ministers, as they had promised it, gave the House a satisfactory account, how the debt in question came to be contracted, there was, in his opinion, no occasion for such an address.' The Lord Chancellor Parker and others speaking on the same side, the motion for an address was rejected by 64 voices (among which was the Lord Harcourt's, who had been lately made a Viscount) against 22.

In several other debates on this affair, it was urged, 'That the Navy debt was increased by employing more seamen than were provided for by Parliament, particularly by sending large fleets to the Baltic and Mediterranean, and keeping the sailors in pay during the winter: That these extraordinary expences were not necessary for the service of Great-Britain, and therefore it was proper to have all the papers relating to the Northern transactions, particularly the Lord Carteret's private instructions, laid before the House, in order to have full satisfaction concerning the grounds of these expeditions, and to see whether the act of settlement had been no ways infringed by them, a point of the utmost consequence to the present Establishment. To this it was answered, That the employing more seamen for several years, than were provided for by Parliament, was occasioned by services which either were pursuant to the previous advice, or had the subsequent approbation of one or both Houses, and were also necessary for the safety of the Kingdom, and tranquillity of Europe: That, the nature of these services detaining the squadrons till the months of November, or December, the paying off the seamen was inconsistent with having the ships ready to sail early in the spring, and nothing would be saved by it. By a great majority it was voted, that the Lord Carteret's private instructions should not be addressed for, and that the sending a squadron to the Baltic did no way break into the act of settlement.

About the affairs of Spain and the North.

The affairs of Spain and the North were so equally concerned in the increase of the naval debt, that the inquiry into the one naturally led to the inquiry into the other. The debate was opened by the Duke of Wharton, who animadverted upon the conduct of the Ministers, both as to the war and peace with Spain, and moved that the treaty with that Crown might be laid before the House. The Earl of Sunderland said, 'He did not doubt but his Majesty would be always ready to comply with the desires of that House, and even in this particular, as well as in others; but that, for his part, he would be so free as to declare his judgment against advising his Majesty to communicate the treaty in question at this juncture, because, to his knowledge, there was in it a secret article, which the King of Spain had desired might not be made public, till after the treaty of Cambray was over; and, his Majesty having granted that request, he therefore hoped that House would not desire his Majesty to break his promise.' Upon this the Duke of Wharton's motion was rejected by a majority of 59 voices against 22. In another debate the Earl of Stratford suggested, 'That as the war with Spain was undertaken without necessity, or a just provocation, so the peace was concluded without any benefit or advantage. That, contrary to the law of Nations, the Spanish fleet was fallen upon without any declaration of war, and even while a British Minister and a Secretary of State were amicably treating at Madrid; so that the Spaniards might think themselves secure from any hostilities. And, as the manner of beginning the war did not appear justifiable, so neither could the war itself be easily reconciled with sound politics, since it was an interruption to one of the most valuable branches of our trade, and at a time, when the Nation groaned under the pressure of heavy debts, occasioned by a former long expensive war: Concluding with a motion for an address to his Majesty, that he would be pleased to cause the instructions, that were given to Sir George Byng (now Lord Torrington) to be laid before the House.' But as the motion for the treaty, so this for the instructions of Sir George Byng, was upon the question rejected by a majority of 67 against 24. A protest was entered, representing, that a motion for Admirals instructions had never been denied; that, without a sight of the Lord Torrington's instructions, the war with Spain, in which the action in the Mediterranean involved us, did not appear justifiable, and was plainly prejudicial to the Nation, as it interrupted our commerce with Spain, and occasioned a strict union between the French and Spanish Crowns, which it was the interest of Great-Britain to have kept always divided. Nor did it appear that Great-Britain reaped any fruits from that war.

After this it was moved, that the House would inquire what were become of the ships taken from, the Spaniards, and how they were disposed of, and an address for that purpose was voted.

The debates on the Navy debt being put off for three weeks, a protest (Feb. 19.) was entered against it, in which the several particulars that were designed to be proceed upon were specified, but they were afterwards expunged by an order of the House.

The bill to prevent infection from the plague A bill about the caused likewise long and warm debates in the House of Lords. Earl Cowper moved, 'That a clause might be added to the bill for repealing so much of the late quarantine act, as impowers the Government to remove to a Lazaret, or Pest-House, any persons whatsoever, infected with the plague, or healthy persons out of an infected family from their habitations; and also so much of the act, as gives power for the drawing lines or trenches round any City, Town, or place infected. He represented, that these powers were altogether unknown to our Constitution, inconsistent with the lenity of our free Government, such as could never be wisely or usefully put in practice; and the more odious, because they seemed to be copied from the arbitrary Government of France, and could not be executed but by military force.' The Earl also opposed the forcing persons to accept of Nurses and Physicians appointed by the Government. Though the repeal of the obnoxious clauses in the quarantine act, met with much opposition, and a petition from the City of London, for that purpose, had been rejected by the Lords: Yet an act passed at last for repealing the clauses for removing persons to Pest-Houses, and drawing lines round any City or Town that was infected.

The mutiny and desertion bill occasioned the usual disputes about the army. The Lord Trenor opened the debate with a long speech, wherein he excepted against the clauses for punishing soldiers with death for desertion, and for the army.

Debaters on

1721-22. for exempting them from being arrested for debt.

He urged, 'That the exercise of martial law in time of peace was unknown, and repugnant to our Constitution: That such a law was indeed necessary during the late Rebellion; but, there being at present no such reason, and all being perfectly quiet and easy under his Majesty's mild Government, the punishment of offences committed by the soldiery ought to be left to the Civil Magistrate: And that, on the other hand, it was unreasonable to grant soldiers a protection from their lawful creditors, since a great many poor people, who might be drawn in to trust them, might be ruined.' After a warm debate, the bill passed without any alteration or reduction of the forces.

On the French buying ships in England.

There was at this time great clamour against the French building and buying ships in England. Some were built for them at Bristol, and more at London. When this matter was considered in the House of Lords, it was suggested, 'That the practice of building ships for foreigners might be attended with very ill and dangerous consequences; for, as such foreigners, though at present in amity with us, may yet, one time or other, become our enemies, they will, in such a case, make use of these very ships to fight against us: Besides this general consideration, the present great scarcity of timber in England made such a practice so much the more unjustifiable, especially if it was considered what a great number of ships had lately been built for the French, some of which were sixty or seventy gun-ships.' To this it was answered, 'That they knew of no law in being to hinder any ship-carpenter from working for any one, that would employ him. That the French, through now in amity, may indeed be one day our enemies; but yet, if they built not here such ships as they have occasion for, they might get them built in Holland or at Hamburgh; and they were of opinion, that it was better for us to get their money than our neighbours: That indeed, if we could hinder the French from building ships at all, it would be prudent to do it; but, since they can have them in other places, our prohibiting them to buy them here would rather be detrimental than advantageous to us.' After some other speeches, it was agreed to consult the Judges. Upon which, Chief-Justice Pratt, in the name of all the Judges present (except Baron Mountague, who desired further time to consider of it, before he gave his opinion) declared, 'That they knew of no law, whereby the King was empowered to hinder any of his subjects from building ships for any one, that would employ them, whether Natives or Foreigners.' Earl Cowper said, if there was no such law, it was high time there should be one, to put a stop to such a pernicious practice for the future; and therefore moved, that the Judges be ordered to bring in a bill for that purpose. But, after some disputes about certain provisos, the consideration of the bill was put off and never more resumed.

On the Quakers bill.

The Quakers having petitioned the Commons for leave to bring in a bill for taking out of their solemn affirmation the words, In the presence of Almighty God, a bill passed the House for that purpose, and was sent up to the Lords, where it occasioned a debate. The Bishop of Rochester having, among other things, said, 'He did not know why such a distinguishing indulgence as was intended by this bill, should be allowed to a set of people, who were hardly Christians.'

The Earl of Ilay answered, 'He wondered that Reverend Prelate should call in question, whether the Quakers were Christians, since they were so, at least by act of Parliament, being included in the Toleration act, under the general denomination of Protestant Dissenters.

The Bishop replied, 'It was against the standing orders of that August Assembly to make any personal reflections; and he thought it a much greater indecency to make a jest of any thing, that was sacred; and that the calling the Quakers Christians, by act of Parliament, was a sort of side-wind reflection upon Christianity itself: However, he would let that pass, and reserve to another opportunity what he had to offer against the bill. Accordingly, he afterwards endeavoured to prove the Quakers were no Christians, and was seconded and supported by the Earl of Strafford, Lord North and Grey, and the Archbishop of York. When the bill was committed, a petition from some of the London Clergy was presented by the Archbishop of York, setting forth, 'That, the bill might, in its consequences, nearly affect the property of the subject in general, so it would, in a more especial manner, endanger the legal maintenance of the Clergy by tythes, inasmuch as the people called Quakers pretend to deny the payment of tythes upon a principle of conscience; and therefore might be under strong inducements to ease their consciences in that respect, by violating them in another, when their simple affirmation, on behalf of friends of the same persuasion, shall pass in all Courts of Judicature for legal evidence. However, that the injuries, which the Petitioners in their private affairs might possibly suffer, were, as they ought to be, of small account with them, in comparison of the mischief, which might redound to society from the indulgence intended, as it seemed to imply, that Justice may be duly administered, and Government supported, without the intervention of any solemn appeal to God as a witness of the truth of what is said, by all persons, in all cases of great importance to the common welfare; whereas the Petitioners were firmly persuaded, that an oath was instituted by God himself, as the surest bond of fidelity among men, and hath been esteemed, and found to be so by the wisdom and experience of all Nations in all ages. But that what chiefly moved the Petitioners to apply to their Lordships, was their serious concern, lest the minds of good men should be grieved and wounded, and the enemies of Christianity triumph, when they should see such condescensions made by a Christian Legislature to a set of men, who renounce the divine institutions of Christ; particularly that, by which the faithful are initiated into his Religion, and denominated Christians; and who cannot, on this account, according to the uniform judgment and practice of the Catholic Church, be deemed worthy of that sacred name. The Petitioners moreover represented, that, upon the best information they could get, the instances, wherein any Quaker had refused the solemn affirmation prescribed by an act in the 7th and 8th years of William III, had, from the passing that act to that day, been exceeding rare; so that there might be ground to hope, that the continued use of the said solemn affirmation would, by degrees, grees, have entirely cured that people of all those unreasonable prejudices against an oath, which the favour designed them by the bill might tend to strengthen and confirm. And the Petitioners humbly left it to their Lordships wise deliberations, whether such an extraordinary indulgence, granted to a people already, as is conceived, too numerous, might not contribute to multiply their sect, and tempt persons to profess themselves Quakers, in order to be exempted from the obligation of oaths, and to stand upon a foot of privilege, not allowed to the best Christians in the Kingdom.

1721-22.

Petition against it.

The receiving and reading of this petition was warmly opposed, and, the question being at last put, it was rejected. All the Bishops present (except the two Archbishops, the Bishops of *Oxford, Litchfield and Coventry†, and Rochester) were against the petition. The Bishop of Salisbury endeavoured to mitigate the matter, and proposed, that the Petitioners might have leave to withdraw their petition; but this was opposed by the Earl of Sunderland, who said, that a Committee ought to be appointed to inquire into the Authors and promoters of it, for he looked upon it to be no better than a libel. The Lord Townshend took notice of the irregular way, in which the petition was presented, for, if it was a petition of the London Clergy, it ought to be offered either by the Bishop of that Diocese, or the Archbishop of Canterbury; whereas it was presented by the Archbishop of York, who was Metropolitan of another Province. However, a protest was entered by several Lords and Bishops against rejecting the petition. After this, the Archbishop of Canterbury moved, that the Quakers affirmation might not be admitted in Courts of Judicature, but among themselves; and the Archbishop of York moved for a clause, that the Quakers affirmation should not go in any suit at law for tythes: But, after some farther debate, the bill was gone through, and sent back to the Commons; but a protest was entered against it by several Lords and Bishops.

An order
about protests.

As nothing had passed without being protested against, the Earl of Sunderland, towards the end of the Session, took notice, 'That the privilege of entering protests had, of late, been so much abused, that, in his opinion, some restraint ought to be put to it by limiting the time for entering protests upon asking leave of the House, which was never denied: And therefore he moved, that such Lords, as shall enter their protestations with reasons, shall do the same before two o'clock the next sitting day, and sign them before the House risks.' This was opposed by the Lord Cowper, who alledged, 'That, the time being so short, and very few Lords coming so early, such an order would in effect put an end to all protesting, which was an ancient privilege of that House.' The Bishop of Rochester added That, if protests were limited to so short a time, this was at least the way to have them crude and indigested; and he thought it unbecoming the dignity of that August Assembly to have any thing entered upon their journals, which were records for after ages, before it had been duly considered, and well digested.' However, it was resolved, that it should be a standing order of the House (instead of the order of the 5th of March, 1641) That such Lords, as shall enter their protestations with reasons, shall do the same before two o'clock the next sitting day, and sign them before the House risks. 1721-22.

The Commons, after having granted the necessary Supplies, brought in a bill for securing the freedom of elections of Members of Parliament. Great debates arose about several clauses that were offered to be inserted in the bill; particularly, that no Officer of the Customs or Excise should vote at any election for Parliament Men: This was strenuously opposed, as taking away from those Officers their birthright, as Englishmen and Freeholders; upon which that clause was dropped. Another was proposed, that no person, who did not pay scot and lot, should have a vote in a Corporation. This was also opposed, 'because (as it was urged) it had already been adjudged at Committees of elections, and agreed to by the House in several cases, that such persons, in some places, should have no votes; and in other places they should be allowed to vote, provided they did not receive alms from the parish.' As this clause was not insisted upon, the bill passed, and was sent up to the Lords. The Earl of Sunderland endeavoured to shew the impossibility of the several clauses of the bill being put in execution, without exposing the most innocent persons to the guilt of perjury. After several speeches on both sides, the bill was rejected by 48 voices against 30.

An act passed this Session, to enable the South-Sea Company to dispose of the effects in their hands by way of lottery or subscription, in order to pay the debts of the Company. By a clause in this bill, the South-Sea Company were empowered to sell 200,000 l. a year of their capital stock for the same purpose. Another act passed, to prolong the times for hearing and determining claims upon the estates of the South-Sea Directors, and of Mr Asplabe and Mr Craggs.

On the 7th of March, the business of the Session being over, the King came to the House of Peers, and put an end to the Parliament, with the following speech to both Houses: The Parliament is dissolved.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

YOU could not have given me a more acceptable instance of your zeal and affection, than by dispatching, with so much unanimity, the several particulars I recommended to you at the beginning of this Session, for the ease and advantage of my people.

The many and great encouragements you have given to our trade and manufactures, and the provision you have made for our being supplied with naval stores from our own Plantations, will, I make no doubt, excite the industry of my subjects, employ a greater number of the poor, increase our navigation, and be a considerable addition to the riches and strength of this Nation.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

The raising the current Supplies of the year, and the making a provision for the discharge of so considerable a part of the debt of the Navy, is a farther proof of your affection to me, and your regard for the public; and your doing it, in a manner so little burthenfome to my people, gives me the greatest satisfaction.

My

My Lords and Gentlemen,

'I cannot in justice part with this Parliament, without returning you my sincerest thanks for your steady and resolute adherence to my Person and Government, and to the interest of the Protestant Cause both at home and abroad. The enemies of our happy Constitution have given the strongest and most honourable testimony of your behaviour in these particulars, by the implacable malice, which they have, upon all occasions, expressed against you.

'You must all be sensible, that they are at this juncture reviving, with the greatest industry, the same wicked arts of calumny and defamation, which have been the constant prelude to public troubles and disorders: And such is their insatiation, that they flatter themselves, the grossest misrepresentations will turn to their advantage, and give them an opportunity of recommending themselves to the favour and good opinion of my people. But I have so just a confidence in the affection of my subjects, and in their regard for their own welfare, that I am persuaded they will not suffer themselves to be thus imposed upon, and betrayed into their own destruction.

'For my part, as the preservation of the Constitution in Church and State shall always be my care, I am firmly determined to continue to countenance such, as have manifested

'their zeal for the present Establishment, and have the religious and civil rights of all my subjects truly at heart; and I question not but that behaviour, which has justly recommended them to me, will effectually secure to them the good-will of all that are well-affected to my Government, and will convince the world, that the expectations of those are very ill grounded, who hope to prevail with a Protestant free people, to give up their Religion and Liberties into the hands of such as are enemies unto both.'

After this speech the Parliament was prorogued to the 15th of March, but, on the 10th, a Proclamation was published to dissolve the Parliament, and, three days after, another for calling a new one.

Soon after the dissolution of the Parliament, died Charles Spencer, Earl of Sunderland, whose abilities as a Minister were indisputable, but who exposed himself to great odium by the violence of his temper, and the share he was thought to have had in the South-Sea scheme; and in the latter part of his life it is thought, upon good grounds, that he had entered into correspondencies and designs, which would have been fatal to himself, or to the public.

His death was followed in less than a month by that of his father-in-law the Duke of Marlborough, whose character has been given in the former part of this history (1). He was interred the 1722.

Death of the Earl of Sunderland, Apr. 19.

and of the Duke of Marlborough, June 16.

(1) It may not be improper to insert here the monumental inscription on the pillar in the Park, before the Castle of Blenheim, which enumerates the Duke of Marlborough's exploits in a plain, elegant, and masculine style:

The Castle of Blenheim was founded by Q. ANNE.
In the fourth Year of her Reign;
In the Year of the Christian Era 1705;
A Monument designed to perpetuate the Memory of the signal Victory
Obtain'd over the French and Bavarians,
Near the Village of Blenheim,
On the Banks of the Danube,
By JOHN Duke of MARLBOROUGH;
The Hero not only of his Nation, but of his Age;
Whose Glory was equal in the Council and in the Field;
Who by Wisdom, Justice, Candour, and Address,
Reconciled various and even opposite Interests;
Acquired an Influence, which no Rank, no Authority can give,
Nor any Force but that of superior Virtue;
Became the fixed important Center,
Which united in one common Cause
The principal States of Europe;
Who by military Knowledge, and irresistible Valour,
In a long Series of uninterrupted Triumphs,
Broke the Power of France,
When raised the highest, when exerted the most;
Rescued the Empire from Desolation;
Asserted and confirmed the Liberties of Europe.

PHILIP, a Grandson of the House of France, united to the interests, directed by the policy, supported by the arms of that Crown, was placed on the Throne of Spain. King William the Third beheld this formidable union of two great, and once rival, Monarchies. At the end of a life spent in defending the liberties of Europe, he saw them in their greatest danger. He provided for their security, in the most effectual manner. He took the Duke of Marlborough into his service.

Ambassador extraordinary and Plenipotentiary
To the States-General of the United Provinces.
No. 99. VOL. IV.

The Duke contracted several Alliances before the death of King WILLIAM. He confirmed and improved these. He contracted others, after the accession of Queen ANNE; and reunited the Confederacy, which had been dissolved at the end of a former war, in a stricter and firmer league.

Captain-General and Commander in Chief Of the Forces of GREAT-BRITAIN.

The Duke led to the field the army of the Allies. He took with surprising rapidity Tenlo, Ruremunde, Struenswaert, Liege. He extended and secured the frontiers of the Dutch. The enemies, whom he found insulting at the gates of Nimwegen, were driven to seek for shelter behind their lines. He forced Bonne, Huy, Limbourg in another campaign. He opened the communication of the Rhine, as well as the Maes. He added all the Country between these rivers to his former conquests. The arms of France, favoured by the defection of the Elector of Bavaria, had penetrated into the heart of the Empire. This mighty body lay exposed to immediate ruin. In that memorable crisis, the Duke of MARLBOROUGH led his troops with unexampled celerity, secrecy, order, from the Ocean to the Danube. He saw; he attacked; nor stopped, but to conquer the enemy. He forced the Bavarians, sustained by the French, in their strong intrenchments at Schellenberg. He passed the Danube. A second royal army, composed of the best troops of France, was sent to reinforce the first. That of the Confederates was divided. With one part of it the siege of Ingolstadt was carried on. With the other the Duke gave battle to the united strength of France and Bavaria. On the second day of August, 1704, he gained a more glorious victory than the histories of any age can boast. The heaps of slain were dreadful proofs of his valour. A Marshal of France, whole legions of French, his prisoners, proclaimed his mercy. Bavaria was subdued. Ratisbon, Augsburg, Ulm, Memmingen, all the usurpations of the enemy, were recovered. The liberty of the Diet, the peace of the Empire, were restored. From the Danube the Duke turned his victorious arms toward the Rhine, and the Moselle. Landau, Trever, Tranbach

1722.

the 9th of August, with great funeral pomp, in Wesminster-Abbey; and was succeeded as Master-General of the Ordnance, and Colonel of the first regiment of Foot-guards by the Earl of Cadogan. 1722.

The elections for Members of Parliament were Traerbach were taken. In the course of one campaign the very nature of the war was changed. The Invaders of other States were reduced to defend their own. The frontier of France was exposed in its weakest part to the efforts of the Allies.

That he might improve his advantage, that he might push the sum of things to a speedy decision, the Duke of MARLBOROUGH led his troops early in the following year once more to the Moselle. They, whom he had saved a few months before, neglected to second him now. They, who might have been his companions in conquest, refused to join him. When he saw the generous designs he had formed frustrated by private interest, by pique, by jealousy, he returned with speed to the Maas. He returned; and fortune and victory returned with him. Liege was relieved; Huy re-taken; the French, who had pressed the army of the States-General with superior numbers, retired behind intrenchments, which they deemed impregnable. The Duke forced these intrenchments, with inconsiderable loss, on the seventh day of July, 1705. He defeated a great part of the army, which defended them. The rest escaped by a precipitate retreat. If advantages proportionable to this success were not immediately obtained, let the failure be ascribed to that misfortune, which attends most Confederacies, a division of opinions, where one alone should judge; a division of powers, where one alone should command. The disappointment itself did honour to the Duke. It became the wonder of mankind how he could do so much under those restraints, which had hindered him from doing more.

Powers more absolute were given him afterwards. The increase of his powers multiplied his victories. At the opening of the next campaign, when all his army was not yet assembled, when it was hardly known that he had taken the field, the noise of his triumphs was heard over Europe. On the 12th of May, 1706, he attacked the French at Ramillies. In the space of two hours, the whole army was put to flight. The vigour and conduct, with which he improved this success, were equal to those, with which he gained it. Louvain, Brussels, Malines, Liere, Ghent, Oudenard, Antwerp, Danme, Bruges, Courtray surrendered. Ostend, Menin, Dendermond, Ath were taken. Brabant and Flanders were recovered. Places which had resisted the greatest Generals for months, for years; Provinces, disputed for ages, were the conquests of a summer. Nor was the Duke content to triumph alone. Solicitous for the general interest, his care extended to the remotest scenes of the war. He chose to lessen his own army, that he might enable the Leaders of other armies to conquer. To this it must be ascribed that Turin was relieved, the Duke of Savoy re-inflated, the French driven with confusion out of Italy.

These victories gave the Confederates an opportunity of carrying the war, on every side, into the Dominions of France. But she continued to enjoy a kind of peaceful Neutrality in Germany. From Italy she was once alarmed, and had no more to fear. The entire reduction of this power, whose ambition had caused, whose strength supported the war, seemed reserved for him alone, who had so triumphantly begun the glorious work.

The barrier of France, on the side of the Low-Countries, had been forming for more than half a century. What art, power, expence could do, had been done to render it impenetrable. Yet here she was most exposed; for here the Duke of MARLBOROUGH threatened to attack her.

To cover what they had gained by surprise, or had been yielded to them by treachery, the French marched to the banks of the Schelde. At their head were the Princes of the blood, and their most fortunate General, the Duke of Vendosme. Thus commanded, thus posted, they hoped to check the Victor in his course. Vain were their hopes. The Duke of MARLBOROUGH passed the river in their sight. He defeated their whole army. The approach of night concealed, the proximity of Ghent favoured their flight. They neglected nothing to repair their loss; to defend their frontier. New Generals, new Armies, appeared in the Netherlands. All contributed to enhance the glory, none were able to retard the progress of the Confederate arms.

Lisle, the bulwark of this barrier, was besieged. A numerous Garrison and a Marshal of France defended the place. Prince Eugene of Savoy commanded, the Duke of MARLBOROUGH covered and sustained the siege. The rivers were seized, and the communication with Holland interrupted. The Duke opened new communications with great labour and much greater art. Through countries, over-run by the enemy, the necessary convoys arrived in safety. One alone was attacked. The troops, which attacked it, were beat. The defence of Lisle was animated by assurances of relief.

The French assembled all their force. They marched towards the town. The Duke of MARLBOROUGH offered them battle, without suspending the siege. They abandoned the enterprise. They came to save the town. They were spectators of its fall.

From this conquest the Duke hastened to others. The posts taken by the enemy on the Schelde were surprized. That river was passed the second time; and notwithstanding the great preparations made to prevent it, without opposition.

Brussels, besieged by the Elector of Bavaria, was relieved. Ghent surrendered to the Duke in the middle of a winter remarkably severe. An army, little inferior to his own, marched out of the place.

As soon as the season of the year permitted him to open another campaign, the Duke besieged and took Tourney. He invested Mons. Near this City the French army, covered by thick woods, defended by treble intrenchments, waited to molest, nor presumed to offer battle. Even this was not attempted by them with impunity. On the last day of August 1709, the Duke attacked them in their camp. All was employed, nothing availed against the resolution of such a General; against the fury of such troops. The battle was bloody. The event decisive. The woods were pierced. The fortifications trampled down. The enemy fled. The town was taken. Denay, Bethune, Aire, St Venant, Bouchain underwent the same fate in two succeeding years. Their vigorous resistance could not save them. The army of France durst not attempt to relieve them. It seemed preserved to defend the capital of the Monarchy.

The prospect of this extrem distress was neither distant, nor dubious. The French acknowledged their Conqueror, and sued for peace.

These are the Actions of the Duke of MARLBOROUGH.

Perform'd in the Compass of few Years,
Sufficient to adorn the Annals of Ages.

The Admiration of other Nations
Will be conveyed to latest Posterity,
In the Histories even of the enemies of BRITAIN.

The Sense, which the BRITISH Nation had
Of his transcendent Merit,
Was expressed
In the most solemn, most effectual, most durable manner.

The ACTS of PARLIAMENT, inscribed on this Pillar, Shall stand
As long as the BRITISH Name and Language last, Illustrious Monuments Of MARLBOROUGH's Glory
And Of BRITAIN's Gratitude.

(1) About

1722. were carried on with great zeal on both sides; but the majority of the elected was clearly in favour of the Court; as was likewise that of the sixteen Scots Peers, who were the Dukes of Montrose and Roxburgh, the Marquis of Tweeddale, the Earls of Sutherland, Roths, London, Haddington, Buchan, Selkirk, Orkney, Stair, Deloraine, Ilay, Heptoun, Bute, and Aberdeen (1).

A plot discovered. It was King George's lot to meet with continual disturbances. The affair of the South-Sea, and the favour shewn to the Managers of that scheme, had raised great discontents. It was natural for the enemies of his Person and Government to improve such a juncture: Accordingly they did so, and, though without hope of any foreign assistance, they imagined it possible to succeed in their designs, unless prevented by a discovery. The King had some suspicion of a plot, which he had intimated in his speech to both Houses, but presently after his suspicions were turned into certainty. In the beginning of May he had full information of a conspiracy formed against him, the first notice of which came from the Duke of Orleans.

Precautions against the plot. Upon this information, a camp was marked out in Hyde-Park, to which the troops of the King's Household marched the next day. Orders were issued to all military Officers immediately to repair to their respective commands. Lieutenant-General Maccartney was dispatched to Ireland, to bring over some troops from thence into the West of England. Messengers were sent to Scotland to secure some suspected persons; and Mr Horace Walpole, who, some days before, went over to Holland, was instructed to desire the States, to keep in readiness the guarantee troops, in order to be sent into England in case of necessity. On the other hand, Colonel Churchill was sent to the Court of France, with a private Commission, probably to see how far the assurances from thence were to be depended upon. By these precautions the public tranquillity was preserved in Great-Britain. However, the apprehensions of the plot did not a little affect public credit; for, on May the 7th, South-Sea stock fell from 90 to 77; and the timorous or disaffected began a run upon the Bank. But, a few days after, the funds gradually rose to their former value.

A letter to the Lord-Mayor about it. To authorize these precautions, and sound the temper of the people, the Lord Townshend writ the following letter to the Lord-Mayor of London:

My Lord,

Whitehall, May 8, 1722.

His Majesty having nothing more at heart than the peace and safety of his good City of London, the protection of its inhabitants, and the support of public credit, has commanded me to acquaint your Lordship, that he has received repeated and unquestionable advices, that several of his subjects, forgetting the allegiance they owe to his Majesty, as well as the natural love they ought to bear to their Country, have entered into a wicked Conspiracy, in concert with Traitors abroad, for raising a Rebellion in this Kingdom in favour of a Popish Pretender, with a traiterous design to overthrow our excellent Constitution both in Church and State, and to subject a Protestant free people to tyranny and superstition; but I am persuaded, that it will be a great satisfaction to your Lordship and the City to find, that, at the same time I am ordered to inform you of this design, I am likewise commanded by his Majesty to let you know, that he is firmly assured, that the Authors of it neither are, nor will be supported, nor even countenanced by any foreign power. And as his Majesty has had timely notice of their wicked machinations, and has made the proper dispositions for defeating them, he has no reason to doubt, but by the continuance of the blessing of Almighty God, and the ready assistance of his faithful subjects, this effort of the malice of his enemies will be turned to their own confusion.

His Majesty makes no doubt, but your Lordship, pursuant to the trust reposed in you, will, in conjunction with the other Magistrates of his good City of London, exert, with the utmost care and vigilance, your authority at so important a conjuncture, for the preservation of the public Peace, and the security of the City.

I am, &c.

TOWNSHEND.

The reception this letter met with was very acceptable to the Court. An address was presented by the Court of Aldermen, thanking the King for his indulgent regard to the City of London, by informing them of the wicked designs of his enemies at home and abroad, and congratulating him upon the happy success of his Negotiations, which had procured assurances, that these traiterous purposes would not be supported by any foreign power:

When we reflect (continues the address) on the many blessings, which Britons enjoy, under the protection of a Prince, who makes the laws of this land his rule for the Government of his people, when we consider that neither the civil, or religious rights of your Majesty's subjects, have met with the least instance of violation, since your Majesty's happy Accession to the Throne of these Realms, when we recollect your Majesty's Royal clemency and benevolence, (since the last Rebellion) to numbers of those who had offended, in the highest degree, against their King, and the laws of their Country, we cannot but express the utmost abhorrence of those vile and detestable persons, who shall again conspire and attempt to bring a free and happy people under the yoke and tyranny of superstition, and to involve this Nation in a state of blood, misery, and utmost confusion.

And as these must be the unavoidable consequences attending any enterprize to alter our present happy Establishment, and to introduce a Popish one;

As Englishmen that value our liberties; as honest

(1) About this time David Graham, eldest son of the Duke of Montrose, was created Earl Graham of Belford in Northumberland; and Robert Ker, only son of the Duke of Roxburgh, Earl Ker of Wakefield in Yorkshire. John Lest, Earl of Roths, dying soon after his election, James Ogilvy, Earl of Finlater and Seafeld was elected in his room.

1722. best men that have sworn Allegiance to your Majesty, and who have abjured and renounced the Pretender; and as real friends to our excellent Constitution in Church and State (with a Protestant Prince at the head of it) we beg leave, in the most solemn manner, to declare to your Majesty, that, as we are bound in gratitude, we will exert ourselves in our several stations, with the utmost care and vigilance, for the preservation of the public peace and tranquillity, and for the restoring of public credit; and that we will use our sincere and hearty endeavours for the firm support of your Majesty upon the Throne, and for the making your Reign easy and happy.

The example of London was followed by many other Cities and Boroughs, who all expressed the same zeal and devotion. But, notwithstanding these assurances, the King's journey to Hanover was laid aside, though the Regency had been settled, in which the Prince of Wales had no part. The Court, however, went to Kensington, and the Prince and Princess retired to Richmond.

Several persons up.

Various were the reports about the nature and discovery of the Conspiracy, as the Government did not as yet think fit to publish the particulars. However, to remove all suspicions of its reality, several persons were taken up. On the 21st of May, Mr George Kelly, who went under the name of Johnson, an Irish Clergyman, was seized at his lodgings in Bury-Street, by three Messengers, for treasonable correspondences; and, having delivered his sword and papers to them, they placed them in a window, and went in search of other things. Their negligence gave him an opportunity of recovering his sword, which he drew, and swore he would run the first man through the body, that disturbed him in what he was doing, which was burning his papers in a candle with his left hand, whilst he held the drawn sword in the other. When the papers were burnt, he surrendered himself.

On the 4th of August, Mr Robert Cotton, of Huntingtonshire, one of the Gentlemen concerned in the late Rebellion, and cleared by the act of Grace, was seized at his lodgings over against Somerset-House, as were also his Footman and Landlady. Two days after, Mr Cochran and Mr Smith were brought prisoners from Edinburgh, and Cochran was committed to the Tower. One John Sample, formerly a servant to Sir Robert Sutton, while he resided as Envoy Extraordinary at the Court of France, having been taken up for High-treason, and being in custody of a Messenger, found means, on the 5th of August, to make his escape; upon which a proclamation was issued out, with a reward of 1000*l.* for apprehending him. And, on the 13th, another proclamation, with the like reward, was published for apprehending Mr Thomas Carte, a Nonjuring Clergyman, against whom a warrant had been issued by one of the Secretaries of State.

On the 24th of August, Dr Francis Atterbury, Bishop of Rockester, and Dean of Westminster, was apprehended by some of the King's Messengers, who, having searched his house, and secured some of his papers, carried him before a Committee of the Privy-Council, who, having examined him, committed him to the Tower for High-treason. The next day, Mr Thomas Moore, Vicar of St Botolph Aldersgate, formerly Secretary to the Bishop of Rockester, was likewise taken up, and afterwards examined, but soon after discharged.

About the middle of September, Mr Bingley, Mr Neynoe, a young Irish Priest, and two other persons, were seized at Deal, and brought up prisoners to London. About the same time Mr Christopher Layer, a young Counsellor of the Temple, being also apprehended, he endeavoured, the next day, to make his escape; and succeeded so far in his design, that he found means to get out at a back-window two story high, and having reached the river-side, he gave a Sculler some guineas to carry him over the water to Southwark with all possible expedition. But, being discovered, upon his going off, by a servant-maid, he was immediately pursued, and, a hue and cry being raised after him, he was taken, and brought back, and the next morning committed to the Tower. On the 21st of September, he was brought under a strong guard to the Cock-pit at Whitehall, and, having been some hours under examination, before a Committee of the Privy-Council, was remanded to his confinement. The day before, Mr Sayer, of the Temple, was taken into custody; as was also, the next day, Mr Stewart, Clerk to Mr Layer, while his Master was under examination. The same day, John Plunket, Serjeant to a Company of Invalids at Plsmouth, was seized at Chelsea, upon suspicion of being concerned with Mr Layer, and, after examination, committed to the custody of a Messenger. On the 24th, Mr Shippen's house in Norfolk-street was searched for papers, that might give light into some suspicions. Warrants were likewise issued out for apprehending the Lord Norib and Grey, who was gone as far as the Isle of Wight, and had put himself on board a Smuggler's sloop, having been some time at Mr Holmes's house in that Island. Colonel Morgan, the Deputy-Governor, being informed of his being on board the sloop, sent to a Captain of one of the King's frigates, to have an eye upon the sloop, and, when going to fail, to send his long-boat aboard, and secure all the passengers on suspicion; which being done, the Lord Norib and Grey at first pretended to be another person; but, finding that did him no service, he confessed who he was; and he and the rest of the passengers were carried before the Governor, who told them, he must secure them till he could write to Court; and, upon an answer from thence, he had orders to send them up in custody. The Lord Norib and Grey's house, in Great Queen-Street, being also searched for papers, the Messenger found there Mr Swathfigger, Secretary to the Earl of Orrery, who was seized and committed to custody; and, the next morning, Septemb. 27, the Earl himself was brought to town from his seat at Brittel in Buckinghamshire, and, having been examined at the Cock-pit, was ordered to be confined that night at his own house in Glas-House-Street, under a guard of thirty soldiers; and, the next day, in the evening, was again examined by a Committee of the Privy-Council, and committed prisoner to the Tower; as was also the Lord Norib and Grey, being brought up from Plsmouth by Lieutenant-General Maccartney, Colonel Gordon, and a Messenger.

On the 26th of September Mr Fleetwood was taken 1722. taken into custody, and Mrs Laver, ignorant of her husband's fate, and coming over from France, was about the same time seized at Dover.

Two days after Mr Stephen Neynoe, the Irish Priest, seized at Deal, being closely confined in the house of Mr Constantine Phipps presented a petition to the Court at the Sessions-House in the Old Bailey, in the name of Mrs Morrice, the Bishop's daughter, praying that, in consideration of the Bishop's ill state of health, he might be either brought to a speedy trial, or bailed, or discharged: But it was over-ruled, as were also the petitions of two other prisoners for the plot, Cochran and Dennis Killy.

The commitment of the Bishop of Rochester made a great noise through the whole Kingdom, and gave occasion to the disaffected to heighten jealousies and discontents. They pretended his confinement was injurious to the Church of England, and the Episcopal order, and went so far as to offer up public prayers for him (under pretence of his being afflicted with the Gout) in most Churches and Chapels in London and Westminster, on Sunday the 16th of September. On the other hand, endeavours were used to remove the prejudices of the Clergy against the Ministry, and Dr Gibson, Bishop of Lincoln (now of London) wrote a circular letter, wherein he sets forth the indulgence wherewith the Bishop was treated: The great respect the order of Bishops met with from the King, who in the disposal of his preferments was directed by their advice: The improbability of so unpopular an act, without a just and even necessary foundation: And lastly the safety of the Nation, which requires that all delinquents should be censured as such, without any regard to the office, or title, or honour they bear.

Whilst the Public was employed in condemning or acquitting the imprisoned Bishop, the King thought proper to shew himself to the people. He set out the latter end of August for his Western progress, accompanied by the Prince of Wales. He came to Hackwood, a seat of the Duke of Bolton, near Basingstoke in Hampshire, on the 28th of August, lay there that night, and the next day arrived at Salisbury, being received every where with demonstrations of the greatest affection and joy. On the 30th he went to the camp near that City, and reviewed Londonderry's and Wade's Regiments of horse, and Evans's and Gore's Regiments of dragoons; and Will's, Cadogan's, Poock's, Stanwix's, Groves's, Montague's, and Clayton's Regiments of foot. The King returned by the way of Winchester, visited Portsmouth, lay at Stanstead, the seat of the Earl of Scarborough, and arrived at Kensington the first of September.

The noise made by the Conspiracy seemed to require the meeting of the Parliament as soon as the season would permit. Accordingly, on the 9th of October, the King came to the House of Lords, and opened the Session with a speech very proper to remove any doubts which might have been entertained of the plot:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I AM concerned to find myself obliged, at the opening of this Parliament, to acquaint you, that a dangerous Conspiracy has been for some time formed, and is still carrying on, against my Person and Government, in favour of a Popish Pretender.

The discoveries I have made here, the informations I have received from my Ministers abroad, and the intelligences I have had from the powers in alliance with me, and indeed from most parts of Europe, have given me most ample and concurrent proofs of this wicked design.

The Conspirators have, by their Emissaries, made the strongest instances for assistance from foreign powers, but were disappointed in their expectations. However, confiding in their numbers, and not discouraged by their former ill success, they resolved once more upon their own strength, to attempt the subversion of my Government.

To this end they provided considerable sums of money, engaged great numbers of Officers from abroad, secured large quantities of arms and ammunition, and thought themselves in such readiness, that, had not the Conspiracy been timely discovered, we should, without doubt, before now, have seen the whole Nation, and particularly the City of London, involved in blood and confusion.

The care I have taken has, by the blessing of God, hitherto prevented the execution of their traitorous projects. The troops have been encamped all this summer: Six Regiments (though very necessary for the security of that Kingdom) have been brought over from Ireland: The States-General have given me assurances, that they would keep a considerable body of forces in readiness to embark on the first notice of their being wanted here, which was all I desired of them, being determined not to put my people to any more expence than what was absolutely necessary for their peace and security.

Some of the Conspirators have been taken up, and secured, and endeavours are used for the apprehending others.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Having thus in general laid before you the state of the present Conspiracy, I must leave to your consideration what is proper and necessary to be done for the quiet and safety of the Kingdom. I cannot but believe the hopes and expectations of our enemies are very ill-grounded, in flattering themselves that the late discontents, occasioned by private losses and misfortunes, however indolently and maliciously fomented, are turned into disaffection, and a spirit of Rebellion.

Had I, since my Accession to the Throne, ever attempted any innovation in our established Religion; had I, in any one instance, invaded the liberty and property of my subjects, I should less wonder at any endeavours to alienate the affections of my people, and draw them into measures, that can end in nothing but their own destruction.

The King takes a progress.

First Session of the second Parliament.

1722.

But to hope to persuade a free people, in full enjoyment of all that is dear and valuable to them, to exchange freedom for slavery, the Protestant Religion for Popery, and to sacrifice at once the price of so much blood and treasure, as have been spent in defence of our present Establishment, seems an insatiation not to be accounted for. But, however vain and unsuccessful these desperate projects may prove in the end, they have at present so far the desired effect, as to create uneasiness and diffidence in the minds of my people; which our enemies labour to improve to their own advantage. By forming plots they depreciate all property, that is vested in the public funds, and then complain of the low state of credit. They make an increase of the national expences necessary, and then clamour at the burthen of taxes, and endeavour to impute to my Government, as grievances, the mischiefs and calamities, which they alone create and occasion.

I wish for nothing more, than to see the public expences lessened, and the great national debt put in a method of being gradually reduced and discharged, with a strict regard to parliamentary faith; and a more favourable opportunity could never have been hoped for, than the state of profound peace, which we now enjoy with all our neighbours. But public credit will always languish under daily alarms and apprehensions of public danger. And, as the enemies of our peace have been able to bring this immediate mischief upon us, nothing can prevent them from continuing to subject the Nation to new and constant difficulties and distresses, but the wisdom, zeal, and vigorous resolutions of this Parliament.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I have ordered the accounts to be made up, and laid before you, of the extraordinary charge, that has been incurred this summer, for the defence and safety of the Kingdom; and I have been particularly careful, not to direct any expence to be made greater or sooner than was of absolute necessity.

I have likewise ordered estimates to be prepared, and laid before you, for the service of the year ensuing; and I hope the further provisions, which the treasonable practices of our enemies have made necessary for our common safety, may be ordered with such frugality, as very little to exceed the Supplies of the last year.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I need not tell you of what infinite concern it is to the peace and tranquillity of the Kingdom, that this Parliament should, upon this occasion, exert themselves with a more than ordinary zeal and vigour. An entire union among all, that sincerely wish well to the present Establishment, is now become absolutely necessary. Our enemies have too long taken advantage from your differences and dissensions. Let it be known, that the spirit of Popery, which breathes nothing but confusion to the civil and religious rights of a Protestant Church and Kingdom, however abandoned some few may be, in despite of all obligations divine and human, has not so far possessed my people, as to make them ripe for such a fatal change. Let the world see, that the general disposition of the Nation is no invitation to foreign powers to invade us, nor encouragement to domestic enemies to kindle a civil war in the bowels of the Kingdom. Your own interest and welfare call upon you to defend yourselves. I shall wholly rely upon the Divine Protection, the support of my Parliament, and the affections of my people, which I shall endeavour to preserve, by steadily adhering to the Constitution in Church and State, and continuing to make the laws of the Realm the rule and measure of all my actions.

1722.

The addresses of thanks were full of the sentiments which so strong and pathetic a speech naturally produced. The detestation and abhorrence, as well as the indignation conceived by both Houses, at the hearing of these traitorous and dangerous designs against his Majesty in favour of a Popish Pretender were unspeakable. The Commons especially expressed themselves in a very affecting manner: 'We cannot express too great an abhorrence of such unnatural practices, nor too great an indignation against those who would have made the Capital of this flourishing Kingdom a scene of blood and desolation. Wicked men! whilst they have the malice to revile your Government, and attempt to overturn it, at the same time have the insolence to depend upon the clemency of it for their security: While they are endeavouring to destroy all liberty, they are clamouring that a few of them are, for the public safety, confined: Whilst they are attempting to destroy all property, they are murmuring at the necessary taxes given to your Majesty for the security of it: And, whilst they act against all law themselves, they trust, and are confident, that, even in their own cases, the laws of the Realm will be the rule and measure of your actions.' To this were added assurances of not only making good all the extraordinary expences already incurred, but of cheerfully granting whatever should be necessary for the safety of the Kingdom, as they were entirely convinced, that they could by no other means restore public credit, and attempt the gradual reduction of the great national debt, than by doing every thing in their power for the support of his Majesty's Government, and happy establishment in his Royal Family.

The expressions of doing every thing in their power were objected against by some Members as too general, and it was moved to add the words, with due regard to the liberty of the Subject, the Constitution in Church and State, and the Laws now in force. But the motion was rejected, upon Mr Pulteney's representing, that such a clause would be injurious to the King, since it would look like making a condition or bargain with the King, and tacitly imply, either that the laws had already been infringed, or that the Commons were jealous, lest his Majesty should, for the future, break in upon the Constitution.

As

1722. As the discovery of the plot made the suspension of the Habeas Corpus act necessary, a bill was brought in for that purpose the very first day of the Session, by the Duke of Grafton, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, who represented the necessity of strengthening the hands of the King's Ministers, in order to a full detection and entire suppression of the traitorous designs and practices against the Government, by empowering his Majesty to secure all suspected persons. Accordingly, it was proposed that the Habeas Corpus act should be suspended till the 24th of October 1723.

This was opposed chiefly by the Earls of Anglesea, Cowper, Strafford, and Coningsby, and the Lords Trevor, Batburs, and Bingley, who represented, that, the Habeas Corpus act being, on all hands, admitted to be the greatest and strongest bulwark of English liberty, it did not conflict with the wisdom of Parliament to suspend it, without an absolute necessity. That, indeed, in cases of actual Rebellion, or intended Invasion, that act had been, at times before, suspended; but yet this was done sparingly, by degrees, and never for above the term of six months. That this consideration put them under a very melancholy apprehension for the very being or effect of that excellent law, since the suspension of it for a year might be as good a precedent for the suspending it, on another occasion, for the term of two years, as any former precedent was now for the present suspension. That, the horrid and detestable Conspiracy, which occasioned this suspension, having been discovered and notified to the City of London above five months before, and divers of the Conspirators imprisoned for it a considerable time past, it was very unreasonable to suppose, that the danger of this plot, in the hands of an able, faithful, and diligent Ministry, would continue for a year or more yet to come; and that in so high a degree, as to require a suspension of the liberty of the subject; for so they took the Habeas Corpus act to be. That, indeed, their just apprehensions would, in a great measure, be removed, if they could flatter themselves with the hopes, that his Majesty, on whose known equity, goodness, and clemency, they entirely depended, would remain among us, during the whole time of this suspension: But that his Majesty, not having visited his Dominions abroad these two last years, would, very probably, leave the Kingdom the next spring to that end. That, in his Majesty's absence, this great power of suspecting and imprisoning the subjects at will, and detaining them in prison till the 24th of October 1723, and for as much longer time, as till they can, after that, take the benefit of the Habeas Corpus act (if they could then do it at all) would be lodged in the hands of our fellow-subjects, who could not be supposed to be above all prejudices and partialities, as their Lordships were sure his Majesty was; and who, besides, might have private piques and resentments to gratify. That this bill did, in effect, vest the Ministers with an authority almost as arbitrary and extensive as that of a Roman Dictator, since they might inflict, even on innocent persons (who should have the misfortune to displease them) a punishment of above a year's imprisonment, which comes little short of death, and which oftentimes occasions it. That the Dictatorial power among the Romans was always ended ed or laid down immediately after the occasion, for which it was given, was over; and it was remarkable, that it was never continued much longer, till a little before the Roman Commonwealth (from which all other States draw so many maxims of Government) lost its liberty. That so long a suspension of the Habeas Corpus act weakens the provision made in the bill for the Members of either House of Parliament, that they shall not be committed or detained, sitting the Parliament, until the matter be first communicated, and the consent obtained of the Houses respectively, since it is very probable, the Parliament will not be sitting the greatest part of the time, for which this bill was enacted, and would continue a law. That such is the weakness of human nature, that the apprehension of what might befall a Member of Parliament, while the Parliament is not sitting, might have some influence on the freedom of Parliament. And, upon the whole matter, since so long a suspension was liable to so many inconveniences, they thought it advisable and consistent with the usual prudence of that August Assembly, to reduce it to the term of six months; at the end of which, if there appeared to be a necessity for it, it might be continued six months longer, as was done before in this very Reign, during the late Rebellion.

These objections to the bill itself, or continuance of it for a year, were answered by the Lords Townshend, Harcourt, Carteret, the Dukes of Argyle, Wharton, and Newcastle, and some others. They represented, 'That the Habeas Corpus act had been suspended upon much less important occasions, upon bare intimations of a plot; whereas the King had now laid before the Parliament the particulars of a Conspiracy to introduce a Popish Prince: That it was necessary the suspension should continue a whole year, since the Conspirators (who probably would lie still all the winter) would exert themselves in the summer when the Parliament was up; and might flatter themselves with the hopes of foreign assistance.' After these debates, the suspension, being put to the vote, was carried without a division, and the bill was sent down to the Commons.

The debates (which ran chiefly upon the continuance of it) were much the same as in the House of Lords. Mr Spencer Cowper said, 'That he and all his family had come as early and readily into the Revolution, and, on all occasions, had appeared as zealous for the present happy Establishment, as any one: But yet he could not be of opinion to trust the liberties of the people in the hands of any Ministry, for so long a time as above a year. That neither in King William's nor Queen Anne's Reigns, nor since his present Majesty's Accession to the Throne, even in times of open and actual Rebellion, the Habeas Corpus act had ever been suspended for above six months; and therefore he moved, that the present suspension might be limited to that term.' Sir Joseph Jekyll added, 'That, if, at the end of those six months, there appeared to be a necessity for a farther suspension, he should, and he doubted not but the whole House would readily come into it.' At last, Mr Robert Walpole rose up, and laid before the Assembly some particulars of the dangerous Conspiracy, which for some time had been, and was still carrying on, for the utter subversion of the 1722. the present happy Settlement. He said, 'That this wicked design was formed about Christmas last: That the Conspirators had at first made application to some Potentates abroad, for an assistance of five thousand men: That being denied, they afterwards (about the month of April) made farther application and earnest instances for three thousand men: Being again disappointed in their expectations from foreign assistance, they resolved desperately to go on, confiding in their own strength, and fondly depending on the disaffection in England: That their first attempt was to have been the seizing of the Bank, the Exchequer, and such other places, where the public money was lodged: That the Government had undoubted informations of this plot ever since May last; but, nevertheless, thought fit not to take up any body, because, there being then two terms coming on together, the Conspirators would have had the benefit of the Habeas Corpus act; and so the apprehending them was put off till the long vacation.' He added, 'That the traitorous designs against his Majesty's Person and Government had been carrying on ever since the death of the late Queen; and it could be proved, that there had been a meeting of some considerable persons, one of whom was not far off, wherein it had been proposed to proclaim the Pretender at the Royal Exchange: That an exact account of this detestable Conspiracy would, in due time, be laid before the Parliament: And, as to the business now before them, though it was true, that the Habeas Corpus act had never before been suspended for above six months; yet, considering the Lords had made this suspension for a whole year, if the Commons should go about to alter it, the same might occasion a difference between the two Houses, which, at this time of jealousy and danger, might sound ill in foreign Courts.' After this speech, the bill passed the House as sent down by the Lords, and, on the 17th of October, received the Royal assent.

Pursuant to a clause in the act, that no Member of either House should be imprisoned during their sitting, till the matter be first communicated to the House, and their consent obtained, the King by the Lord Carteret desired the consent of the Lords to detain prisoners the Bishop of Rockester, the Lord North and Grey, and the Earl of Orrery, which was readily given.

Soon after passing the bill, the Duke of Norfolk was taken into custody at the Bath, and brought up to London. He was examined by the Council, and afterwards committed to the Tower on suspicion of High-Treason.

When the Lord Townshend acquainted the Peers with this affair, those that opposed the suspension of the Habeas Corpus act were against consenting to the Duke's commitment. They represented, that the cause and ground of his being suspected of High-Treason should be communicated to the House, and that a general suspicion was not sufficient: That this would subject every Peer, even while the Parliament was sitting, to unwarrantable imprisonments, and might produce very ill effects. But their reasons were not heard, and after a long debate the House consented to the Duke's being detained prisoner in the Tower.

As a farther proof of the Plot, the King, on the 16th of November, sent the following message to the House of Peers: 1722.

'His Majesty having been informed, that many scandalous declarations in print have been by several foreign posts transmitted into this Kingdom, in order to be dispersed among his good and faithful subjects, to poison their minds, and seduce them from their allegiance; several of those declarations have, by his Majesty's order, ever since his Majesty received from both Houses of Parliament the last most solemn and acceptable assurances of their fidelity, been intercepted; and amongst them an original in writing, signed, as his Majesty has good reason to believe by the Pretender himself. This, together with one of the printed copies, his Majesty has ordered to be laid before you, as a matter not unworthy of your consideration.'

This declaration (dated September 20, 1722, Substance of the declaration. at Lucca) was directed by James III. King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, to all his loving subjects of the three Nations, and to all foreign Princes and States, to serve as a foundation for a lasting peace in Europe, and signed James Rex. The Pretender begins with shewing how fond he is of his subjects; that, though the obligation he owes to his own honour be great, yet the obligation to the safety and tranquillity of his native Country is above all ties the dearest to him and the tenderest. He then talks of the late violations to the freedom of elections: Of Conspiracies invented on purpose to give pretence for new oppressions: Of infamous informers: And a state of proscription in which he concludes every honest well-meaning man to be. These considerations have engaged him to enter seriously into himself, and examine his heart, what sacrifice to make on his own part for the public peace, especially of these Kingdoms, of which he is the natural and undoubted father. Then he proposes, that, if King George will quietly deliver to him the possession of his Throne, he will in return bestow upon him the title of King in his native Dominions, and invite all other States to confirm it, with a promise to leave to him his succession to the British Dominions secure, whenever in due course his natural right shall take place. As motives to this resignation, he says that in King George's native Dominions an uncontested right will free him from the crime and reproach of tyranny, and represents the difference between a calm undisturbed reign over a willing people, and a restless possession in a strange land, where authority, forcing the inclinations of the people, can only be supported by blood and violence, eternally subject to fears and alarms, even when no danger appears. He concludes with saying, King George's settlement here is frail and uncertain, because his title shall, whilst the Pretender has health or any descendants in being, be for ever disputed, conjuring him, instead of advising with an imperious Ministry, as much his tyrants as the Nation's, to consult his reason, to ask his conscience, and to examine his interest and glory, and then his very ambition will admonish him to descend from a Throne, which must be always shaking, to mount another, where his seat will be firm and secure.

When this declaration was read in the House of Lords, it was unanimously resolved, that it was a false, insolent, and traitorous libel, the 1722. highest indignity to the King, full of presumption and arrogance, in supposing the Pretender in a condition to offer terms to his Majesty, and injurious to the honour of the British Nation, in imagining that a free Protestant people, happy under the Government of the best of Princes, could be so infatuated, as, without the utmost contempt and indignation, to hear of any terms from a Popish bigotted Pretender. Then they ordered the declaration to be burnt at the Royal Exchange. The King's message, the declaration, and the Lords resolution being communicated to the Commons, they agreed with the Lords, only adding, that the Sheriffs should attend in person at the burning of the declaration. An address was presented by both Houses, expressing their utmost astonishment and indignation at the surprizing insolence of the Pretender, and assuring, they were determined to support the King's title to the Crown, with their lives and fortunes (1).

A tax upon Papists. The Commons proceeding to consider of the ways and means to raise the Supplies, a motion was made, that, towards defraying the expences occasioned by the late rebellion and disorders, the sum of 100,000*l.* should be raised (in lieu of all forfeitures and profits of the two thirds of their registered estates) upon the real and personal estates of all Papists or persons educated in the Popish Religion. This was opposed by Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Dr. Friend, who said, that such an extraordinary tax would carry the face of persecution, which was inconsistent with the principles and temper of the Protestant Religion: Adding, some of those, who had their education in foreign Seminaries, proved some of the best friends to the present Government. To this Mr. Tonge answered, That he knew very little of foreign education, but he doubted very much, that loyalty to King George was taught by Priests and Jesuits in Romish Seminaries. The Lord Gage, who was bred a Roman Catholic, and had several relations of that Religion, said, That he believed most of them to be very loyal subjects, though, by their principles, they cannot take the oath of Supremacy; and therefore he proposed, that a new oath of Allegiance might be framed for them. Mr. William Thompson spoke on the same side, and declared his abhorrence of persecuting any body on account of their opinions in Religion. This was answered by Recorder Thompson, who stated the true notion of persecution, which, in his opinion, was only when any one is punished for his particular opinion in Religion, and for serving God according to that opinion, and the dictates of his conscience. But that (said he) was not the case here, for the extraordinary tax, now intended to be raised upon the Papists, was not a punishment for their being Roman Catholics, but on account of penalties they had at divers times incurred for being enemies to the Civil Government, raising rebellions, and contriving plots against the State. At last, Mr. Walpole represented 'the great dangers this Nation had been in, ever since the Reformation, from the constant endeavours of Popery to subvert our happy Constitution and the Protestant Religion, by the most cruel, violent, and unjustifiable methods: That he would not take upon him to charge any particular person among them with being concerned in the present horrid Conspiracy: But that it was notorious to the whole world, that many of them had been engaged in the Preston Rebellion, and some were executed for it; and the present Plot was contrived at Rome, and countenanced in Popish Countries: That many of the Papists were not only well-wishers to it, but had contributed large sums of money towards carrying it on; and therefore he thought it very reasonable, since they made such savings of the incomes of their estates, that the same should go towards the great expence they and the Pretender's friends had put the Nation to.' In the course of the bill, which was ordered to be brought in, the friends of the Roman Catholics, when they saw it was like to pass, took the opportunity of a thin House, to clog it with a clause for including the Papists and Nonjurors of Scotland,

(1) The address was as follows:

'We your Majesty's most dutiful and faithful subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled, being deeply affected with the sense of those many blessings, which we have constantly enjoyed, and hope long to enjoy, under your Majesty's most just and gracious Government; and being thoroughly convinced, that our religious and civil rights, as well as the very being of the British Name and Constitution, do, under God, interely depend upon the preservation of your Majesty's sacred Person, and of the Protestant Succession, as settled by law in your Royal line, are filled with the utmost astonishment and indignation at the unexampled presumption and arrogance of the Pretender to your Dominions, in daring to offer such an indignity to your Majesty and the British Nation, as to declare to your subjects, and to all foreign Princes and States, that he finds himself in a condition to offer terms to your Majesty, and even to capitulate with you for the absolute surrender of the Religion and Liberties of a free Nation.

However great the infatuation of his Advisers may be, we are sensible, nothing could have raised his or their hopes to so extravagant a degree of presumption, but repeated encouragements and assurances from the Conspirators at home, founded on the most injurious and gross misrepresentations of the inclinations and affections of your Majesty's subjects; and a rash conclusion, that because some, from whom it ought least to have been expected, had broke through the solemn restraint of reiterated oaths, in order to raise themselves on the ruin of their Country; therefore the whole body of the Nation was ripe for the same fatal defection, and ready to exchange the mild and legal Government of a most indulgent Prince, for the boundless rage of an attainted Fugitive, bred up in the maxims of tyranny and superstition.

But we, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, resolve, by a steady and constant adherence to your Government, to wipe off this stain and imputation from the name of Britons, and to convince the world, that those wicked designs, formed against your Majesty's sacred Person and Government, which the insolence of this declaration proves to be most real, while it affects to treat them as imaginary, and impracticable against a Prince relying on, and supported by the vigour and duty of a British Parliament, and the affections of his people.

And we beg leave, in the most solemn manner, to assure your Majesty, that neither the impotent menaces of foreign assistance, nor the utmost efforts of domestic traitors, shall ever deter us from standing by your Majesty with our lives and fortunes, and supporting your Majesty's most just title to the Crown of these Realms, against the Pretender, and all his open and secret Abettors, both at home and abroad.

1722. Scotland, which was carried by five voices only in the Committee. But, when this amendment came to be considered by the House, Mr. Walpole represented, That, the names and real estates of the Scots Papists and Nonjurors not being registered, it was impossible to ascertain their proportion of this tax. Upon which the clause was rejected, and the bill, having passed, was sent up to the Lords, where it was also agreed to with another bill from the Commons, to oblige all persons, being Papists, in Scotland, and all persons in Great-Britain refusing or neglecting to take the oaths appointed for the security of the King's Person and Government, to register their names and real estates. Both these bills received the Royal assent.

Trial of Laver.

Mr. Laver was brought to his trial on the 21st of November, at the King's Bench. His indictment set forth, 'That he had been employed in forming a most traitorous and horrid Plot and Conspiracy against his Majesty and his Government, by lifting men in Essex for the Pretender's service, in order to stir up a Rebellion; and also, that he had held correspondence with the Pretender, by carrying letters and treasonable papers to him beyond seas, and from him to his Majesty's disaffected subjects in this Kingdom.' The first evidence proved, that the Earl of Cadogan was to be seized, and the Tower at the same time; afterwards the Bank of England, and then his Majesty and the Prince of Wales. The instigating men for the Pretender was proved by several persons, to whom Mr. Laver had given money; and, after a trial of about eighteen hours, he was found guilty, and received sentence of death; but, being reprieved from time to time, the House of Commons appointed a Committee to examine him in relation to the Conspiracy, consisting of Spencer Compton, the Speaker; Robert Walpole, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir Joseph Jekyll, Master of the Rolls; Paul Melbourn, Comptroller of the Household; William Pulteney; John Smith, Teller of the Exchequer; Richard Hampden, Lieutenant General Wills, and Sir Robert Sutton. They chose Stephen Poyntz to be their Secretary. Mr. Laver's reprieve was prolonged on this occasion, and, his trial not being published, the Earl of Anglesey, in the House of Lords, took notice, 'That, at the opening of this Session, his Majesty, in his speech from the Throne, had been pleased to acquaint both Houses with the discovery of a dangerous Conspiracy, which for some time had been formed, and was still carrying on against his Person and Government: That some of the Conspirators had been taken up and secured; and that endeavours were used for the apprehending others. That, one of the principal Plotters having since that time been tried and condemned, it was somewhat strange, that no particulars relating to the Conspiracy had yet been communicated to that House, the rather, because several of their Members had been apprehended, and were still confined, on suspicion of being concerned in it.' And therefore he moved, 'That the Judges of the King's Bench be ordered to cause the trial of Christopher Laver to be forthwith printed and published, being first perused by the King's Council.' This motion was supported by the Earls Cowper, Strafford, and Aylesford, the Lords Trevor, Ratburj, Lechmere, and some others. To this it was answered by the Lord Carteret, 'That the order moved for was altogether unnecessary, directions having been long before given by the Judges for the printing and publishing of the trial with all convenient speed: That the trial being of a very large extent, and several parts of it, that were taken down in short-hand, requiring a great deal of time to be revised and rectified by the Judges and the Council on both sides, had occasioned the delay complained of; but that, the printing of the trial being now in great forwardness, the same would be published in a few days.' Upon this a motion for an order to the Judges was rejected, and about a week after the trial was published. However, sixteen Lords entered their protests.

These debates probably hastened the publishing of the trial; and, though Laver was still reprieved from time to time, in hopes that he would make a full discovery of the plot, he waved it; and therefore he was at last executed at Tyburn, his head being carried to Newgate, and the next day fixed up at Temple-Bar; but his quarters were delivered to those, who came for them. He was attended at his death by Mr. George Hawkins and Mr. John Berryman, two Clergymen. His speech was very short; but in it he justified himself in what he had done, and recommended the interest of the Pretender. He delivered a paper to Mr. Price, the Under-Sheriff, and another to a friend.

The report of the Committee appointed to examine Mr. Laver, and others, having been delivered to the House on the 1st of March, by Mr. Pulteney, the Chairman, it appeared from thence, that a design had been long carrying on by persons of figure and distinction at home, in conjunction with traitors abroad, for placing the Pretender on the Throne of these Kingdoms. That various methods had been attempted, and various times fixed for putting this design in execution. That the first intention was to have procured a regular body of foreign forces to invade these Kingdoms at the time of the late elections; but that the Conspirators, being disappointed in their expectation, next resolved to make an attempt at the time, that it was generally believed the King intended to go to Hanover, by the help of such Officers and Soldiers, as could pass into England unobserved from abroad, under the command of the late Duke of Ormond, who was to have landed in the river with a great quantity of arms, provided in Spain for that purpose, at which time the Tower was likewise to have been made a place of arms. But this design being also disappointed by the discoveries made in England, and the King's putting off his journey; by the incampment of his forces at home, as well as the sending for those from Ireland, and by the readiness of his Allies the States-General, to assist him in case of need; by the orders given in Spain, that the late Duke of Ormond should not be suffered to pass through that Kingdom, the Conspirators found themselves under a necessity of deferring their enterprize till the breaking up of the camp: During that interval they were labouring by their agents and emissaries to corrupt and seduce the Officers and Soldiers of the army, and depended so much on this defection, as to entertain hopes of placing the Pretender on the Throne, tho' they should obtain no assistance from abroad, which nevertheless they still continued to solicit for.

1722-23. The truth and reality of these designs were confirmed by the concurrent advices from almost all parts of Europe, sent by persons who appeared to have had no communication with each other. These advices were also verified by several discoveries made at home by the informations and confessions of the parties concerned, as well as by a long series of correspondence which the Conspirators furnished the Government against themselves.

From several letters and circumstances it appeared, that the first design was to have been executed with the assistance of foreign forces, at the time of the elections; that the Pretender, the late Duke of Ormond, Lord Orrery, and the Bishop of Rochester, were of this opinion; that memorials were drawn up here, to be presented to the Regent for this purpose, and that those memorials were actually presented, or, at least, application made to the Regent in consequence of them, by directions from persons in England; and that such dispositions had been made for this enterprize at that time, as broke out into riots at some of the elections; which must have been allowed to have been no unfavourable juncture for such an attempt, considering the discontents occasioned by the late South-Sea scheme, which the Conspirators have all along flattered themselves they should be able to improve into a spirit of Rebellion, and the liberties usually taken at such a season, when all the Freeholders of England are necessarily assembled together, and when the whole Nation is too apt to be in a ferment, even in the quietest times.

This design failing, on account (as it is reasonable to believe) of the Conspirators not being able to obtain the forces they solicited from abroad, and of their being themselves divided in opinion as to the time and manner of execution, their next endeavour was to attempt an insurrection at the time, when they supposed his Majesty would be going to Hanover. For it appeared by several particulars, that the Duke of Ormond was to have landed in England with officers and arms about that time. The reason of Ormond's not coming proceeded from the orders issued at Madrid and in France to prevent him, and by the King's not going abroad. In a letter to one of the Secretaries of State from Rome, notice was taken, that a person of great distinction at that place had declared it as his opinion, that the grand project formed in a Conclave, for placing the Pretender on the Throne of Britain, was going to be put in execution; but that the same person afterwards assigned four reasons for its having miscarried, which were, the want of money, the suspected faith of the Regent, the want of skill in those who were to conduct it, and the pusillanimity of the Pretender, who, to avoid hazarding his own person, proposed to send his child.

The Report farther observed, that the Leaders, in order (as it is natural to believe) to save themselves from the danger of legal conviction, chose to manage their correspondences by the intervention of persons of a meaner rank and figure, and of desperate fortunes, who, they hoped, might escape the observation of the Government; being no otherwise considerable, than as the trust reposed in them made them so. Of these inferior Agents, Laver appears to have been principally intrusted by Lord North and Grey, and Lord Orrery; and Plunket, who travelled with Laver to Rome, and whose treasonable practices and correspondences are closely connected with those of Laver, writes of himself as transacting part of his treasons with Lord Orrery's Clerk, and sends frequent accounts to the Pretender's Agents abroad, of matters relating to the said Lord.

George Kelly, a Nonjuring Clergyman, appears to have been the person principally entrusted by the Bishop of Rochester, and to have been employed in writing for him, and conveying letters to him, until the time that he, Kelly, was first taken into custody; after which, it appears to the Committee, that Thomas Carte, another Nonjuring Clergyman, was entrusted and employed by the Bishop in the same manner; and the Committee observed, that George Kelly's Correspondence has a close connexion with that of Dennis Kelly, and likewise that he appears to have been privy to Plunket's and Neynne's transactions.

The person employed by the Duke of Norfolk, in conveying letters between him, and George Fernegan, an Agent of the Pretender's in Flanders, they find to be Mrs. Spelman, alias Tallop, who has likewise owned her conveying letters in the same manner between Mr. Harvey of Comb, and one Moore of Brownlow-Street, and the said Fernegan; the Committee observe, that John Sample acted under the direction of Mr. Sempil (commonly called Lord Sempil) and his son at Paris; and that he wrote letters to the late Duke of Ormond and the Pretender.

After the reading the report, it was moved, by Mr. Pulteney, that this question might be put, 'That upon consideration of the report, and the several papers and examinations relating to the Conspiracy, it appears to this House, that a detestable and horrid Conspiracy has been formed and carried on by persons of figure and distinction, and their agents and instruments, in conjunction with Traitors abroad, for invading these Kingdoms with foreign forces, for raising Insurrections and a Rebellion at home, for seizing the Tower, and the City of London, for laying violent hands upon the Persons of his most sacred Majesty and the Prince of Wales, in order to subvert our present happy Establishment in Church and State, by placing a Popish Pretender upon the Throne.' This question, after a short debate, was carried without dividing; and then Mr. Pelham moved, 'That it appears to this House, that Christopher Laver, in his several examinations before the Lords of the Council, and the Committee of this House, has grossly prevaricated, suppressed the truth, contradicted himself, and endeavoured, as far as in him lies, to disguise and conceal the horrid and detestable Conspiracy.' Which was also carried in the same manner. After this, the Attorney-General moved, 'That it appears to this House, that John Plunket has been a principal Agent and Instrument in the Conspiracy, and has carried on several treasonable correspondences to procure a foreign force to invade these Kingdoms, to raise Insurrections and a Rebellion at home, and was engaged with others in the villanous and execrable design, of laying violent hands upon his Majesty's most sacred Person.' This question being carried with very little opposition, the Attorney-General moved again, for a bill to inflict certain pains and penalties on John Plunket. Though this motion was warmly opposed, yet, 1722-23.

1722-23. yet, after a long debate, it was carried by a majority of 289 against 130, and the bill, being brought in, passed both Houses: But thirty-one Lords entered their protests against it. A few days after, the Solicitor-General made the like motion in the case of George Kelly, and a bill was also passed against him, which was attended with the same protests.

By these acts Plunket and Kelly were to be kept in close custody during his Majesty's pleasure, his Heirs and Successors, in any prison in Great-Britain; and, in case they should break prison, they and their assistants were to suffer death.

Against Bishop
Atterbury.

The same day Mr. Tonge in a long speech took notice, how deeply Dr. Francis Atterbury, Bishop of Rocheſter, had been concerned in this detestable Conspiracy; aggravating his crime from his holy function, and high station in the Church of England, a Church ever conspicuous for its loyalty; from the solemn oaths he had, on so many occasions, taken to the Government, and by which he had abjured the Pretender; when at the same time he was traitorously conspiring to bring him in, upon the ruin of his Country, and of all that was dear and valuable to us as Freemen and Christians: Concluding, that as he was a disgrace to his Order, and a dishonour to the Church, so he might apply to him on this occasion these words of the 1st of Acts, Verse 20, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein, and his Bishopric let another take. And therefore he moved, 'That it appears to this House, that Francis Lord Bishop of Rocheſter was principally concerned in forming, directing, and carrying on the wicked and detestable Conspiracy, for invading these Kingdoms with a foreign force, and for raising Insurrections and Rebellions at home, in order to subvert our present happy Establishment in Church and State, by placing a Popish Pretender upon the Throne.' Sir William Wyndham said, he saw no cause to proceed against the Bishop in so severe a manner, there being little or indeed no evidence besides conjectures and hearsays. However, Mr. Tonge's motion was agreed to, and a bill was ordered to be brought in to inflict certain pains and penalties on Francis Bishop of Rocheſter.

When the bill came to be read a second time, the Bishop sent a letter to the Speaker, which he desired might be communicated to the House, and in which he said, that, though conscious of his own innocence, he should decline giving the House any trouble that day, and contented himself with the opportunity (if the bill went on) of making his defence before another, of which he had the honour to be a Member. However, the Commons proceeded in that affair, and, the Council for the bill being called in, and the bill read, the Council opened the evidence, and produced a scheme, taken amongst Mr. Laver's 1723. papers, which was read, as were also several copies of letters stopped at the Post-Office. Then the Council examined several witnesses to make good the allegations of the bill; produced several papers taken at his houses at Westminster and Branley; as also a packet taken on one of his servants at the Tower of London; and examined two witnesses, one to prove, that a letter and paper contained in the packet were his handwriting; and the other to prove, that a letter directed to Mr. Dubois, taken amongst his papers at the Deanry at Westminster, was sealed with the same seal, with which the letter taken on his servant at the Tower was sealed. Then the Council summed up the evidence, and, being withdrawn, the Speaker opened the bill, which was committed to a Grand Committee, on the 6th of April, when the leading men amongst the Tories chose to go out of the House, so that only Mr. Lawson, Mr. Oglethorpe, and two or three more, staid to speak in the Bishop's behalf. When they came to the filling up the blank for pains and penalties, it was moved, that he should be deprived of his office and benefice, banished the Kingdom, be guilty of felony if he returned, and that it should not be in the King's power to pardon him without consent of Parliament; but without forfeiture of goods and chattels. Mr. Lawson represented, that, the evidence against the Bishop being all either hearsay or conjecture, and therefore not to be depended upon, he ought to have no punishment at all. Mr. Oglethorpe was of the same opinion, but gave it another turn. He said, 'It was plain, the Pretender had none but a company of silly fellows about him; and it was to be feared, that, if the Bishop, who was allowed to be a man of great parts, should be banished, he might be solicited and tempted to go to Rome, and there be in a capacity to do more mischief by his advice, than if he was suffered to stay in England under the watchful eye of those in power.' But the bill passed and was sent up to the Lords; before whom the Bishop was brought to his trial on the 9th of May; and, himself and his Council having been heard, the Lords in a Grand Committee went through the bill against him; and on the 15th the bill was read the third time; after which a motion being made for passing it, there arose a very long and warm debate (1).

Earl Powlet, who opened the debate, spoke to the nature of this bill, shewed the danger of such an extraordinary proceeding, and urged, that the swerving from the fixed rules of evidence, and consequently from justice, must inevitably be attended with the most fatal consequences to our excellent Constitution. Dr. Wilkes, Bishop of Salisbury, in answer to that, alledged,

(1) The Speakers for and against the bill were as follow:

Against the bill.

1. Earl Powlet,
3. Lord Bishop of Chester,
5. Duke of Wharton,
6. Lord Bathurst,
7. Earl of Stratford,
8. Lord Trevor,
11. Lord Gower,
13. Earl Cowper.

For the bill.

2. Lord Bishop of Salisbury,
4. Lord Bishop of London,
9. Earl of Findlater and Seafield,
10. Duke of Argyle,
12. Lord Lechmere,
14. Earl of Peterborough,
15. Earl of Chesham.

1723. ledged, that as extraordinary diseases require extraordinary remedies; so in cases of extreme danger and necessity, when the very being of the State lies at stake, if the common law cannot reach offenders, the Legislature ought to exert itself. He was replied to by Dr. Gastrell, Bishop of Chester, who owned, that extraordinary proceedings may indeed be resorted to upon extraordinary occasions, and when they are evidently necessary for the preservation of the State; but that was very far from the present case, since the Conspiracy, in which the Bishop of Rocheſter was charged to have had a share, had been discovered and disappointed long before. The Duke of Wharton, in a long speech, summed up the whole evidence, which had been produced against the Bishop of Rocheſter, and endeavoured to shew the insufficiency of it to prove the charge; concluding, 'That, let the consequences be what they would, he would not have such a hellish stain fully the lustre and glory of that illustrious House, as to condemn a man without the least evidence;' and therefore was for rejecting the bill. He was strongly supported by Lord Bathurst, who, in the first place, took notice of the ungracious distinctions that were fixed upon the Members of that noble and illustrious Assembly, who differed in opinion from those who happened to have the majority. That, for his own part, as he had nothing in view but truth and justice, the good of his Country, the honour of that House, and the discharging of his own conscience, he would freely speak his thoughts, notwithstanding all discouragements: That he would not complain of the sinister arts that had been used of late to render some persons obnoxious, and, under pretence of their being so, to open their letters about their minutest domestic affairs. For these small grievances he could easily bear, but when he saw things go so far, as to condemn a person of the highest dignity in the Church, in such an unprecedented manner, and without any legal evidence, he thought it his duty to oppose a proceeding so unjust and unwarrantable in itself, and so dangerous and dismal in its consequences. To this purpose he begged leave to tell their Lordships a story he had from several Officers of undoubted credit, who had served in Flanders in the late war. A Frenchman, it seems, had invented a machine, which would not only kill more men at once than any yet in use, but also disable for ever any man who should be wounded by it. Big with hopes of a great reward, he applied himself to one of the Ministers, who laid the project before the late French King; but that Monarch considering, that so destructive an engine might soon be turned against his own men, did not think proper to encourage it: Whereupon the Inventor came over into England, and offered his service to some of our Generals, who likewise rejected the proposal with indignation. The use and application of this story is very obvious; for, if this way of proceeding be admitted, it will certainly prove a very dangerous engine. No man's life, liberty or property will be safe. And if those, who were in the Administration some years ago, and who had as great a share in the affections of the people, as any that came after them, had made use of such a political machine, some of those noble persons, who now appear so zealous promoters of this bill, would not be in a capacity to serve his Majesty at this time. He added, that, if such extraordinary proceedings went on, he saw nothing remaining for him and others to do, but to retire to their Country Houses, and there, if possible, quietly enjoy their estates within their own families, since the least correspondence, the least intercepted letter, might be made criminal. To this purpose he quoted a passage out of Cardinal de Retz's memoirs, relating to that wicked politician, Cardinal Mazarine, who boasted, that, if he had but two lines of any man's writing, with a few circumstances attested by witnesses, he could cut off his head when he pleased. He likewise animadverted on the majority of the venerable bench, towards which turning himself, he said, he could hardly account for the inveterate hatred and malice some persons bore the learned and ingenious Bishop of Rocheſter, unless it was, that they were intoxicated with the insatiation of some of the wild Indians, who fondly believe they inherit not only the spoils, but even the abilities of any great enemy they kill.' The Earl of Stratford spoke on the same side, as did also the Lord Trevor, who, among other arguments against the bill, urged, that, if men were in this unprecedented manner proceeded against without legal proof, in a short time men would be tried as they were liked by Ministers: That, for his own part, he believed he stood but indifferently in the opinion and liking of some persons, and therefore he had reason to think himself more in danger, because at present they wanted the protection of the law (meaning the suspension of the Habeas Corpus act;) and, as in a short time they were like to be so unhappy, as to be deprived of his Majesty's personal protection, and were still liable to be confined upon suspicion, which he took to be no more than will and pleasure, they were consequently at the will and pleasure of the Ministers. That however no apprehension of what he might suffer should deter him from doing what he thought his duty: That, consonant to that principle, he had all along, and still opposed these extraordinary proceedings, which tended to lodge an exorbitant power in their fellow-subjects. That, if he were to lose his liberty, he had rather give it up to one single tyrant, than to many; for a tyrant, if a man of common understanding, would, for his own sake, be tender of the lives of his subjects; whereas many tyrants would endeavour to destroy one another, to get one another's preferments. The Lord Trevor having done speaking, the Earl of Seafield endeavoured to shew, that the evidence which had been produced before them, being sufficient to convince any reasonable man, that there had been a detectable Conspiracy, and that the Bishop of Rocheſter had a great share in it, was likewise sufficient to justify this extraordinary proceeding against him, especially since they inflicted on him so light a punishment, considering the heinousness of the crime. The Duke of Argyle pursued the same argument; run through and confuted the most essential parts of the Bishop's defence; and aggravated his offence, by which he had debased his holy function and character, and acted contrary to the solemn repeated oaths he had taken. The Lord Gower spoke afterwards against the bill; but what surprized most people, the Lord Lechmere, who, on several occasions, had expressed his dislike of these extraordinary proceedings, declared it as his opinion,

No. 100. VOL. IV.

8 G

1723. nion, that there was sufficient evidence to support the charge. He was answered by Earl Cowper in a long speech, importing in substance, That the strongest argument which had been urged for this bill, was necessity; but that, for his part, he saw no necessity that could justify so unprecedented and so dangerous a proceeding. That, as already had been suggested, the Conspiracy had above a twelvemonth before been happily discovered, and the effects of it consequently prevented. That, besides the intrinsic weight and strength of the Government, by numerous offices and employments, civil and military, and the wealth and interest of the well-affected to his Majesty's Person and the present happy Establishment, the hands of those at the helm had still been fortified by the suspension of the Habeas Corpus act, and the additional troops; so that, in his opinion, there could be no danger to the Government, if Plunket and Kelly were not prisoners for life, nor the Bishop of Rochester sent into banishment. That, on the contrary, if that Prelate's talent and genius lay in contriving and carrying on state intrigues, he thought him less dangerous at home than abroad: That the other reasons alledged to support this extraordinary proceeding had no more weight in them than the first: That the known rules of evidence, as laid down at first, and established by the law of the land, were the birth-right of every subject of this Nation, and ought to be constantly observed, not only in the inferior courts of judicature, but also in both Houses of Parliament, till altered by the Legislature: That much had been said of the power of Parliaments, which he owned was very great; but that, in his opinion, their absolute power consisted only in making and repealing laws, and, till such time as a law was repealed, every subject had a right to it. That the admitting of the precarious and uncertain evidence of the Clerks of the Post-Office was a very dangerous precedent: That in former times it was thought very grievous, that, in capital cases, a man should be affected by similitude of hands: But here the case was much worse, since it was allowed, that the Clerks of the Post-Office could carry the similitude of hands four months in their minds. That these men might be honest, and swear to the best of their knowledge; but he was sure, they were at least very willing and forward evidence: For as he asked one of them, how he knew such a paper to be Mr. Kelly's hand? He readily answered, 'He had seen the same four months before, and he was sure it could be no other.' Whereas any man, who has never so little been conversant in the world, knows, that hands may be so well counterfeited, as not to be distinguished. After this, he commended the Bishop of Rochester's noble and brave carriage in not answering before the House of Commons, whose proceeding in this unprecedented manner against a Lord of Parliament was such an encroachment on the prerogative of the Peerage, that, if submitted to by passing this bill, they might well be said to be the last of Lords. 'Ultimus Romanorum, my Lords (said he in the conclusion) was a character of honour and praise: But to be the last of British Peers, by giving up our ancient privileges, will never, I doubt, admit of such construction; and therefore I am for rejecting this bill.' Little was said of any great weight after this speech; and, about half an hour past nine the question being put, it was resolved in the affirmative, that the bill should pass, by a majority of 83 voices against 43; upon which several Lords entered their protest.

By this act the Bishop, from the 1st day of June 1723, was to be deprived of all offices, dignities, promotions, and benefices Ecclesiastical, and incapable of holding any for the future. He was also banished the Realm, and, in case he returned, he was to suffer death, as well as all persons that corresponded with him.

When the report and the other papers were communicated to the Lords by the Commons, Burford's Club, the Earls of Scarfdale, Strafford and Cowper, the Lords Craven, Gower, Bathurst and Bingley complained, that, in the examinations, it is set forth, that John Plunket told Loyer, that they were of a club or meeting, called, in Plunket's letters, Burford's Club (1). These Lords severally declared the same to be false and groundless: And Earl Cowper in particular made a long speech, complaining of being mentioned in the Report, on the bare hearsay of an infamous person, which was enough to give an air of fiction to the whole Conspiracy; and then moved, that Plunket should be sent for and examined. The Lord Townshend answered, 'That he was much surprized to find that a noble Peer, whose abilities and merits had justly so great weight in that illustrious Assembly, should, upon a trivial circumstance, ridicule, as a fiction, a horrid execrable Conspiracy, supported by so many concurring proofs, and from a false trifling particular infer, that no part of it was true.' As the debate was like to grow warm, some Members called for the question, and Earl Cowper's motion was rejected by 81 against 26. The Earl and Mr. Hutchinson published declarations against the false information of their being of the club, wherein they strongly asserted their innocence.

The Lords had also chosen by ballot a Committee of nine, to whom the report and original papers were referred to prepare what might be fit to be offered to the Commons, by way of answer to what was delivered, at a Conference relating to the papers. When the Duke of Dorset's Report from the Lords Committees was taken into consideration, it was resolved, That a detestable Conspiracy had been formed for

(1) Loyer being asked, If Plunket ever explained to him who were meant by Burford's Club? Plunket told him, It was an appellation made use of by the Pretender and his Agents, to denote a club of Tory Lords and others, of which club Lord Orrery was Chairman, and consisted of the following Members:

Lord Strafford,
Sir Henry Goring,
Lord Cowper,

Mr. Hutchinson,
Bishop of Rochester,
Sir Constantine Phipps,

General Hobbs,
Lord Bingley,
Mr. Dawkins,
Lord Craven,

Mr. Shippin,
Lord Scarfdale,
Lord Bathurst,
Lord Gower.

The Committee thought it justice due to several of the persons named by Loyer, to observe, that the matters, asserted of Burford's Club in Plunket's letters to Dillon, seemed utterly inconsistent with the known characters of some of those persons. See Report.

1723. for raising a Rebellion, and laying violent hands on the King and Prince: After which, the Committee was thanked by the Lord-Chancellor, for having discharged their trust with great exactness, fidelity, and candor.

Dr. Friend the Physician, who had exerted himself very zealously for the Bishop of Rockester, was soon after taken into custody; for, on the 15th of March, Mr. Walpole acquainted the Commons, 'That his Majesty, having had just reason to apprehend Dr. John Friend (a Member of this House) for High-treason, desired the consent of the House to his being committed and detained; and then he moved for an address to that purpose. This motion was opposed by Mr. Shippin and Mr. Bromley, who said, they could not see any reason for that House giving leave for detaining any Member, unless the species of treason was declared, and that the information was upon oath. Sir Joseph Jekyll and Mr. Walpole replied, That, by the late act for suspending the Habeas Corpus, the King was empowered to take up any person he had reason to suspect: That therefore the Government was not obliged to say, whether the information was upon oath or not. But Mr. Walpole added, he did not doubt but Dr. Friend was charged upon oath; and privately declared to several Members, that they had a positive oath of his being guilty of the blackest and basest treason. Mr. Shippin then suggesting, that the Doctor's having spoke so warmly the Monday before in Mr. Kelly and the Bishop of Rockester's behalf, was, in his opinion, the reason of his being taken up the next day himself, and at that rate there was an end of the liberty of speech, which every Member of that House had a right to. Mr. Walpole replied, He wondered any Gentleman could think any Ministry capable of so base a thing, as to take up any Gentleman for what he said in that House, without any other cause, when they knew themselves to be accountable as well as others for their actions: Adding, that they, who made such insinuations, might more easily be proved to be Jacobites, than they could make out such an allegation against the Ministry. Mr. Pulteney spoke on the same side; and, in relation to Dr. Friend's having spoken in Kelly's behalf, observed, that it was usual, in all Conspiracies, for one Traitor to endeavour to excuse another. Mr. Shippin animadverted with some warmth upon this reflection, saying, It was not to be endured, to have a Member of that House called a Traitor, before he was convicted as such. But, Mr. Pulteney having explained himself, that matter ended, and then the motion for an address was carried without a division.

The affair which occasioned the most talk, next to the plot, was the Harburgh lottery, which was brought before the Parliament this Session. The lottery took its name from the place where it was to be drawn, the town and port of Harburgh on the river Elbe, within the King's German Dominions, where the Projector was to settle a trade for the woollen manufacture between England and Germany. The House of Commons having appointed a Committee to inquire into this and other lotteries, then carrying on in London, it was represented in their report, 'That the scheme proposed, that 1,500,000 l. sterling, or 16,500,000 guilders, should be subscribed; and that it was to be drawn at Harburgh in five classes, 100,000 tickets to be drawn in each class at 3 l. per ticket; and that every person subscribing was to pay 12 s. or six guineers for each ticket, before the drawing each class of the lottery. That 200,000 l. of 300,000 l. in each class was to be divided into lots, to the fortunate Adventurers, which amounts to 1,000,000 l. to be deducted out of the whole sum, which was to be paid the fortunate Adventurers. That a sum of 1,000,000 l. was subscribed for, to carry on a trade between Great-Britain and his Majesty's German Dominions; and that 2 per cent. was only paid in upon the stock so subscribed; of which a sum of 13,000 l. or more was actually paid in money, and 7000 l. or more was secured by notes; 400,000 l. whereof was subscribed. At first, 100,000 l. stock was sold at 15 l. 3 s. per cent. of which 2 per cent. was only paid into the Company, and the rest disposed of as follows; 13 l. 3 s. per cent. which amounted to 13,150 l. 10,000 l. of which was given to Mr. Nicolas; and 3,150 l. to Mr. Benjamin Joules, for their services: And as to 13,000 l. paid in money, and 7,000 l. in notes, the Committee could get no account what was become of it, not being able to see their books; nor could the Committee learn what number of tickets had been delivered out, or what money thereupon had been received, or what was become of what they had received. That with regard to the disposition of the other 500,000 l. 5 per cent. upon 1,500,000 l. which amounts to 75,000 l. was to be deducted for management; which being taken out of the said 500,000 l. leaves 425,000 l. which sum was to be incorporated into the stock of the first Company, and to make a part of a capital of 1,500,000 l. as the Committee apprehended, of which they could get no positive information. But whether the former capital was intended to be so great, or only to consist of this 425,000 l. and the 1,000,000 l. which was before subscribed, it appeared to the Committee, that a plain fraud was intended in joining this real sum with an imaginary subscription; of which 2 per cent. only was paid in or secured, and that probably embezzled.' The Trustees of this lottery were twenty; some of whom were in Germany; the rest, who were in England, were the Lord Barrington, Sir John Hartop, Charles Frederick Krenbergh, John London, Piennes Harrison, Peter Hartop, William Squire, Edward Richier, John Caswal, William Sterling, Benjamin Smith, Benjamin Burroughs, John Thompson, Henry Bendish, — Foster, Benjamin Joules, and John Manley. But several of them resigned their trust immediately, being dissatisfied with the scheme; for, when Sir Thomas Webster, Sir Charles Wager, and Lord Barrington waited upon Lord Townshend, Lord Carteret, and Mr. Walpole, they were told, that an English charter for the advantage of the lottery could not be granted, because it was illegal and impracticable. Upon reading the report, the House came to the following resolutions:

1. That the project, called the Harburgh lottery, carried on in the City of London, is an infamous fraudulent undertaking, whereby several unwary persons have been drawn in to their great loss; and that the manner of carrying the same on hath been a manifest violation of the laws of this Kingdom.

2. That it appears to this House, that the Managers of, and Agents of the said lottery, did frequently, 1723. frequently, without any authority for so doing, make use of his Majesty's Royal Name, thereby to give countenance to the infamous project, and induce his Majesty's subjects to engage, or be concerned therein. After which a bill was ordered to be brought in to suppress the lottery, and to prevent any foreign lotteries from being carried on in this Kingdom; and to oblige the persons concerned, in the management of the Harburgh lottery, to make restitution and satisfaction for the money they have received from the Contributors. And it was also resolved, nemine contradicente, That it appeared to this House, that John Lord Viscount Barrington, of the Kingdom of Ireland, a Member of this House, has been notoriously guilty of promoting, abetting, and carrying on the fraudulent undertaking, called the Harburgh lottery; and for that offence he be expelled the House.

In December 1722, the Emperor of Germany granted a patent for establishing an East-India Company in the Austrian Netherlands, the substance of which was, that they were empowered to open books of subscription, wherein the subjects of any Nation were admitted to subscribe. The Company was to be called the Imperial Company of Commerce established in Flanders. The fund consisted of eight millions of florins, and Directors to be chosen annually. The Nobility had the privilege of entering into this Company, without derogation in the least from their Nobility: Those of any Nation, who subscribed 20,000 florins, were to be naturalized from that subscription: And any person had the privilege to subscribe what sum he pleased above 1000 florins, but nothing less, to prevent confusion in their accounts. The settlement of this Company was said to be chiefly owing to Mr. Colebrooke, an English Merchant.

Notwithstanding the opposition they met with from the English, French, and Dutch, they opened their books, and had a full subscription in a very few days, owing chiefly to the clandestine Negotiations of their Agents in England, France, and Holland, where great numbers of Merchants subscribed to that stock, and Masters of East-India ships and Supercargoes went to Offend, to enter into their service, and put them in a way to establish and carry on their trade, which they did effectually, to the great damage of the English, French, and Dutch Companies. Monsieur de Fouca, the Emperor's Minister at Paris, signified to the Duke of Orleans, then at the head of affairs there, that the Emperor was much surprized at the most Christian King's forbidding his subjects to be any ways concerned in the Offend Company. He was answered, 'That representations had been made to the Emperor, that he was engaged by treaty not to encourage any such commerce; that, nevertheless, his Imperial Majesty, without any regard to the said representations, had thought fit to grant a Charter in favour thereof. That the most Christian King was Master of his own Kingdom, and not obliged to give an account of his actions, and therefore the Emperor could not take amiss the prohibition to his subjects, not to have any concern in the Company set up at Offend.'

A memorial of the Dutch East-India Company (which had been delivered to the States in March) having been presented to the Commons this Session, together with an extract of another memorial sent by the States to the Court of Vienna, concerning the Offend Company, Sir Nathaniel Gould represented to the House the great damage the East-India Company had already received, and was like farther to receive by the Offend Company; it was unanimously resolved, 'That for the subjects of this Kingdom to subscribe, or be concerned in encouraging any subscription, to promote an East-India Company, now erecting in the Austrian Netherlands, is a High-Crime and Misdemeanor.' Accordingly a bill passed both Houses, and received the Royal assent, to prevent the King's subjects from subscribing or being concerned in the Offend East-India Company.

There had been several General Courts held South-Sea by the South-Sea Company about transferring two millions of their stock to the Bank of England, which was at last agreed on by the two Companies. A petition had likewise been presented to the Commons for the reviving the two millions that had been annihilated. Accordingly an act passed this Session, whereby it was enacted, that the two millions should be revived, and added to the capital stock, and divided among the Proprietors.* By the same act, the whole capital, computed at 33,802,483 l. 14 s. was to be divided into two equal parts, one of which amounting to 16,901,241 l. 17 s. was to be called the joint stock of South-Sea annuities, attended with annuities payable out of the South-Sea Company's funds in lieu of all dividends, viz. at 5 l. per cent. till June 27, 1727, and from thence at 4 l. per cent. till redeemed. The other moiety was to remain in the Company as a joint-stock, attended with the residue of the yearly funds, payable at the Exchequer, till redemption, and also attended with the several sums for charges of management, and with all benefits of trade, &c. And, as concerning the moiety so converted into South-Sea annuities, every Proprietor should be intitled to annuities at 5 l. per cent. till June 24, 1727, and from thence at 4 l. per cent. and the Company should receive at the Exchequer, out of the duties charged with their whole annuities yearly, the interest of the same moiety, till redemption, in trust for the Proprietors: And all powers in-force were to be continued for securing the joint stock of South-Sea annuities, and the yearly funds to attend the same. The annuities were payable half-yearly, at Lady-Day and Michaelmas.

An act passed this Session for the more effectual execution of justice, in a pretended privileged place in the parish of St. George, commonly called the Mint, where great numbers of Debtors had taken sanctuary.

On the 27th of May, the King put an end to the Session with the following speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I AM persuaded, notwithstanding the unusual length of this Session, you will not think your time has been misemployed in consulting the necessary means for preserving the peace and quiet of the Kingdom; and bringing to justice some of the chief promoters of that confusion, which lately threatened the Nation. The prudent measures you have taken for our common security, and your enabling me to defend my Kingdoms against any designs or attempts of our enemies, are the most convincing testimonies of your fidelity and

East India Company at Offend.

* See p.
645.

The Mint
priv. place.

1723. "affection to me, and of your concern for the liberties of my people. Be assured, the confidence you have reposed in me shall never be made use of but for their safety and defence.

"The papers, which have been laid before you, for your information, and have been since published for the satisfaction of the world, evidently shew, that the Conspirators had brought their wicked arts and practices to such perfection, that they confidently carried on their traitorous projects in defiance of the law, from an assurance of their being able to elude it. The respect and reverence due to the law had been lost, and the tranquillity of my people endangered, had not you interposed. This made it necessary for the Legislature to exert itself, in punishing such offenders, whose guilt is too certain to leave the least room for doubt, and whose crimes are too heinous to admit of any aggravation.

"And yet it is with pleasure I reflect, that the justice of Parliament has been so tempered with mercy, that even those who are resolved to be dissatisfied, must acknowledge the lenity of your proceedings, and will be at a loss for any pretence to complain, so few examples having been made, and the penalties inflicted by bill falling so much short of the punishments due for the same crimes, by the common course of law.

"The firmness you have shewn, must convince all the world, how much they were mistaken, whose chief hopes were founded on the dissipation of my people. It gave me great satisfaction to see as general a concurrence in full Parliament upon this occasion, as has been known on any former: And it is to be hoped, our enemies will cease to flatter themselves with the vain imagination of being able to subvert our Religion and present Establishment."

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I must acknowledge, in a particular manner, the great readiness you have shewn in raising the necessary Supplies for the ensuing year. It is an unexpected felicity, that you have been able so far to disappoint the hopes of our enemies, as to avoid laying any new burthen upon my people; and that so soon after that great shock and convulsion in all the public funds, and in the midst of intestine alarms and disturbances, the credit of the Nation should so far revive and flourish, that not only the Supplies of the year should be raised at a much lower interest, than was ever known in the most quiet times, but part of the national debt should be reduced from an interest of 5 to 3 per cent. and put in a course of being soon discharged.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I return you my most sincere thanks for the indefatigable pains you have taken in the service of the Public. I earnestly recommend it to you, in your several stations and countries, to persevere in your endeavours for preserving the peace of the Kingdom; by justice and resolution to subdue the restless spirit of faction and sedition; and by prudence and temper to reconcile the misled.

"Some extraordinary affairs calling me abroad this summer, I doubt not but that the wisdom and vigilance of my good subjects will prevent our enemies from taking any advantage of my absence. To gain the hearts and affections of my people shall always be my first and principal care. On their duty and loyalty I will entirely depend. They may as surely depend on my protection, in the full enjoyment of their Religion, Liberty, and Property."

The King, whom the Conspiracy had detained in England the last year, had no sooner put an end to the Session, but he set out for his German Dominions. He embarked for Holland the 3d of June, and, after staying two days with his brother the Bishop of Osnabrug, arrived the 11th at Herenhausen. He appointed Lords Justices in his absence as usual, the Prince being still excluded, who was now in his forty-first year. The Lord Harcourt, formerly so strictly united with the Earl of Oxford and Queen Anne's other Ministers, and who had defended them with so much zeal, was one of the Lords Justices. Mr. Walpole was likewise of the number, and acted as Secretary of State, in the absence of the Lords Townshend and Carteret, who were with the King. It was intended to advance him to the Peerage, but he chose rather to have that honour conferred on his son, who was made Baron Walpole of Walpole in the County of Norfolk (1). About the same time Mr. Pulteney, Chairman of the late Committee of Secrecy, was made Cofferer of the Household; and Philip, Lord Stanhope, Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard; Dr. Gibson was translated from Lincoln to London, Dr. Reynolds from Bangor to Lincoln, and Dr. Bradford from Carlisle to Rochester; Dr. Waugh was promoted to Carlisle, and Dr. Willis, on the death of Dr. Trimnell, to Winchester; Dr. Hoadley was translated from Hereford to Salisbury; Dr. Green, on the death of Dr. Fleetwood, from Norwich to Ely; Dr. Leng was made Bishop of Norwich, and Dr. Egerton, brother to the Duke of Bridgewater, of Hereford.

The King, before his departure, shewed the King's clemency to those who had been taken up on account

(1) The Lord Townshend's eldest son was called up to the House of Peers, by the title of Baron Townshend of Lynn-Regis, and made one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber, in the room of the Lord Tynham, who some days before shot himself, and died an hour after.

The preamble to the Lord Walpole began thus:

Our most beloved and most faithful Counsellor Robert Walpole, first Commissioner of the Treasury, with the assistance of other select persons, and Chancellor, 100. VOL. IV.

cellor of our Exchequer, having highly recommended himself to our Royal favour by his many services to Us, to our House, and to his own Country, we did not think him unworthy to be advanced to the rank of the Peers of our Realm. But, though he rather chuses to merit the highest titles than to wear them, we have however thought fit, in order to enoble his family, to confer on the son the honour due to the father, and to raise to the Peerage Robert Walpole, Junior, Esq; &c.

1723.

count of the Plot. The Earl of Orrery was released from his confinement, and admitted to bail; as were also the Duke of Norfolk, the Lord North and Grey, Dennis Kelly, Thomas Cochran, and Swathfegger, the Earl of Orrery's Secretary. On the 20th of June, Dr. Friend was admitted to bail; and, two days after, Dr. Aterbury embarked on board the Aldborough, a small man of war, which had orders to land him in France. He was put on shore at Calais, accompanied with his daughter Mrs. Morrice, and her husband, who was High-Bailiff of Westminster. At Calais he was told, that the late Lord Bolingbroke, having obtained his pardon, was just arrived there in his way to England: Upon which the Bishop merrily said, Then I am exchanged. The King had granted the Lord Bolingbroke a pardon the day after the Parliament broke up, of which one of his friends instantly set out for France to bring him word. He immediately returned to England to plead his pardon, in expectation that a new Parliament would repeal his Attainder. The Lord Harcourt had prevailed with the King to shew him this favour; though Mr. Walpole had opposed it at the Council-board with unanswerable arguments: He was against loosening the hands of one, who (as he said) he foresaw, from his former conduct and ambition, and the natural restlessness of his temper, would go any lengths to poison the minds of the subjects, in order to disturb the national tranquillity, that he himself might the easier arrive at power. But, notwithstanding his disapprobation, he was forced to give way (1).

Before the King left England, it was agreed in Council, that the troops should be incamped as they had been the last summer, and that the Horse-guards should be quartered round Hyde-Park, in order to be ready to assemble, if there should be occasion.

These measures kept all things quiet in Great-Britain, during the King's seven months absence. The same reasons which had required his presence abroad, detained him perhaps longer than he intended. He was received in his Dominions in the most agreeable manner, and was complimented by at least twelve foreign Ministers. The King and Queen of Prussia waited likewise upon him, by which means his Court was as splendid, and as much the scene of affairs, as ever the Court of Great-Britain had been.

Affairs were then at a sort of crisis: The usefulness of the Congress of Cambray and of Brunswick, where little had been done, having worn out the patience of the Princes whose interests were to be determined there, they entered into separate Negotiations, and sought the means of coming to an agreement. The Czar and King of Sweden were going to conclude a treaty favourable to the Duke of Holstein's pretensions to Sleswick, of which King George had guaranteed the possession to the King of Denmark:

(1) Mr. Walpole's conduct with regard to this transaction, and many more, was not unlike the Lord Clarendon's, who says of himself, 'That he had often, as believing himself obliged in duty, argued in the Senate in favour of many points, which he had strenuously opposed at the Council-Table.' The reasons, on which Ministers found their conduct on such occasions, are obvious to every man of common penetration.

It was to be feared, that this treaty might affect even Bremen and Verden, lately annexed to the Electorate of Hanover.

On the other hand, France and Spain seemed to be sincerely reconciled, and willing to unite against the Emperor. The Regent had projected a marriage between the King of France and the Infanta of Spain, then three years old, and had married his second daughter Mademoiselle de Montpensier to the Prince of Asturias, and, a year after, another daughter to Don Carlos, eldest son of Philip V. by his second wife. These two powers endeavoured to draw the Czar to their side; they offered new treaties to England, more advantageous than the former, in regard to trade, but strongly insisted upon the restitution of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon; and it was wished, that Court would not be concerned in the affairs of Italy, and would declare openly against the Osmond Company.

This situation of so opposite interests was full of difficulties. The Emperor, pressed too much, might declare for the Czar and the Swede: Poland, confined between these three powers, could not help taking part with them: Almost all Italy exclaimed against the treaty of London: The Pope had protested against any decisions at Cambray to the prejudice of his right: The King of Sardinia, the Dukes of Tuscany, Parma and Madena, had presented memorials equivalent to so many protestations: France and Spain were inclined to support them: War was every where on the point of breaking out: England, engaged by so many treaties, and her own interests, must have been concerned: For King George to declare against the Emperor was exposing his German Dominions, and helping to strengthen two powers already very formidable to the rest of Europe: To take part with the Emperor was supporting the new establishment at Osmond, and arming against himself France, Spain, and perhaps Russia and Sweden.

King George overcame all these difficulties, or at least suspended their ill consequences. He entered into stricter Alliances with the Kings of Prussia and Denmark: He used his endeavours to prevail with the Emperor to be more ready to end his differences with Spain, and to desist from the affair of Osmond, against which his Subjects in particular, and his faithful Allies the States-General, were extremely incensed. In England, as hath been related, the Commons had voted against it.

One of the King's principal designs, when he came to Hanover, was to persuade the Court of Vienna to desist from erecting the Osmond India Company: He laboured constantly at it, but the success did not answer his good intentions: That Court promised, in general, not to do any thing contrary to treaties, and the rights of others, but avoided to enter into any discussion, and disregarded the representations that were made from all parts.

It

It is observed from the Lord Bolingbroke's pardon, that Mr. Walpole held not then the first rank, either in power or confidence, but that the direction of affairs, particularly the foreign, after the death of the Earls Stanhope and Sunderland, was chiefly conducted by the Lord Townshend and Baron Baltham.

1723. It was the same with respect to the Czar. So that the King's journey proved fruitless, and the Negotiations might have been as well carried on at London as at Hanover. Something was also done for the Protestants, whose complaints continued, because they were still oppressed, and new grievances were added to the old. The King of Prussia readily entered into the design to procure them ease and tranquillity.

This union put a stop at least to greater calamities; and appeared to be very cordial. King George spent four or five days at Berlin, where he was received and treated with great respect and magnificence. The two Secretaries of State, the Lords Townshend and Carteret, who attended him, had frequent Conferences with the King of Prussia's Ministers, in order to conclude some Alliance to prevent the Czar's designs, in favour of the Duke of Holstein: The proposals were neither rejected nor received, and assurance was given that no engagement should be made contrary to what had been agreed.

Election of Sheriffs at London. All was quiet in England: However there appeared now and then some sparks of division, which shewed the parties still subsisted, and had not altered their sentiments. At the election of the Sheriffs this year the rabble was spirited up at London, by the opposition which the new Sheriffs, Sir Richard Hopkins and Mr. Feast, met with from the old ones, Mr. Humphrey Parsons and Mr. Child, who endeavoured to have the election fall upon Sir John Williams and Mr. Lockwood. Hopkins and Feast were declared duly elected by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; notwithstanding Parsons and Child had made a contrary declaration in favour of Williams and Lockwood, but, the Lord Mayor having dissolved the Common-Hall, after the Court had declared Hopkins and Feast duly chosen, the old Sheriffs could not meet them after the last adjournment, as they intended to have done, but were prevented by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen's prior declaration. Feast opposed Williams in the election of an Alderman for Cripple-gate-Ward, which, being also contested, was decided by the Court of Aldermen in favour of Williams, upon which the rabble broke the windows of the well-affected in that Ward, and committed several outrages, for which some of the ring-leaders were taken, and committed to Newgate.

Pursuant to an act of Parliament lately past, requiring all persons to take the oaths before the 25th of December, or to register their estates, the Sessions, held by the Justices of the Peace over all the Kingdom, were crowded with persons of all sexes and conditions for that purpose.

Wood's half-pence. The King, having been informed that his subjects in Ireland were in want of small money, made a contract with William Wood to furnish that Kingdom with copper half-pence and farthings. The copper was to be of such fineness, and the money of such a weight, as agreed upon in the patent granted for that purpose. When this money came to be circulated in Ireland, great clamour was raised against it, and the Parliament, which met on the 5th of September, came to these resolutions:

That the importing and uttering of copper half-pence and farthings, by virtue of Wood's patent, would be prejudicial to the revenue, destructive of trade, and of dangerous consequence to the rights of the subject: That the State of the Nation had been misrepresented to the King, in order to obtain the patent: That the half-pence wanted weight; and, though the terms of the patent had been complied with, there would have been a loss to the Nation of 150 l. per cent. That it had been always highly prejudicial to the Kingdom to grant the power of coinage to private persons, and would at all times be of dangerous consequence.

Addresses from both Houses, agreeable to these resolutions, were transmitted to the King, who, in answer to the Commons, said, 'He was very much concerned, that his granting the patent for coining of half-pence and farthings, agreeable to the practice of his Royal Predecessors, had given so much uneasiness to the House of Commons; and, if there had been any abuses committed by the Patentee, his Majesty would give the necessary orders for inquiring into, and punishing those abuses, and do every thing, that was in his power, for the satisfaction of his people.' Pursuant to this answer (for which the Commons returned an address of thanks) the affair was referred to the Lords of the Privy-Council in England, by whom a report of it was drawn up in July the next year. In this report they justified the conduct of the Patentee, and observed, that, his Majesty having ordered, that an assay should be made of the fineness, value, and weight of Mr. Wood's copper money, and the goodness thereof, compared with the former coinages of copper money for Ireland, and the copper money coined in his Mint in England, it had been accordingly referred to Sir Isaac Newton, Mr. Southwell, and Mr. Scroope, to make the assay and trial; and it appeared, 'That the Pix of the copper-mones coined at Bristol by Mr. Wood for Ireland, containing the trial pieces, which was sealed and locked up at the time of coining, was opened at his Majesty's Mint at the Tower: That the Comptroller's account of the quantities of half pence and farthings coined agreed with Mr. Wood's account, amounting to 59 tons, 3 hundred, 1 quarter, 11 pounds, and 4 ounces: That by the specimens of this coinage, which had from time to time been taken from the several parcels coined, and sealed up in papers, and put into the Pix, 60 half-pence weighed 14 ounces Troy, and 18 penny-weights, which is about a quarter of an ounce above one pound weight Averdupois; and 30 farthings weighed 3 ounces and 3 quarters of an ounce Troy, and 46 grains; which is also above the weight required by the patent: That both half-pence and farthings, when heated red hot, spread thin under the hammer, without cracking: That the copper, of which Mr. Wood's coinage is made, is of the same goodness and value with the copper, of which the copper money is coined in his Majesty's Mint for England, and worth, in the market, about 13 pence per pound weight Averdupois: That a pound of copper wrought into bars and fillets, and made fit for coinage, before brought into the Mint at the Tower of London, is worth 18 pence per pound, and always costs as much, and is coined into 23 pence of copper money by tale for England. That the half-pence and farthings coined by Mr. Wood, when compared with the copper money coined for Ireland in the Reigns of King Charles II, King James II, and King William and Queen Mary, considerably exceeds them all in goodness, fineness, and value of the copper, none of them bearing 1723. bearing the fire so well, not being malleable, waiting very much in the fire, and great part of them burning into a cinder of little or no value at all.' The fact being thus proved to be on the side of Mr. Wood, the Lords Committee shew, that his Majesty's Royal Predecessors always exercised the undoubted prerogative of granting patents for copper coinage in Ireland to private persons, none of which patents were equally beneficial to that Kingdom, nor so well guarded with proper covenants and conditions for the due execution of the powers thereby granted, as this of Mr. Wood, though the validity of these patents, and a due compliance with them, was never in any one instance till this time disputed or controverted. They then prove, that Mr. Wood's patent was not, as had been suggested in Ireland, obtained clandestinely, in an unprecedented manner, but after a reference to the Attorney and Solicitor-General, and after Sir Isaac Newton had been consulted in all the steps of settling it. In the last place they made it plainly appear by a cloud of witnesses, that there was a real want of small money in Ireland, to make small payments. But, Mr. Wood having, in compliance with the clamour industriously raised a gainst his coinage, proposed to reduce his coinage from 100,000 l. to 40,000 l. value, it was thought fit to accept of it; and to send directions to Ireland accordingly (1).

The Parliament of Ireland passed several acts, and particularly one for accepting the Quakers affirmation instead of an oath; and granted 340,000 l. Supply toward paying off the debt of the Nation, which was about 660,000 l. and for the support of the Establishment for two years. 1723.

On the 10th of October died Earl Cowper, eminent for his integrity in the discharge of the office of Lord Chancellor, which he had twice filled. There may have been Chancellors of more extensive learning, but none of more knowledge in the laws of England. His judgment was quick, and yet solid. His eloquence manly, but flowing. His manner graceful and noble (2).

The King was still at Hanover when he heard of the Duke of Orleans's death, who, under the title of Prime Minister, governed France as absolutely as he had done during the minority of Lewis XV. King George was much concerned at the news: The mutual esteem they had for each other, their circumstances and interests which were not unlike, begot a firm friendship between them, whereof they gave on all occasions the most effectual proofs. The Duke died of an apoplexy in the 50th year of his age, and according to his desire, before his decease, the Duke of Bourbon was nominated Prime Minister.

As the death of the Duke of Orleans might occasion great alterations, and as it was uncertain whether the new Minister would enter into the views of his Predecessor, the King hastened his return to England. Being detained by contrary winds some days in Holland, he received there assurances, from the part of France, of the good

(1) Notwithstanding this decision of the Privy-Council of England, Dean Swift, in his paper, called The Draper of Dublin, represented this affair in the blackest colours, and is supposed to be author of a lampoon upon it, beginning with these words:

*Now, altho' to draw water is not very good,
Yet we all should rejoice to be hewers of Wood.*

(2) In September this year, four English Gentlemen were barbarously murdered in France. Mr. Seabright and Mr. Monpeffon, accompanied by Mr. Davis, passing over to Calais in their way to Paris, set out from thence for that City the 12th of September, Mr. Seabright and Mr. Davis in one chaise, Mr. Monpeffon and Richard Spindelaw, Mr. Seabright's man, in another, and Mr. Monpeffon's servant on horse back. About seven miles from Calais they were attacked by fix ruffians well mounted, who stopped the postillions, came up to the chaises, and demanded their money, which the Gentlemen readily surrendered, they having no firearms to make resistance, and even their swords were taken from them. The robbers then, taking them out of the chaises, commanded them to lie down upon their faces, and the postillions to do the same. After which the villains rifled their pockets, and searched them very narrowly; which done, they ordered Spindelaw to get up and open the portmanteau, which as he was doing, he saw one of the rogues pull the dead body of Mr. Locke out of a chaise in which he had been killed in his return from Paris, at some small distance from that Place; Mr. Locke's servant, a Swiss, was spared, but made to lie on his face. When they had done with Mr. Seabright's portmanteau, they ordered Mr. Monpeffon to open his, and he desired Mr. Seabright to tell them in French, his servant was gone before, and had the key with him. This man they had shot in the back, but, not being dead, he was commanded to lie down on his face, and now they fetched him to open his master's portmanteau; when they had finished their search, they cried Tuez, Kill; they first shot Mr. Seabright through the heart, Mr. Davis was shot and stabbed in several places, and his skull cleft; they stabbed Spindelaw in five places in his body, and let him for dead, Mr. Monpeffon at the same time received a shot which had laid him sprawling on the ground. A peasant of the neighbourhood, who was going to Calais for a licence to marry, unfortunately passing that way, was also murdered, and Mr. Monpeffon, who had lain as if he had been dead, lifting up his head before the murderers were gone, one of them came back to him and cut his throat; but he and Spindelaw made a shift with the help of some of the Country people to get back to Calais, where Mr. Monpeffon died 36 hours after, and Spindelaw, recovering of his wounds, returned to England. The dead bodies of the four English Gentlemen were brought to England, and landed at Tower Wharf, four days after, where they were received by their friends, who gave them decent interment; and George Turville, Esq; of the Middle Temple, who happened to pass by the place where these Gentlemen were murdered, a few hours after the said murder was committed, while the dead bodies, stripped naked by the Country people, yet lay on the high road, gave orders for erecting a monument of black marble, in form of a pyramid, on the spot where the murder happened, by permission of the Duke de Humiers, Gouverneur of the Boulognois, and the Bishop of Belgine. These robbers and assassins robbed the Lisfe stage coach, seven miles from Peronne, two months afterwards, and killed Paulart and Humelet, two persons that accompanied the coach; two of the rogues Joseph Bizeau, a jeweller of Liege, and Peter le Febvre, another jeweller, being taken, were tried and condemned at Paris in July following, by this most dreadful sentence: To be put to the rack, to have their arms, legs, and thighs broken on a scaffold, and to have their bodies put upon wheels, there to remain with their faces towards the sky as long as they had life, and Bizeau's dead body to be carried and remain exposed on a wheel upon the high road to Calais, and le Febvre's on the high road to Peronne, which sentence was executed to the full.

1723. good disposition of that Court, to cultivate, and even improve, the union established by the late Duke of Orleans, between the two States.

1723-24. The King came to London the 19th of December, and on the 9th of January the Parliament met, and was opened by the following speech, delivered as usual by the Lord Chancellor:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Cannot open this Session without congratulating you upon the success of your endeavours last year for the safety, interest, and honour of the Kingdom. The rise of the public credit, the flourishing condition of our trade and manufactures, and the general tranquillity of my people, are the happy consequences of your prudent resolutions. It is to be hoped, that the few examples, which were made of some notorious offenders, will be sufficient to deter the most disaffected from engaging in the like desperate and wicked practices. The augmentation you thought fit to make to our National forces, by sea and land, has not only secured the general quiet of the Kingdom against any sudden attempts or insurrections, but has also given me such weight and credit in all foreign Negotiations, as greatly contribute towards the preservation of the peace of Europe.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I will order the proper Officers to lay before you the estimates for the service of the current year. I desire such Supplies only, as you shall find absolutely necessary for preserving the peace of the Kingdom, and for the security of my people; and those, I hope, may be raised without laying any additional charge or burden on my subjects.

"I must, in a particular manner, recommend to your care the public debts of the Kingdom, as the most national concern you can possibly take into your consideration. I am persuaded, it must be a very great satisfaction to all my faithful subjects, to see the sinking fund improved and augmented, and the debt of the Nation thereby put into a method of being so much the sooner gradually reduced and paid off. It would be a work truly worthy of a British Parliament to begin this commendable undertaking, and to make such a progress therein, as, with a strict regard to public faith and private property, may pave the way to this great and desirable end.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"In the present happy situation of our affairs, I have nothing more to recommend to you, than that you would make use of the opportunity, which your own good conduct has put into your hands, in considering of such farther laws, as may be wanting for the ease and encouragement of trade and navigation, for the employment of the poor, and for the exciting and encouraging a spirit of industry in the Nation.

"I am fully satisfied, that the trade and wealth of my people are the happy effects of the liberties they enjoy; and that the gran-

No. 100. Vol. IV.

1723-24. "deur of the Crown consists in their prosperity: And I am as fully persuaded, that all who wish well to their Country, must agree with me, that it is the vainest of all delusions to imagine, that the Religion, Laws, and Liberties of this Kingdom can ever be secured, but by supporting the present Establishment, and maintaining the Succession in the Protestant Line. Let us therefore heartily join in every thing, that may tend to promote our mutual happiness, and to extinguish the hopes of those, who long have been, and are still restless in their endeavours to subvert this Nation to the whole train of miseries, that are inseparable from Popery and Arbitrary Power."

This speech drew from both Houses addresses of thanks, with assurances of maintaining the present happy Establishment, and the Succession in his Majesty's Family, as the only solid foundation of quietly enjoying their Religion, Laws, and Liberties.

The Commons, according to custom, proceeded to raise the Supplies, which were granted according to the estimate laid before them by the Court. Ten thousand seamen at 4*l.* a month each, were voted for the sea-service, and the army was continued on the same foot as last year. The affair of the army occasioned a warm debate, chiefly about the four thousand additional troops raised the year before, which the Opposers insisted to have disbanded; but it was carried against them, and resolved that the number of effective men, for the year 1724 (including 1815 invalids) should be 18264. A land-tax of two shillings in the pound, with the malt-tax, was granted towards defraying the expences of the ensuing year.

As the King had particularly recommended to their care the public debts of the Nation, the Commons took the same into consideration, and came to the following resolutions:

That, towards lessening the public debt, the annuities of 5*l.* per cent. charged on the general fund, by a clause in the act of the 5th of his Majesty's Reign, except such as had been subscribed into the South-Sea, should be paid off at Lady-Day 1724, as also the unsubscribed blanks of the lottery of 1714. That all these should be discharged, with the money arising from the sinking fund, as well as the two annuities, which by the act, entitled, *An act for redeeming certain annuities, payable by the Cashier of the Bank at 5*l.* per cent. were enacted to be redeemed at Lady-Day, 1724.* Pursuant to these resolutions, a bill was brought in, which, passing both Houses, received the Royal assent.

Protections from foreign Ministers, Peers, and Members of Parliament, having long been the subject of complaint, a list of the names of the persons protected by written certificates was laid before the Commons, and it was resolved, "That all protections and written certificates of the Members of this House be declared void in law, and be forthwith withdrawn and called in; and that none be granted for the future; and that, if any shall be granted by any Member, such Member shall make satisfaction to the party injured, and shall be liable to the censure of the House." This order was to be printed and set up in the Courts of Justice, and distributed by the Sheriffs in their several Counties. The same grievance 1723-24. grievance being taken into consideration by the Lords, after some debate, the following declaration was made, 'That all the written protections are null and void; and all other protections, which shall be at any time hereafter given, shall be taken to be null and void.' But this order is not to extend to menial servants, nor those employed necessarily and properly about the estates of Peers, or any who are really their servants.

In this Session, the inland duty was laid on coffee, tea, and chocolate, which has been a considerable increase to the public revenue.

Army bill passed in the House of Lords.

The affair of the army caused the greatest debate in the House of Lords. There had been the last year an addition of four thousand men on account of the Conspiracy, which was now proposed to be continued. The Commons had agreed to it, and passed the bill; but the continuance of these additional troops met with great opposition in the House of Lords. The two most remarkable speeches were the Lord Trevor's against it, and the Lord Townshend's for it (1). It was observed, that the Lord North and Grey, the Earl of Orrery, the Lord Bathurst, and others of that party, appeared very zealous for the reduction of the army, which caused the Duke of Argyle to say in his speech, 'That, if he saw the Nation unanimous in opinion, that our laws, liberties, properties, and holy religion, entirely depend on the present happy Settlement, and on the Protestant Succession in his Majesty's Royal Family, he would readily give his vote for reducing the army. But he was very much afraid, that some people so strenuously insisted on the disbanding of the additional troops, with no other design than to weaken the Government, and thereby have an opportunity of involving their native Country in new troubles. And therefore these noble Lords, who had spoke for the reduction of the army, would do well, when they went down into their several Countries, to assure the people, with whom, no doubt, their reasons would not fail of having great weight, that their liberties and properties were entirely safe under his Majesty's Government.' After a long debate, the motion against the additional troops was rejected, and the bill passed, as sent up by the Commons.

The business of the Session being over, the King came to the House of Peers the 24th of April, and, passing the bills, delivered the following speech by the mouth of the Chancellor:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"THE unanimity, cheerfulness, and dispatch with which you have now finished every thing I recommended to you, at the opening of this Session, are fresh instances of your affection to my Person and Government, and cannot fail of contributing, with the blessings of God on our endeavours, towards the establishment of that happy tranquillity we now enjoy both at home and abroad.

"Your continuing the like national force by sea and land this year, as was judged necessary by Parliament for the service of the last, gives me great satisfaction. You have hereby wisely provided against the mischiefs from any

"fuklen

(1) As these speeches contain the chief arguments on both sides, they are here inserted at large:

The Lord Trevor said, 'That, the Conspiracy mentioned in the King's speech at the opening of the last Session of Parliament, which was the occasion of this augmentation of the land forces, being now happily extinguished, and thereby the cause of raising that additional number being perfectly removed, there was not the least reason or pretence for continuing that number. That the keeping on foot a greater army in time of peace, than was absolutely necessary for the security of the King's Person and Government, was very dangerous to our happy Constitution: And, considering the great tranquillity we enjoy both at home and abroad, he could not but apprehend, the number of regular forces allowed by this bill to be much greater than was necessary for that end. That, if so great an army was allowed to be continued in our present happy circumstances, a standing army would thereby become an essential part of our Constitution, since the reasons for keeping it up in perpetuity would grow stronger every year, and in every succeeding Reign. For on the one hand it cannot, with any probability, be foreseen or expected, that in any future time there will be less reason to be given, than at present, for justifying the necessity of keeping up so great an army, there being now as little danger to our present happy Establishment to be feared either from insurrections at home, or by any disturbance or invasions from abroad, as the nature and infallibility of human affairs will allow of. And on the other hand, if so numerous an army be at present allowed of in Parliament, no argument can hereafter be urged for the reducing the number in any future Reign, but what will seem to carry with it too great a distrust of the Prince then on the Throne, and will be construed to imply, that the same confidence is not to be reposed in him, as in his Predecessors.' His Lordship added, 'That it was not out of any distrust he entertained either of his Majesty or his Ministers, that he was for reducing part of the army. That, on the contrary, he was fully convinced, his Majesty will never make an ill use of his power, of which they had a sure earnest in the equity and moderation, with which his Majesty had governed hitherto: But, that as they could not promise themselves, nor expect, that so good and so just a King should always fill the Throne, it was prudence early to prevent the inconveniences and dangers, to which our excellent Constitution and Liberties would be exposed, in case, in any succeeding Reign, an ambitious Prince and ill Ministers should have so great a number of troops at their disposal. That it was notorious, that all the States of Europe, that have lost their liberties, have been inflamed by their own armies, whose Officers and Commanders, growing every day in power, do, at last, turn it against those, from whom they had at first their commissions; of which we had a fatal example in England still fresh in our memories in the person of Oliver Cromwell. That, besides the four thousand additional men, the regular forces were double the number of those kept on foot after the peace of Ryswick, in the Reign of King William of glorious memory; and more numerous by one third than in the late Queen's Reign, after the peace of Utrecht: That therefore they are more than sufficient to secure the Government against any sudden intestine commotion, which is the less to be apprehended, by reason of the general affection, which the people had lately shewn in taking the oaths, though many of them that took them, were not required to do it, by the act passed the last Session; and he was confident, that, except a few persons of desperate principles and fortunes, who might hope to fish in troubled waters, there was no body in England, that had any thing to lose, who wished for a Revolution. That, if we looked abroad, it appeared, that by the happy influence of his Majesty's wife Counsel, and the good Alliances that had been entered into and concerted, all Europe enjoyed a profound peace, which,

1724.

“ sudden shocks to the public credit ; you have “ provided for the safety of the Kingdom, and “ have enabled this Nation to hold, among the “ powers of Europe, the rank and figure due to “ her honour and dignity. Nothing could have “ been more acceptable to me, than your hav“ ing been able to make that provision, with“ out laying any new or additional burthens on “ my people.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

“ I return you my thanks for the care and “ pains you have taken towards augmenting the “ sinking fund, and improving the public re“ venues, by putting them under a stricter “ management. I make no doubt, but that the “ happy beginning you have made will be at“ tended with such immediate good conse“ quences, as will encourage you to pursue the “ way you have now opened for a gradual re“ duction of the debt, and for putting the “ trade and navigation of Great-Britain on such “ a foot, as may not only in some measure dif“ courage the unjustifiable incroachments they “ labour under from some of our neighbours,
 “ but at the same time extend her exportations “ beyond what has been known in former “ ages.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

“ As the early recess, which your diligence
 “ and unanimity has procured you, affords you
 “ the opportunity of a longer retirement into the “ Country, than the business of former Sessions

“ has usually allowed of, I assure myself, that “ you will carry with you thither the same zeal “ for the public good, with which you have “ been animated in Parliament ; and that you “ will make it your business to discountenance
 “ any remains there may be yet left of sedition
 “ and disaffection, and to promote that perfect “ harmony and confidence between me and my “ people, which I most earnestly desire, and “ on which our mutual happiness entirely de“ pends.”

1724.

A little before the end of the Session, the King had appointed the Duke of Newcastle to be Secretary of State in the room of the Lord Carteret, who was made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Duke of Grafton was appointed Lord Chamberlain, the Lord Falmouth and Mr. Edgewcombe Vice-Treasurers of Ireland, Mr. Yonge Commissioner of the Treasury, and Mr. Peibam Secretary at war. Sir Robert Raymond being made a Judge of the King's Bench, Sir Philip York succeeded him as Attorney-General. And Sir Clement Wearg was made Solicitor-General. About the middle of May, Horatio Walpole was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary at the Court of France.

On the 16th of May the King sent the following circular letter to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge : ‘ We being greatly desirous to favour and encourage those ancient and laudable nurseries of piety and learning, and to enable them more effectually to answer the end of their institution, by sending forth constant Supplies of learned and able men, to serve the public both in Church and State ; and having observed, that in all probability, would be lasting : But that, in case of a rupture with any neighbouring Prince, our fleet, which was certainly the most numerous, and the best in all Christendom, would defend us against any foreign invasion or insult. That the pay of the four thousand additional men amounted to a good sum of money. That indeed, at another juncture, that expence might easily be borne ; but that in the present circumstances, when the Nation is involved in so great a debt, and groans under the load of heavy taxes, this additional charge is very considerable. That, his Majesty, in his gracious speech at the opening of this Session of Parliament, having, in a particular manner, recommended to the House of Commons the putting the national debt in a method of being gradually reduced and paid, it was with the greatest satisfaction he took notice, that some progress had already been made in that great and important undertaking ; and that, in order to improve that good beginning, not only the pay of these additional forces, but also all other needless expences ought, in his opinion, to be applied to the increase of the sinking fund.’ His Lordship concluded, as he had began, with the most earnest professions of his sincere and entire affection for his Majesty's sacred Person and Government, and for his Royal Family, on whose prosperity, under God, absolutely depend both our present felicity, and the preservation of our laws, liberties, properties, and holy religion.

The Lord Townshend answered the Lord Trevor, and said, ‘ That he agreed with that noble Lord in some parts of his speech, but was sorry he differed from him in others. That he was thoroughly persuaded of his entire affection to his Majesty's Person, and the present happy Settlement ; nor did he in the least doubt, but he saw with pleasure the progress, that had been already made towards reducing the national debt : But that, at the same time, they ought to consider, that, as the happy tranquillity, we at present enjoy, is in some measure owing to the strength of the Government, so it was prudence not to weaken that strength, because the same might affect public credit, which being founded on the security of the Government, if that security was rendered precarious, they would soon see the funds and stocks fall 10 or 12 per Cent. which would render the reduction of the national debt altogether impracticable, since it was impossible to reduce that debt, otherwise than by public credit. That it was notorious, that, before the last augmentation of regular forces, the Government could not form and march a body of three or four thousand men against any sudden attempt, either at home, or from abroad, without leaving the King's Person, the Royal Family, the Capital of the Kingdom, and the fortified Places exposed ; and therefore the said augmentation was become absolutely necessary to prevent these dangers and inconveniences. That the number of the troops now on foot was not so great as to afford any just ground of jealousy, since the present forces are much inferior to those the Crown had formerly. That, by the ancient and Gothic constitution of the Government, the King had at his disposal the Militia of the Realm, which chiefly consisted in archers, who were kept in constant discipline and exercise, the memory of which is still preserved, there being almost in every village a place called But-Lane. That the invention of fire-arms had made a great alteration in the ancient Constitution ; and, instead of archers, the Crown raised as many regular troops, as were thought necessary upon any emergency. That Queen Elizabeth, who had many enemies both at home and abroad, constantly kept a considerable body of troops in the Netherlands, without any contradiction from her Parliaments, and thereby maintained herself on the Throne, and overcame all her enemies. That, if King Charles I. had steered the same course, he might in all probability have preserved both his Crown and his Life, since he lost both only for want of a sufficient force to suppress

1724. that no encouragement or provision has hitherto been made in either of the Universities, for the study of modern history, or modern languages, the knowledge of which is highly necessary towards compleatly qualifying the youth committed to their care for several stations both in Church and State, to which they may be called; and having seriously weighed the prejudice, that has accrued to the Universities from this defect, persons of foreign Nations being often employed in the education and tuition of youth, both at home and in their travels, and great numbers of the young Nobility and Gentry being either sent directly abroad from schools, or taken away from the Universities before the course of their studies can be there compleated, and opportunities frequently lost to the Crown, of employing and encouraging Members of the two Universities, by conferring on them such employments both at home and abroad, as necessarily require a competent skill in writing and speaking the modern languages; in order therefore to remedy these and the like inconveniencies, we have determined to appoint two persons of sober conversation and prudent conduct, of the degree of Master of Arts, or Bachelor of Laws, or of some higher degree, in one of the Universities, skilled in modern history, and in the knowledge of modern languages, to be nominated by us to be our Professors of modern history, one for the University of Cambridge, and the other for that of Oxford, who shall be obliged to read lectures in the public schools, at such times as shall hereafter be appointed. And we have further determined, that each of the Professors shall have a stipend of four hundred pounds per annum, and out of the stipend shall be obliged to maintain with sufficient salaries, in the University where he shall be established, two persons at least, well qualified to teach and instruct in writing and speaking the languages, which Teachers shall be under the direction of the Professors respectively, and shall be obliged to learn two at least of the languages; both the Professors and Teachers taking especial care, that the times and hours for the instructing and teaching the Scholars be so ordered, as not to interfere with those appointed for their academical studies; which Professors and Teachers shall be obliged, once every year, to transmit an attested account of the progress made by each Scholar committed to their care, to our principal Secretaries of State, to be laid before us, that we may encourage the diligence and application of such amongst them as shall have qualified themselves for our service, by giving them suitable employments either at home or abroad, as occasion shall offer.

The two first Professors were Mr. Gregory, of Christ-Church, Oxford; and Mr. Samuel Harris, Fellow of Peter-House, Cambridge.

For a farther encouragement to the Universities, the King ordered that his Almoner should chuse out of the Members of Oxford and Cambridge, twenty-four Preachers to officiate alternately in the Chapel at White-Hall, with a salary of thirty pounds a year each.

The inoculation of the small-pox had now begun to be practised in England, and succeeded very well with the two Princesses, Amelia and Carolina, and had the same good effect on Prince Frederick, the Duke of Bedford, and the Lady Mary Russell, his sister. But others are said to suffer under it, particularly the Earl of Sunderland's son, who died in the operation, upon which Dr. Jurin, Secretary to the Royal Society, published a treatise in favour of inoculating.

The 21st of May died Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford, and Earl Mortimer, whose life and character is given at large, by the Author of the * Political State (1).

* May,
1724

On

prejudice, which was the principal source of all the calamities and enormities, in which the Nation was afterwards involved. That upon the Restoration of King Charles II. they, who at that time had the management of affairs, did not think it proper to keep up a great number of regular troops, and therefore chose to restore to the Crown its ancient power over the Militia of the Kingdom; but that there was a secret in that. That King James II. not trusting to the Militia, had an army of 20,000 men, which would have secured him the Crown, had he not given a general disgust to his people, by violating the fundamental laws, and endeavouring to subvert the Constitution in Church and State. That in the Reign of King William of glorious memory, when some leading men in the Parliament thought fit to disband the army, after the peace of Ryswick, they fell upon a project to secure the Government, which was to raise and discipline the Militia; but that they soon after perceived the unprofitableness of that scheme, the Militia proving a great burthen to the People, and of no service to the Government. That the reduction of the army had then a double ill effect; for, on the one hand, it obliged King William, and his Ministers, to enter into a treaty of partition; and, on the other hand, it very probably encouraged France to break that treaty, which occasioned a second war, and was the source of two thirds of that heavy debt, under which the Nation labours at this day. That the disbanding of the army had almost the same ill effect in the Reign of the late Queen, having encouraged Louis XIV. to furnish the Pretender with a land-force and a fleet to invade these Kingdoms. That, if at present they weakened the hands of the Government, we should be exposed to the like insults and attempts. That, if our enemies may be credited in an affair, in which it is their interest to speak truth, they seemed confidently assured of success in their design of overturning the Government, provided they had only an assistance of three or four thousand men from abroad; and that, considering the method now practised in embarkations, how good, and how strong soever our fleet may be, it was impossible to hinder a foreign Prince, who should have a mind to undertake it, to throw such a number of men upon England. His Lordship concluded, 'That the constant tenour of his Majesty's Administration, since his happy accession to the Throne, ought to convince every body, that, by the continuing the number of regular forces now on foot, his Majesty and Ministers have nothing in view but the public safety and security, and thereby to give the People an opportunity to improve trade, and encourage industry, as the only means to retrieve their former losses.'

(1) The most material particulars, besides what relates to his family and circumstances, are as follow:

By his strict conjunction with the Whigs and Whigingtons, his relations and their friends, he gained at last such an extensive interest, as to be chosen Speaker of the House of Commons. When the Queen thought fit to lay aside the Earl of Nottingham, Principal Secretary of State, Mr. Robert Harley was pitched upon to succeed him as her Favourite and Prime Minister, supposing he would be most agreeable to the Whigs, from his education among the Dissenters. The Duke of Marborough and the Earl of Godolphin's main design, in advancing him, was to secure his interest in the House 1724. On the 15th of June died Dr. Henry Sacheverel. Though he had taken the oaths to the Government, his will shewed he persevered to the end in the same sentiments; for, amongst his legacies, he left five hundred pounds to the late Bishop of Rochester. It does not appear, that he was any way concerned in the plot.

As to foreign affairs, one of the most remarkable events this year, was the abdication of Philip V. King of Spain. Having taken the resolution to renounce his Crown, and retire with the Queen to the Monastery of St. Ildefonso, he sent from thence, the 15th of January 1723-4, the Marquis de Grimaldo, Principal Secretary of State, with a packet for the Prince of Asturias, his Son, who the day before returned from St. Ildefonso to the Escurial. The Marquis being arrived there, and having acquainted the Prince with his message, his Highness sent for the Infantes to come to his apartment; and also ordered the Count de Altamira, the Marquis de Valero, the Duke de San Pedro, the Count de Salazar, the Marquis de Magney, the Count de Salsati, and the Prior of San Lorenzo, to attend there, and be witnesses of what should pass; who being all present, the Marquis delivered the packet to the Prince of Asturias, who returned it to him opened, that he might read what was in it, which was the instrument of his Father's renunciation of the Crown, accompanied with a letter of advice to direct the new King's conduct. The Renunciation was also sent to the President of the Council of Castile, and ordered to be published throughout the Kingdom (1).

Upon this it was resolved in the Council of Castile, that King Lewis might immediately take the Government upon him without assembling the Cortes, as having been already sworn to and acknowledged Prince of Spain. The pension, which their Catholic Majesties referred to themselves, was about 100,000 pistoles, and they likewise referred about 25,000 for each of the Infantes.

The King of France, at the persuasion of the Bishop of Frejus, and contrary to the sentiments of the Duke of Bourbon, published a severe edict this year against his Protestant subjects: Whoever performed any exercise of the Reformed Religion, if a man, was to be sent to the galleys; if a woman, to be shaved, and confined where the Judges thought fit: The Protestant Preachers to be put to death; and those who had any communication directly or indirectly with such Ministers, condemned to the galleys: To give their children foreign education, to be punished with a fine of 6000 livres: The memory of those who died in the profession of the Protestant Religion, to be proscribed: All concealed Protestants, who dissuaded sick persons from dying Catholics, to be sent to the galleys, if men, and if women, as before: To consent that children should marry abroad without licence, to be punished with the galleys; and Baptism and Schooling were forbidden to Protestants, under the like pains and penalties. To put a stop to these severities, Mr. Horace Walpole had orders to solicit the French Court in behalf of the Protestants; but he could obtain no

House of Commons, and they fondly imagined, that, as to the grand affairs, either he would not intermeddle, or would blindly follow their directions; but they soon after found, that a person of his ambitious spirit would not be contented to act an under part.

They who extol his liberality and munificence to learned men, are no more to be depended upon, than when they tell us, that he discharged the office of Secretary to King William with great address; for, as it is certain on the one hand, that he never served King William in that capacity, it is no less true on the other hand, that the only person on whom he bestowed any public mark of favour, was Dr. Jonathan Swift, the famous Author of the Tale of a Tub, whom he employed, with some other obscure Writers, to banter and ridicule all that opposed his measures. He was the reverse of his predecessor in the Treasury, the Earl of Godolphin, who never kept suitors unprofitably in suspense, nor promised any thing that he was not resolved to perform. The Earl of Oxford, on the contrary, kept them, who had any pretensions, in perpetual dependence, by seeding them with hopes. This maxim he practised in a most barbarous manner with Mr. Roue, Author of the tragedy of Tamerlane; the story is too well known to be repeated. They who commend him for being a kind friend, and generous enemy, have forgot with what an unrelenting fury he pursued his Benefactor, the immortal Duke of Marlborough, and Mr. Stephens, the Minister, whom he caused to be prosecuted to the pillory, and that ignominious punishment was not remitted, till he was brought to the place of execution. His prodigious rise and greatness was more owing to his cunning in finding out the weaknesses of those he had to deal with, than to his own bright parts. For he neither was master of eloquence in speech, nor of stile in writing, but in both puzzled and intricate: His constant design being to discover other people's thoughts, and conceal his own. But he had at last the fate, which all ambidexters deserve, to be distrusted and disregarded by all parties; of which he was so sensible, that, for several years before his death, he seldom came to Parliament, but lived in a Country retirement, endeavouring to drown his melancholy thoughts in wine, which at last dozed his spirits, and certainly abridged his life.

(1) The renunciation was as follows:

Having these four years considered with due reflection, and maturely, the miseries of this life, through the infirmities, wars, and troubles, with which God has been pleased to visit me during the twenty-three years of my Reign; and having likewise considered, that my eldest Son Don Lewis, sworn Prince of Spain, is of sufficient age, is married, and has capacity, judgment, and the qualities fit for ruling and governing justly and happily this Monarchy; I have determined absolutely to quit the possession and administration of it, renouncing the same, with all its Dominions, Kingdoms, and Lordships, in favour of the said Prince Don Lewis, my eldest Son; and to retire with the Queen, in whom I have found a ready disposition and voluntary inclination, to accompany me to this place and seat of St. Ildefonso, here to serve God, disengaged from all other cares, to meditate on death, and to seek my salvation. This I communicate to the Council for their information, to be notified to the proper persons, that my resolution may be made known to all.

His letter to his Son was remarkable neither for stile nor sentiments: Amongst his instructions, he says: 'Preserve ever a great devotion to the most Holy Virgin, and put yourself, as well as your Kingdoms, under her protection, seeing you cannot, by any other means, better obtain what may be needful for you, and for them. Be always, as you ought, obedient to the Holy See, and to the Pope, as the Vicar of Jesus Christ. Protect and defend ever the Tribunal of the Holy Inquisition, which may be called the bulwark of the faith, and to which it owes its preservation in all its purity in the Dominions of Spain; so that the heresies which have afflicted the other parts of Christendom, and produced such horrid and deplorable ravages in them, could never be able to get footing here.'

1724. no other answer, than that the King's edicts must be obeyed.

However, the Court of France declared, that the edict against the Protestants should not affect the inhabitants of Alsatia, their religious rights being founded on treaties of peace. This was done to prevent the Alsatians, terrified with this edict, from putting themselves under the protection of Germany.

and at Thorn. The Protestants at Thorn, in Royal Prussia, belonging to Poland, were likewise treated with great cruelty, on account of a pretended riot in July, which was really begun by a Student of the Jesuits College, and for which the President and Vice-President of that City, with thirteen others, were condemned to be beheaded, and others quartered and burnt, and the Protestant Councillors at Thorn to be removed from the Magistracy, and Papists put in their places; and the Church of St. Mary to be taken from the Protestants, and given to the Franciscan Friars. Mr. Finch, the British Minister at Dresden, had orders to go to Poland, and insist upon satisfaction for the Protestants of Thorn, and other places in that Kingdom, oppressed by the Papists; but the Poles could not be prevailed upon to do the Protestants justice (1).

Commotions in Scotland. A set of enthusiastical Levellers rose in the West of Scotland, who, under pretence of establishing equality among Christians, pulled down inclosures, and committed great ravages and depredations. But the Royal regiment of Scots Fusiliers being ordered to march against them, about the latter end of June, and three other regiments of foot landing at Galloway at the same time, they soon suppressed those disorders.

The third Session of the second Parliament of King George. The Parliament met again the 12th of November, when his Majesty made the following speech to both Houses by the mouth of the Lord Chancellor.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I AM persuaded you share with me in the satisfaction I feel at the prosperous situation of affairs: Peace with all powers abroad; at home perfect tranquillity, plenty, and an uninterrupted enjoyment of all civil and religious rights, are most distinguishing marks of the favour and protection of the Divine Providence: And these, with all their happy consequences, will, I doubt not, by the blessing of God upon our joint endeavours, be long continued to my people.

" The same provision by sea and land, for the defence and safety of the Nation, will continue to make us respected abroad, and consequently secure at home. The same attention to the improvement of the public revenues, and to the ease and encouragement of trade and navigation, will establish credit upon the strongest basis, and raise such a spirit of industry, as will not only enable us gradually to discharge the national debt, but will likewise greatly increase the wealth, power, and influence of this Kingdom.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

" I have ordered the proper Officers to prepare and lay before you estimates of the expences for the service of the ensuing year; and, as they do not exceed what has been found by experience to be absolutely necessary for the security of the Kingdom, I make no question, but I shall have your ready concurrence in raising the Supplies in such manner, as shall be most easy to my people.

" There is one thing, that I cannot but mention to you, as deserving your particular consideration.

(1) The affair of Thorn was thus: On the 16th of July, the ordinary procession at Thorn being arrived at St. James's Church-yard, a great number of the Citizens children resorted thither to see it, with their hats under their arms, according to custom; but a Student of the Jesuits College, not satisfied with that mark of civility and respect, would needs have them kneel down, and gave them bad language and blows. About two hours after the procession was over, this same Student, with some of his comrades, insulted several young people, without the least provocation on their part; but, in the end, this troublesome young fellow was seized by the soldiers of the garrison, and brought to the guard, after he had wounded several Citizens with stones. Next day the Jesuits Students got together again, and meeting one of the Citizens, whom they had abused the day before, they would oblige him to get their comrade set at liberty; but the Citizen had the good fortune to get out of their hands, and ran to his own house for safety, whither they pursued him sword in hand. In the mean time the President of the City had given order for setting him at liberty, at the request of the Rector of the Jesuits College; but another Student being likewise carried to the guard-room, his comrades would oblige the President to set him at liberty also, which he refused to do, till he had spoke to the Rector. Upon this the Jesuits Students ran furiously to the guard-room to rescue their comrade, but, being repulsed, they thought to revenge themselves upon a townsman, whom they pursued with drawn swords to the Burgrave's house, where he took shelter. They then attacked a Lutheran Student, who was in his night-gown at the door of his lodgings. They dragged him by the hair as far as their own College, threw him into the canal, and beat him unmercifully; which being done, they sallied again into the City, and wounded several people with their sabres, who were coming to the assistance of the Lutheran Student. But the President having sent thither the town-guard, they were obliged to betake themselves to their College, where they kept the Lutheran Student, till the Jesuits Student was first set at liberty. While this exchange was making, some of the trained-bands of the town were ordered to post themselves before the Jesuits College, to protect them from the enraged populace. But the Students throwing stones at them, and firing upon them, it was not possible to restrain the people, who forced open the gate, and were doing what they could to revenge the cruelty of the Jesuits Students, when, in that very instant, the Town-Clerk, who had got the Lutheran released, came and obliged them to retire. The riot was then thought to be over, but the guards that were posted before the College were scarce marched off, when the Jesuits Students from within fired again, and threw stones at the people, who again forced open the gate, plundered the College, and committed great disorders, till a detachment of the garrison and trained-bands came to the Jesuits assistance, and dispersed the people.

The bloody decree (notwithstanding the interposition of several Protestant Princes and States) was put in execution, only the Vice-President was reprieved. As many were exorbitantly fined, with the money arising from thence, a stone pillar with the Virgin Mary's statue was erected where her picture was burnt.

1724.

"sideration. It is too manifest, that the funds established for the finishing the works at Greenwich Hospital, and providing for a competent number of seamen there, cannot, in time of peace, be sufficient to answer the expences of this great and necessary work. It is therefore very much to be wished, that some method could be found out to make a farther provision for a comfortable support to our seamen, worn out in the service of their Country, and labouring under old age and infirmities.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"You must all be sensible how much our present happiness is owing to your union and steady conduct. It is therefore wholly unnecessary to recommend to you unanimity and dispatch in all your deliberations. The zeal and abilities you have on all occasions shewn in supporting the interest of your Country, even under the greatest difficulties, leave me no room to doubt of my having your entire effectual concurrence in every thing, that can tend to the service of the public, and to the good of my people."

*Debate on
the army.*

After the addresses of thanks from both Houses, the Commons proceeded upon the Supplies for the next year. This brought on a debate about the land-forces, particularly the additional four thousand men; but at length it was voted, that the number should be as the last year 18,264 effective men, and the sum of 654,488 l. 17 s. 8 d. was granted for their maintenance. For raising this and the other Supplies, two shillings in the pound on land and the malt-tax were voted.

Affair of the Masters in Chancery.

Great part of this Session was taken up in the trial of the Earl of Macclesfield, and the repeal of the late Lord Bolingbroke's attainder. There had been for some time a murmuring against the insufficiency of the Masters in Chancery to answer the great sums lodged in their hands by the Suitors in that Court; and it was suspected, that the large sums which they paid for admission into their places, made their way more easy than it ought to have been, and very much lessened the inquiry into their qualifications. This abuse had indeed been long growing up to this degree; and there was scarce any thing bought and sold more freely and openly than a Master in Chancery's place. The Suitors money, for which the Masters paid no interest, brought them in great interest from the funds; and the profits of the place being consequently doubled or trebled to what they had been before, there was such an opportunity to enrich themselves by the advantages they made of the money they had in their hands, that it is not surprizing, that the Lord-Keepers and Lord-Chancellor doubled and trebled the prices, which the Masters were to pay for admittance. But the complaints against this practice growing strong and public, and the Lord-Chancellor Macclesfield finding it impracticable for him to put a stop to those complaints, or keep the Great Seal under them, he resigned it the beginning of January, 1724-5; and it was committed to the custody of Sir Joseph Jekyll, Master of the Rolls, Sir Jeffery Gilbert, and Sir Robert Raymond, who having in Council taken the oath as Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, the King said to them as follows:

"I have had such experience of your integrity and ability, that it is with pleasure I now put the Great Seal into your hands. You are fully informed of the state of the accounts of the Masters in Chancery. I earnestly recommend to you the taking effectual care, that entire satisfaction be made to the Suitors of the Court; and that they be not exposed to any dangers for the future; and I have such confidence in the faithful discharge of the trust I now repose in you, that I am persuaded you will look narrowly to the behaviour of all the Officers under your jurisdiction, and will see that they act with the strictest regard to justice, and to the ease of my subjects."

On the 9th of February, Mr. Comptroller delivered the following message to the House of Commons:

George R.

"His Majesty having reason to apprehend, that the Suitors of the Court of Chancery were in danger of losing a considerable sum of money from the insufficiency of some of the Masters, thought himself obliged, in justice and compassion to the said Suitors, to take the most speedy and proper method the law would allow, for inquiring into the state of the Masters accounts, and securing their effects for the benefit of the Suitors: And his Majesty having had several reports laid before him in pursuance of the directions he had given, has ordered the reports to be communicated to the House, that they may have as full and as perfect a view of this important affair, as the shortness of the time, and the circumstances and nature of the proceedings, would admit of."

These reports, and the papers referred to in them, being taken into consideration by the Commons, Sir George Oxenden rose up, and said, "That it manifestly appeared by these reports, which after the strictest inquiry, and upon the maturest deliberation, had been drawn up by persons of the greatest weight and authority for their abilities, experience, high stations, and integrity, that enormous abuses had crept into the High-Court of Chancery, chiefly occasioned by the Magistrate, who was at the head of that Court, and whose duty consequently it was to prevent the same. That the crimes and misdemeanors of the late Lord-Chancellor were many, and of various natures, but might be reduced to these three heads: 1. That he had taken into his own hands the estates and effects of many widows, orphans, and lunatics, and either had disposed of part of them arbitrarily to his own profit, or connived at the Officers under him, making advantage of the same. 2. That he had raised to an exorbitant price the offices and places of the Masters in Chancery, and in order to enable them to pay to him those high prices and gratuities for their admission, had trusted in their hands large sums of money belonging to Suitors in Chancery. 3. That in several cases he had made divers irregular orders. So that, in his opinion, that first Magistrate in the Kingdom was fallen from the height of the dignities and honours, to which he had been raised by the King's Royal bounty and favour, to the depth of infamy and disgrace. And therefore he moved, 1724-25, that Thomas Earl of Macclesfield be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors. This motion was seconded by Mr. Strickland, and supported by Mr. Doddington, one of the Lords of the Treasury, who failed not to aggravate the Earl's misdemeanors, which, they said, were of the greatest and most dangerous consequence, since most of the estates in England, once in thirty years, pass through the Court of Chancery. Mr. Pulteney, who spoke next, said, 'That it was far from his thoughts to endeavour to abate the just resentment, which the Gentlemen, who spoke last, shewed against the great abuses that had been committed in the Court of Chancery: But that, in his opinion, they went a little too fast in so weighty and important an affair, by which means they might lose the very end they aimed at, the effectual punishing the person, by whose neglect at least those abuses had been committed. That whatever deference they ought to pay, on this occasion, to the capacity, experience, integrity and authority of the persons, who had drawn up the reports that had been laid before them; yet it little became the dignity, and was even derogatory to the prerogative of that House, which is the grand inquest of the Nation, to found an impeachment upon those reports, without a previous inquiry and examination into the proofs that were to support it. And therefore he moved, that this affair might be referred to the consideration of a select Committee.' Sir William Wyndham urged, 'That, by proceeding by way of impeachment upon reports laid before them from above, the Commons would make a dangerous precedent, and seem to give up the most valuable of their privileges, the inquest after State-criminals.' These reasons had great weight with several Members, particularly on Sir Wilfred Lawson and Sir Thomas Pengelly, who supported Mr. Pulteney's motion. But Mr. Tonge and Sir Clement Wearg having answered those objections, the question was put, and it was carried by a majority of 273 against 164, That Thomas Earl of Macclesfield should be impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and Sir George Oxenden was ordered to go up to the Lords, and at their bar to impeach him in the name of the House of Commons. This being done, a Committee was appointed to draw up the articles. Then a bill was ordered to be brought in, to indemnify the Masters in Chancery from the penalties of the act of the 5th and 6th years of King Edward the Sixth (against buying and selling of offices) upon their discovering what consideration, price, or gratuity they paid, or agreed to pay, for the purchase of, or for their admission to their respective offices; which bill passed both Houses, and had the Royal Assent.

The Earl of Macclesfield's trial lasted twenty days. The eight first articles against him were, for taking large sums of the Masters in Chan- cery for admission or purchase. By the other articles, he was accused of admitting persons of small substance, and of suffering an unjust and fraudulent practice to continue, of paying for their places out of the Suits money, by means of which great deficiencies happened: Of neglecting to secure Fleetwood Dormer's person or effects, who, by disposing Suits money to his own use, had caused a deficiency of 24,000 l.: Of neglecting to prevent the like abuses for the future, by not taking security upon admission: Of borrowing money of the Masters out of the Suits cash, and making use of the same so long as he pleased. Upon these and other accounts, sentence was passed upon him by the mouth of Sir Peter King, Speaker of the House of Lords: That he should be fined 30,000 l. and imprisoned in the Tower till the sum was paid.

After the trial, it was moved that the Earl should be for ever rendered incapable of any office in the State; but the motion was rejected, as well as another for his not sitting in Parliament, or coming within the verge of the Court. The Earl was carried to the Tower, and confined in the same apartment as was formerly the Earl of Oxford's; and, three days after, the King in Council ordered his name to be struck out of the list of Privy-Counsellors. The Earl paid his fine about six weeks after, and was discharged from his confinement. Sir Peter King, being created Baron of Oakham in Surry, succeeded him in the Chancellorship (1).

The debts of the civil list being increased to above 500,000 l. the King, on the 8th of the civil April, sent by Mr. Walpole the following message to the Commons:

'The necessities of his Majesty's Government having rendered it impracticable for his Majesty to make any considerable retrenchments in the expences of his civil list; and having engaged his Majesty in some extraordinary expences, which he is persuaded his loyal Commons will believe have been employed, not only for the honour and dignity of the Crown, but for the interest and prosperity of his People, his Majesty hopes, from the known zeal and affection of his Parliament to his Person and Government, that he may be enabled to make use of the funds, lately settled for the payment of the civil list annuities, and for replacing the same to his Majesty in the most advantageous manner, and, upon the credit thereof, to raise a sum of money sufficient to redeem those annuities, and to discharge the present debts contracted in his civil Government.' Mr. Pulteney, Cofferer of the Household, who about this time began to be dissatisfied, moved for an address, that an account should be laid before the House of all monies paid for secret service, pensions, bounties, &c. from the 25th of March, 1721, to the 25th of March, 1725. This address being voted, a motion was made for

(1) The great Lawyer was destined by his father to follow his own trade, that of a Silter, or Greeter, in the City of Exeter; and did actually serve several years, as such in the nature of an apprentice to it, but his genius to literature, breaking through the disadvantages of education, discovered itself in two or three very learned treatises of the Ecclesiastical Constitution, of the Creed, and Primitive Constitutions, which he wrote even while he was breeding up in the trade of his father; who, being related to the famous Philosopher Mr. Locke, did, doubtless, by the advice of that great man, enter his son in the Temple, where he soon distinguished himself in the study and practice of the law. His father was a native of Glastonbury in Somersetshire; and when the charter of that ancient Corporation was revived, in the year 1705, Sir Peter King was appointed their Recorder by it, and continued so to his death.

1725. for the House to go into a Grand Committee, to consider of the King's message; but Mr. Pulteney represented, 'That, the House having ordered an address for several papers relating to the Civil Lists and other expences, they ought, in his opinion, to put off the consideration of the message, till those papers were laid before the House; it being natural to enquire into the causes of a disease before one applies remedies to it.' This being opposed by Mr. Walpole, Mr. Pulteney replied, 'That he wondered how so great a debt could be contracted in three years time, but was not surprized some persons were so eager to have the deficiencies of the Civil List made good, since they and their friends had so great a share in it; and desired to know, whether this was all that was due, or whether they were to expect another reckoning?' To this it was answered in general, 'That there was indeed a heavy debt on the Civil List, and a great many pensions; but that most of these had been granted in King William's and Queen Anne's Reigns, some by King Charles the Second, and very few by his present Majesty. That, since the Civil List was first settled for his Majesty, an expence of above 90,000*l.* per ann. had happened, which could not then be foreseen, and therefore was left unprovided for. That, upon examination of the account of the Civil List debts, it would appear, that most of those expences were either for the necessary support of the dignity of the Crown and Government, or for the publick good. That there was indeed a pension of 5,000*l.* of another nature, upon the account of the Cofferer's place, but which could not well be avoided; for both Lord Godolphin, who was in that office, and his father, had so well deserved of the Government, that they could not handsomely remove him without a gratuity, and therefore they gave him a pension of 5,000*l.* to make room for the worthy Gentleman, who now enjoys the post.' Then the Commons, in a Grand Committee, took the message into consideration, and a motion was made, 'That, for the redeeming the annuities of 25,000*l.* per ann. charged on the Civil List revenues by an act of Parliament of the 7th year of his Majesty, and for discharging the debts and arrears due from his Majesty to his servants, tradesmen, and others, his Majesty be enabled to raise any sum not exceeding one million, by Exchequer bills, loans, or otherwise, on the credit of the deductions of six-pence per pound, directed by that act, and of the Civil List revenues, at an interest not exceeding 3*l.* per cent. till repayment of the principal.' This motion, after some farther debate, being carried by a majority of 239 against 119, a bill passed for that purpose, and received the Royal Assent the 20th of April.

The same day a petition was presented to the House of Commons in behalf of Henry St. John, late Viscount Bolingbroke, attainted for High-Treason. The purport of the petition was to suspend the execution of the law, with respect to his forfeitures, as a pardon suspended it, with respect to his life. After the petition had been offered to the House by the Lord Finch, Mr. Walpole * acquainted the House, that he had received his Majesty's commands to inform them, that the Petitioner had seven years since made his humble application and submission to the King, with assurances of duty, allegiance, and fidelity, which his Majesty so far accepted, as to give him encouragement to hope for some future marks of his grace and goodness; and that his Majesty is satisfied, that the Petitioner's behaviour has been such, as convinces him, that he is an object of his mercy; and his Majesty consents, that this petition be presented to this House. Then the petition was read, setting forth, that the Petitioner is truly concerned for his offence, in not having surrendered himself, pursuant to the act (whereby the Petitioner was attainted of High-Treason, and forfeited all his real and personal estate) and, by reason thereof, hath suffered very great losses. That upon the Petitioner's marriage in 1700, Sir Walter St. John, Bart. and the Right Honourable the Lord Viscount St. John (the Petitioner's grandfather and father) together with the Petitioner, made a settlement of the family-estates in the Counties of Wills, Surry and Middlesex, all which premises (except a very small part thereof) are now in the possession of the Petitioner's father, and the Petitioner cannot become intitled thereto for his life, until after his father's decease: That the Petitioner hath, in a most humble and dutiful manner, made his submission to his Majesty, and given him the strongest assurances of his inviolable fidelity, and of his zeal for his service, and for the support of the present happy establishment, which his Majesty hath been most graciously pleased to accept; and praying, that leave may be given to bring in a bill for enabling the Petitioner, and the Heiress-male of his body (notwithstanding his Attainder) to take and enjoy the settled estate, according to the limitations of the settlement, or other assurances therein mentioned, and for enabling the Petitioner to hold and enjoy any personal estate or effects, whereof he now is, or hereafter shall be possessed, and to invest the same in the purchase of any real or personal estate within this Kingdom. After the reading of this petition, the Lord Finch moved for a bill, which was seconded by Mr. Walpole, who, having repeated part of what he had before laid before the House by the King's command, added, 'He was fully satisfied, that the Petitioner had sufficiently atoned for his past offences, and therefore deserved the favour of that House, so far as to enable him to enjoy the family-inheritance, that was settled upon him; which, according to the opinion of the best Lawyers, he could not do by virtue of his Majesty's pardon, without an act of Parliament.' This was confirmed by the Attorney and Solicitor-General. But after a short dispute among the Lawyers about the validity of such a pardon in the present case, Mr. Misbuen, Comptroller of the Household, strenuously opposed the Lord Finch's motion, and said, 'That, as he had the honour to be one of the King's immediate servants, it might perhaps by some be thought unbecoming his station to appear against a petition, to the presenting of which his Majesty, in his Royal clemency and goodness, hath graciously been pleased to give his consent. But that, being at liberty to follow the dictates of his conscience in this matter, he would freely declare his opinion, that the public crimes, for which this Petitioner stood attainted, were so heinous, so flagrant, and of so deep a dye, as not to admit of any expiation or atonement; and whatever he might have done to deserve his Majesty's private grace and pardon, yet he thought him altogether unworthy of any national

1725.

1725. favour.^b Then he went through the late Lord Bolingbroke's conduct, while he had a share in the Administration of affairs in Queen Anne's Reign; * how he was the principal adviser of, and actor in the wicked measures, that were then pursued; his clandestine Negotiation of peace, without the privity of the Queen's Allies, contrary to the express tenor of the Grand Alliance; his intolerant behaviour towards all the Confederates in general, and the Dutch in particular; his sacrificing the interest of the whole Confederacy, and the honour of his own Country, particularly in the base abandoning of the poor and brave Catalans; a transaction, with which he had an opportunity to be intimately acquainted, as having had the honour, at that juncture, to serve the Nation as the Queen's Minister in Portugal: And, to sum up all his crimes in one, his traitorous design of defeating the Protestant Succession, the foundation of both our present and future happiness; and of advancing a Popish Pretender to the Throne, which would have involved his native Country in endless misery.^c Though this speech made a great impression on the assembly, and several other eminent Members spoke to the same purpose, particularly Mr. Onslow and Lord William Paulet, the motion for a bill was carried by 231 against 113. When the bill was brought in, it was moved, that a clause should be inserted, to disable him to sit in Parliament, or enjoy any place under the King; but, upon Mr. Walpole's opposing it, the clause was rejected, and the bill passed both Houses, and received the Royal assent.

Bill passed in his favour,
May 31.

Act passed this Session.

The most material acts passed this Session, besides what have been mentioned, were these, An act for disarming the Highlands, and securing the peace of Scotland. A protest was entered against this act in the House of Lords, alleging, That the disorders in the preamble were not proved: Too great power was given to the Lord-Lieutenants and Justices of the peace, and that the behaviour of the Highlanders had of late been inoffensive.

Another act passed for regulating elections within the City of London, and for preserving the peace, good order, and government of the City. This law, which is now the rule for all elections in the City, raised so great a ferment in London, that a printed summons was dispersed inviting the Citizens to assemble at Guild-Hall to consider of it. This attempt being repented by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the gates of Guild-Hall were ordered to be shut, and the Government was acquainted with what had passed. Upon this the guards were doubled at St. James's, Leicester-House, and Somerset-House, and such precautions taken as kept all things quiet. This spirit was supposed to have been raised by that majority of the Common-Council, who had voted thanks to Mr. Francis Child and Mr. John Barnard, for strenuously opposing the bill. By a clause of this act, the right of election of Aldermen and Common-council-men belongs to Free-men, being householders, paying scot and lot to the amount of 30 s. provided they have been in houses of 10 l. a year, twelve Kalendar months.

This, and some other particulars, occasioned a petition from the Freemen of London against the bill, whilst it was depending.

A motion was made in the House of Commons for inserting a clause in a bill about the 50 new Churches, to disable bodies corporate to purchase advowsons or other ecclesiastical preferments. This motion made by Mr. Arthur Onslow was chiefly intended to restrain the Universities from purchasing advowsons, but it was rejected.

Thomas Guy, formerly a Bookfeller in London, and afterwards Member of Parliament for Tamworth, dying in the 80th year of his age, left a benefaction of 200,000 l. to an Hospital for incurables erected by himself, and near finished in his life-time, besides many other charities. In order to the better management and disposition of his charities, an act passed the 24th of March, for incorporating the Executors of the last will and testament of Mr. Thomas Guy.

Two acts likewise passed to dissolve the marriages of William Tonge with Mary Heatbottle, and of Francis Annesly with Elizabeth Sutton.

The Princess of Wales was delivered on the 5th of December of a Princess at Leicester-House, the Prince who was afterwards christened by the name of Louisa. and is now married to the Prince of Denmark.

The King put an end to the Session with the following speech:

The end of the third Session,
May.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I AM come to put an end to this Session of Parliament, which, though it has been extended to an unexpected length, has been so well employed for the service and interest of the Public, that I assure myself it will be to the general satisfaction of the Nation.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

" The prudent use you have made of the present flourishing state of credit, by a certain reduction of more than three millions seven hundred thousand pounds to an interest of four per cent. and by a wise provision for the redemption thereof by Parliament, without further notice, on payment of such sums, as the circumstances of the Government will from time to time admit, has secured a considerable addition to the sinking fund, not subject to hazard of future events (1).

" You have not only raised the Supply for the service of the current year at the lowest rate of interest, that has been ever known, but, without laying any new burden on my people, you have enabled me to discharge the debts of my Civil Government; debts contracted by necessary and unavoidable expences, and in support of such measures of Government, as have greatly increased the happiness of my people. You have thereby shewn your just regard to my honour, and the dignity of the Crown.

My

(1) An act passed this Session, for continuing to the Bank the several annuities of 80,751 l. 7 s. 10 d. 1, and of 100,000 l. until Midsummer 1727, and from thence for reducing the same to 71,001 l. 2 s. 3 d. 1, and 80,000 l. red-embled by Parliament (that is, from 5 l. per cent. to 4 l. per cent.)

(1) Lords

1725.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"As all our public blessings are the happy effects of the general tranquillity we now enjoy, I cannot but express my satisfaction in the provision you have made for suppressing and preventing disturbances and commotions in those parts, where the peace of the Kingdom might have been most endangered.

"Nothing more remains necessary, than to tell you, that I intirely depend on the faithful discharge of your duties in your several stations, and on your constant care, in your respective Countries, to preserve the peace and quiet of the Public. But I know not how to part with you without first returning you my very hearty thanks for the many repeated instances you have, in this Session, given me of your duty and affection. All such returns may be expected from me, as can be made by the most indulgent Prince to an affectionate and loyal people."

*Knights of the Bath
revived.*

Presently after the end of the Session, the King revived the order of Knights of the Bath, of whom Prince William was the first, and the Duke of Montague was appointed Grand-Master. Among the Knights were Sir Robert Walpole, and his son the Lord Walpole. The whole number was 38, including the Sovereign. Several promotions were likewise made. Mr. Metbuen was appointed Treasurer of the Household, and the Earl of Lincoln, Cofferer in the room of Mr. Pulteney. William Bateman was created Baron of Calmore, in Ireland, and Viscount Bateman. Soon after Sir Robert Walpole was made Knight of the Garter (1).

The King having settled his affairs in England, and appointed the Lords Justices, set out for Hanover the 3d of June, and arrived the 14th at Herenhausen.

Riots in Scotland.

The Scots, ever since the Union, had very unwillingly paid any of the taxes that had been laid on the united Kingdom; and had behaved on all such occasions, as if they thought themselves injured, when they were obliged to contribute any thing towards the public expence. The enemies to the Government failed not to feed this ill humour, and, under colour of zeal for the old Constitution, to set the people against that, which was now established. The malt-tax was most clamoured against; and it was foreseen, that it would not be collected without peril to the Officers. At Edinburgh indeed, the Excisemen were suffered to take an account of the Maltster's stock in hand; but those at Glasgow were obliged to apply to the Commissioners of the Excise at Edinburgh for protection and assistance, their lives being threatned, if they offered to visit the malt-houses. The Commissioners applied to Major-General Wade, Commander in Chief of the forces in Scotland, who, on the 23d of June, sent Captain Busbel, with two companies of soldiers to Glasgow, where they arrived the next day in the evening. At their entrance into the town, they found a great mob of men, women, and boys, who gave them abusive language, and threw stones at them, as they marched along the streets, crying aloud, No malt-tax. The Officer desired them to forbear, for he meant them no harm. The Provost gave him billets for quartering his men, but told him, he could not put him in possession of the guard-room, because the rabble had locked it up, and carried away the key, as soon as they heard the soldiers were coming. The Officer, unwilling to exasperate them, by forcing open the door, ordered the guard to be kept in a public house, which they hired for that purpose. About eleven o'clock that night, several thousand of the mob got together about the house of Mr. Daniel Campbell, Representative in Parliament for Glasgow, threatning to plunder it. Upon which Captain Busbel sent an Officer to the Provost, letting him know the mischief they designed to commit; and that he was ready with his men to assist him in preventing it. But his answer was, He thought the number of his soldiers too few, and therefore he would make no use of them. Thus the rabble, finding no opposition, nor even the appearance of a Magistrate to restrain their fury, with hatchets and other instruments forced into the house, and turned out two or three of Mr. Campbell's servants (he, with his wife, having the day before retired to his Country-house) and fell to plundering every thing they could carry away, and destroying what was not portable. This riot continued till nine the next morning, when several of the mob were lying drunk in the house, with the wine and liquors they found in the cellars, but the Magistrates did not get any of them secured. The Officers of the Excise hid themselves as well as they could: Some of them fell into the hands of the mob, and with great difficulty escaped with their lives, after having been unmercifully beaten. The rabble were then pretty quiet, till about four in the afternoon, when they began to meet again; women, or men in women's cloaths, beating drums about the streets to call them together. Captain Busbel, not knowing what their designs might be, ordered the soldiers to be near the guard-room, which the Provost had now caused to be opened: But the mob did not long keep their secret; for they advanced towards the guard, crying, Drive the dogs out of town: We will cut them to pieces. The Officer said again, We mean you no hurt, but, if you continue to provoke the soldiers, we shall not be able to restrain them from firing at you. The rabble answered, You dare not fire with ball; and continued throwing stones in such quantities, and so large, that they

1725.

(1) Lords of the Treasury.

Sir Robert Walpole,
Sir Charles Turner,
Sir William Yonge,
George Doddington, Esq;
Sir William Sirickland.

Lords of the Admiralty.

James Earl of Berkeley,
Sir John Jennings,
John Cockburn, Esq;
William Chetwynd, Esq;
Sir John Norris,
Sir Charles Wager,
Sir George Oxenden.

1725.

they broke some of the locks of the soldiers' pieces, and their bayonets, and wounded several men. Upon which they were ordered to fire over the heads of the mob to frighten them; but they advanced still upon the soldiers, and, throwing stones in greater quantities, the soldiers at last fired on them, and killed or wounded three or four, which made them retire to some distance. In this short interval, the Provost sent to Captain Busbel, desiring him to save himself and his men, by retreating out of the town; for the Rioters were collecting all the arms they could; and, if he did not march away, there would be more blood shed. The Captain, taking his advice, marched immediately for Dunbarton, being followed by great numbers of the mob, and that so closely, that he was forced to fire now and then to secure his retreat out of the town. Three or four hundred of them followed him six miles, but they durst not come up with him. He sent an Officer from Dunbarton to Edinburgh, to give General Wade an account of what had happened; and, on the 8th of July, the General, accompanied by Duncan Forbes, Lord Advocate, set out from Edinburgh, and at noon the next day joined a body of forces, that had been ordered to draw together on a moor within two miles of Glasgow, consisting of four troops of horse, and a detachment of Colonel Campbell's Dragoons; eight companies of the Earl of Deloraine's regiment of foot; the Earl of Stair's regiment, and one of the new-raised Highland companies. The General wrote a letter to the Magistrates to let them know he was coming; and the next day, about two o'clock in the afternoon, entered the town; the troops advancing with silence and good order; and they were distributed into quarters without any disturbance. The two following days the Excise-men were set to take an account of the Maltsters stock in hand, and had quiet admittance. The Rioters having endeavoured by circular letters to every town of any note to excite tumults, the mob rose July the 9th, at Elgin, attacked in the night-time three soldiers, who were posted sentinels at a shop, wherein was lodged a quantity of brandy, that had been seized by the Custom-House Officers, and obliged the soldiers to fire in their own defence, by which one of the rabble was killed. The soldiers being overpowered were put in prison by the Magistrates; and the mob immediately carried off the brandy. The Maltsters at Glasgow complied with the terms of the act of Parliament. Many of the Rioters were seized; most of them mean persons. Near an hundred witnesses were examined, but little or nothing was found against any of them: It was all laid on those, who fled, and on strangers. The General and the Lord Advocate, having staid a week at Glasgow, returned to Edinburgh. The Lord Advocate committed seventeen men and boys, and four women, to prison. The Provost, Bailiffs, Dean of Guild, and Deacon Conveener, were also apprehended, and the next day, under a strong guard of dragoons, sent to Edinburgh. When they came near the City, there was a vast concourse of people at such an unusual and unexpected sight, besides a great many Merchants and men of note on horseback, who went out to meet them, and accompanied them to the prison-doors, the Glasgow Magistrates being in coaches. They did not continue long under confinement; for, this affair being brought before the Lords Justiciary, they were unanimous in their opinions, that they were innocent; upon which they were immediately set at liberty. It was reported, that the whole Royal Boroughs of Scotland had come to a resolution to stand out against payment of the malt-tax. But they were so far from doing it, that, the Convention being assembled at Edinburgh on the 7th of July, they resolved to write a circular letter to each of the Royal Boroughs, to be sent by express, testifying the falshood of that report, and their abhorrence of the thought of resisting or not paying due obedience to the law, which has enacted the levying of that tax, exhorting the Magistrates and Governors of each Royal Borough, to concur vigorously with the Officers of the Revenue, in the execution of the laws relating thereto, and in suppressing of all mobs, riots, and tumultuous assemblies; and requiring them every where to use all diligence for the discovery of the Authors of such malicious reports and seditious practices; and to acquaint the annual Committee of the Convention therewith, that the Offenders might be prosecuted, and brought to deserved punishment at the suit of the Convention, as disturbers of the public peace. The Rioters at Glasgow were brought to their trial before the Court of Justiciary, of which the Earl of Illy was chief; and, Walter Buchanan, William Hamilton, George Macfarlane, Patrick Mitchell, and Janet Balleny being found guilty of the riot, the four men were, the next day, sentenced to be transported, after they had been scourged at Glasgow by the common hangman; and Balleny, the woman, was sentenced to stand twice in the pillory there; so that no capital punishment was inflicted on any of these Offenders.

General Wade did likewise another very important service to the Public, by disarming, pursuant to the act of Parliament, the Highlanders, Mackenzies, Macdonals, Grants of Glenmoriston, Macleods, Clisbolms, Stewarts, Camerons, Macphersons, Mackintoshes, Macgregors, Gordons, Farquharsons, Macfarlans, and other Clans, their Tribes and Followers; as also the Inhabitants of the Isles of Sky and Mull; the arms amounting to between two and three thousand. The Companies of the soldiers left in the Highlands were so posted, that they possessed all the considerable passes, and thereby prevented the stealing of cattle.

As to foreign affairs, there were great alterations abroad this year. Mention has been made of the marriage of Lewis, Prince of Asturias with the Duke of Orleans's second daughter, and of King Philip's resignation of the Crown to his Son. It has been also related, how Lewis XV of France was married to the Infanta of Spain; and Mademoiselle de Beaujolois, another of the Duke of Orleans's daughters, to Don Carlos, Infant of Spain by King Philip's second wife. The first marriage was consummated, but soon after dissolved by the death of Lewis King of Spain. Upon his decease, his Father, King Philip, resumed the Crown. In the beginning of March 1724-5, the French King, who could never gain upon himself to be tolerably civil to the young Infanta, declared his resolution to send her back into Spain.

1725.

Foreign
affair.

1725. Spain (1). This was so highly resented by the Court of Spain, particularly by the Queen, that it was resolved to send back to France Mademoiselle de Beaujolois, whose marriage with Don Carlos was yet unconsummated; which was accordingly done, and at the same time the Infanta was sent to Madrid, the Spanish Ministers, the Marquis de Monteleone, and Patrick Lawless (the Pretender's agent in England in Queen Anne's Reign) returning with her.

The sole mediation at Cambray refused by King George.

The Queen of Spain's resentment did not end here. She resolved the French should meddle no more in the Spanish affairs, and offered to adjust her differences with the Emperor (for which the Congress of Cambray had been appointed) under the sole mediation of Great-Britain. This offer was refused by King George upon many accounts. The Emperor was so far from seeking the sole mediation of Great-Britain, with the same warmth as Spain, that he shewed such a coolness on the occasion, as not only indicated a jealousy, but foretold an unsuccessful issue in case it was assumed. Besides, the accepting it, in order to gratify the passions of the Queen of Spain, must have disobliterated France, with whom, ever since the death of Lewis XIV. the British Court had contracted the strictest friendship. The same motive still subsisted, that had induced King George to enter into a reciprocal confidence with that Crown, the title of the House of Orleans to that Monarchy in virtue of the treaty of Utrecht. The young King was as yet a minor, and unmarried, and the Duke of Bourbon Prime Minister of France, who solely guided the Helm, was next in reversion to the Crown, after the young Duke of Orleans, then unmarried, and of a weak constitution. The coolness therefore of the Emperor, the engagement with France, and the prospect of disuniting for ever the House of Bourbon, by means of the branches of Orleans and Condé, induced King George not to accept the sole mediation at the hazard of losing France, without any appearance of gaining, or, if gained, of keeping Spain one moment fixed to his interest or alliance. Upon the King's refusal of the sole mediation, the Emperor and Queen of Spain resolved to adjust their differences by a private Negotiation. This was managed on the part of Spain by the Baron de Ripperda, a Dutchman, who had abandoned the Protestant Religion, and entered into the Spanish service. The first treaty of Vienna was soon concluded, and signed the 30th of April, and the next day a treaty of commerce was also signed. It was urged, that the Mediators having for several years in vain endeavoured to reconcile the Emperor and King of Spain, they resolved to do it by themselves without the intervention of any other power, especially since France had affronted Spain, by sending back the Infanta, and England had refused to continue her mediation at Cambray without France (2).

By these treaties the Emperor acknowledges Philip V. as lawful King of Spain and the Indies, and promises not to molest him in the possession of the Dominions secured to him by the treaty of Utrecht, nor to appropriate to himself any right to them. King Philip on his part renounces all his pretensions to the Dominions in Italy and the Netherlands, adjudged to the Emperor by the treaty of London, in July 1722. The Emperor grants (without the consent of the Empire) the investiture of the Dukedoms of Tuscany, Parma, and Placentia, to the Queen of Spain's eldest son, in case these Dukedoms should be vacant for want of heirs, the determination of King George and the Regent of France in the treaty of London, that they are masculine fiefs of the Empire, being taken for granted. Spain agreed to guaranty the succession of the Austrian Dominions according to the Pragmatic Sanction (3). By the treaty of commerce, the Emperor's subjects were to have commercial advantages in Spain, to which no others were entitled: Spain was to guaranty the Ostend trade to the East-Indies, and pay an annual subsidy of about four millions of pieces of eight.

The treaty of peace was not liable to any great objection, though the article, by which Spain agreed to guaranty the Succession of the Austrian Dominions, according to the Pragmatic Sanction, gave some room to suspect, it was

(1) The French King being taken very ill, and in great danger of his life, by a fever, in February 1725, N. S. it alarmed the whole French Nation, and made them cry aloud for his marrying immediately after his recovery, to prevent the fatal consequences of a civil war, in case of his dying without issue. It was thereupon suddenly resolved in Council to send back the Infanta. Upon this unexpected turn the Court of Spain proposed the sole mediation to Mr. Stanhope, the English Minister at Madrid, which, as will be seen, was refused.

(2) It appears by stating and comparing the dates of these transactions, that the sending back the Infanta, or the refusal of the sole mediation, could have no share in the motives for Negotiating. The Courier, dispatched from France to signify the resolution of sending back the Infanta, March 13, 1725, did not arrive at Madrid till the 19th, and King George's answer, declining the sole mediation, came to Spain the 24th of April, 1724, N. S. Ripperda's full powers were signed in November, 1724; and the Court of Madrid received advice from him in March, 1725, that the principal articles were then agreed at Vienna. In consequence of this agreement, the treaty of peace and friendship between the Emperor and Spain was signed at Vienna the last of April, and that of commerce the first of May, 1725. Now could the resolution of sending back the Infanta, which was not thought of in France till March, 1725, nor known at Madrid till the 19th of that month, be the occasion of negotiating at Vienna treaties of such importance and long discussion, the principal articles of which were the very same month of March known at Madrid to have been agreed upon at Vienna? Or could the King's refusal of the sole mediation, which was not known at Madrid till the 24th of April, 1725, N. S. have possibly occasioned the signing of treaties at Vienna the last of April, and first of May, 1725? To this it may be added, that the acceptance of the sole mediation to accommodate the difference between the two Courts, who were already agreed in every respect, would have been as ridiculous and absurd, as it is to imagine, that the declining of it could possibly be a motive for signing of treaties so injurious to the States-General, as well as to Great-Britain, when neither of them had given the least reason for such treatment.

(3) By the Pragmatic Sanction the order of Succession to the Dominions of the House of Austria is settled on the Emperor's heirs and successors of either sex, and declared to be a perpetual, indivisible, and inseparable fiefdom to the primogeniture. This Pragmatic Sanction or perpetual law was published at Vienna, December 5, 1724.

1725. was to operate in favour of Spain. And therefore it did not alarm the other States, but it was not the same with the treaty of commerce, which was so much to the disadvantage of England and Holland, particularly with regard to the privileges granted to the Ostend India Company.

Private treaty between Spain and the Emperor.

But, besides these treaties, King George had reason to suspect that another, much more repugnant to the interest of Great-Britain, was also concluded. This suspicion was afterwards confirmed, not only by some indiscreet expressions of Ripperda, but by the most positive intelligence from different persons, all capable of knowing the truth, and all concurring in the most material facts. By this third treaty, which was carefully concealed, it was declared, that the Spanish Minister having represented that the King of Great-Britain had promised the restitution of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, and that the King of Spain did insist upon it, the Emperor would concur in employing force for restoring Gibraltar to Spain, if it could not be amicably effected. King George had moreover cause to believe, that several other points of still more dangerous consequence were settled between the Emperor and Spain, particularly that the two Archduchesses should be married to the Infants of Spain, and that means should be taken for placing the Pretender on the Throne. This last article the King was informed of by a person of great rank, veracity, and credit, though the Emperor himself ordered his Ministers to give, in his name, the most solemn denial of the fact. It must indeed be owned, that the Duke of Bavaria received likewise assurances equally strong from the Ministers of Vienna, that nothing had been transacted between the Emperor and the Court of Madrid, relating to the marriage of an Archduchess to a Prince of Spain, though it was afterwards owned by the Imperial Ministers, and the execution of it openly demanded by those of Spain. And it may here be observed, that, if those marriages had taken place, and the French King and the Prince of Asturias at that time, both Princes of weak constitutions, had died without issue, it would have laid the foundation for the most formidable power ever known in Europe, by uniting together in one Sovereign all the Dominions belonging to the Houses of Austria and Bourbon.

In consequence of these treaties between the Emperor and Spain, great sums, amounting to about a million sterling, were remitted in six months, from the signing of them by Spain, to Vienna. The Court of Vienna gave immediately the necessary orders for an augmentation of their own forces, with thirty thousand men, and took immediately into their pay thirty thousand more. Negotiations were set on foot for engaging other powers in support of their cause; and particularly Russia, by her Accession, was to furnish thirty thousand men.

Treaty of Hanover.

King George, justly alarmed at these proceedings, resolved to take such precautions, as were likely to defeat the pernicious designs of the new Allies. The Court of Vienna had behaved with uncommon coolness towards the Court of London, ever since the Accession of King George. The Emperor, whether out of some old personal enmity to the King, or from his jealousy of seeing a Protestant Prince of Germany become Sovereign of a powerful Nation, behaved with great indifference, and in a very contradictory manner, towards him on many occasions. He refused to guaranty the Succession in his Line, and denied him the investiture of the Duchies of Bremen and Verden, which he had a right to demand and expect, as a Purchaser and Member of the Empire. To this may be added, the late erection and support of the Ostend India Company in violation of treaties, which greatly affected the British commerce to the East-Indies, and against which the whole Nation made loud complaints. Led by these motives, the treaty of Hanover was projected by King George, to check the ambitious views of the Emperor and King (or rather Queen) of Spain, who, from being irreconcilable enemies, ran into each other's arms voluntarily, tying themselves down by treaty to the closest and strictest friendship. The King succeeded in his design, and a treaty was concluded in September between England, France, and Prussia, in the usual forms of a defensive Alliance, with a mutual guaranty to protect the respective Countries rights and privileges, those of commerce in particular, which the parties enjoyed or ought to enjoy, as well out of as in Europe; which had a view to the Ostend Company. There was nothing in the treaty that reflected directly or implicitly upon the conduct of any other power: Nor was there any expression to be found in it, nor inference from it, or from the consequent measures, to shew it was projected to increase the dominions and claims of the Electorate of Hanover, or to involve Great-Britain in the quarrels of that Electorate, or could give offence to any but those who intended to offend. The treaty was to last fifteen years. There were three separate articles: The first related to the affair of Thorn, and was an engagement to procure satisfaction for what had been done contrary to the treaty of Oliva. By the second, the two Kings Electors engaged, in case the Emperor declared war against France, not only not to furnish their quota of troops, but to act in concert with his most Christian Majesty. By the third, France consented, that, if the Empire declared against her, the two Electors Kings might furnish their quota, provided they furnished no more, and fulfilled their engagements to his most Christian Majesty.

Thus was concluded the treaty of Hanover, which has been painted in more invidious colours, than any transaction during the Reign of King George.

In the mean time the Duke of Bourbon was removed from the Administration of affairs in France; having received, as he was preparing to follow the King to Rambouillet, an order to go to Chantilly, his country seat, and there to stay till further orders. Presently after, the Count de St. Florentine, Secretary of State, went to acquaint him, that the King had resolved to take the Government into his own hands; which he did on the 10th of June, in a Council of State at Versailles, to whom he made a speech suitable to the occasion. This revolution in the Ministry of France was generally supposed to be owing to the intrigues of the Court of Spain, who could never forgive the sending back the Infanta, which they imputed to the influence of the Duke of Bourbon on the counsels of France. The Bishop of Frejus, the young King's Preceptor, and afterwards Cardinal, had a great hand in this measure, in order to assume the post

1725. of Prime Minister himself; but he assured Mr. Horace Walpole, the British Ambassador at the Court of France, 'That the alterations in the Court of France, instead of making any in the measures taken with the King of Great-Britain, pursuant to the treaty of Hanover, would rather tend to the execution of that treaty.'

The King of France soon after married the Princess Mary, Daughter of Stanislaus, once King of Poland; the contract for the marriage being signed by proxy in July.

The Duke of Wharton, who had acted with great extravagance and licentiousness of all kinds in England, and ruined his estate there, having left his Country, went to Vienna, whence he proceeded to Rome, where he was introduced by the Spanish Minister to the Pretender, in whose house he was concealed for six days, and then posted away to Madrid, where the Baron de Ripperda, his great and intimate friend, was now in high credit and favour. Thither he came with credentials from the Pretender; and, as a public mark of confidence in him, adorned with a Garter, and the title of Northumberland. King George being informed of these proceedings, sent a letter under the Privy Seal to the Duke, commanding him, upon his allegiance, to return forthwith to Great-Britain. This letter being carried to Madrid by Mr. Crew, the Messenger, it was delivered, on the 31st of June, to the Duke in a coach, as he was passing through one of the streets of the town; but, as soon as he was told the contents of it, he threw the letter out of the coach, and made great clamour at the executing a summons upon him by a British Officer of Justice, even in the sight of his Catholic Majesty's Palace. He likewise gave out, that he would present a memorial upon it to the King of Spain, and demand justice against the King's Messenger, who brought him the letter. Colonel Stanhope, the British Minister at Madrid, hearing of this, sent his Secretary to the Marquis de Paz, to acquaint him with it. The Marquis promised to represent the matter to his Catholic Majesty, and desired the Secretary to return to him the next morning, when he assured him, that the King of Spain knew nothing of the memorial, but had been informed of what had passed with relation to the delivery of the letter of Privy Seal, and would not in any manner interpose his authority in opposition to that proceeding. The Duke, about that time, openly professed himself a Roman Catholic, by making his public abjuration of the Protestant Religion; and, on the 23d of July, N. S. married one of the Ladies of the Queen of Spain's Bed-Chamber, by whose interest he obtained the pay of a Lieutenant-Colonel.

The King's stormy passage to England.

The King, having settled affairs abroad, set out from Hanover on the 18th of December, O. S. and came to Helvet-Sluyce, where Sir John Norris waited with the convoy and yachts, and where he embarked on board the Carolina yacht on New Year's-Day, about one in the afternoon. Towards seven that evening there arose a most violent storm with rain and hail, which separated the ships one from another, except one man of war, commanded by Captain Dancey, who kept company with the King's yacht, on board which was Sir John Norris. The tempest continued so high, and the sea so boisterous, for thirty-six hours, that the whole fleet was in the utmost danger. On the 3d of January, the yachts and men of war were near Dover; and one of the yachts, with some of the King's attendants, entered the river; but it was thought more advisable, that the King should land at Rye, where he arrived about noon. The King went immediately into a small boat, the tide being down; and, as soon as he could reach a horse, which Captain Pigram had brought him, he mounted it, rode by the wall, and over the new bridge. The Mayor, Mr. Lambe, and the Jurats, in their formalities, with the neighbouring Gentlemen, attended the King, who alighted at the Mayor's house, being saluted all the way with loud huzzas and acclamations. He was extremely fatigued, having eat nothing since the day he embarked. The Lord Townshend and his Lady, who were in the Mary yacht, kept company with the King, and with some difficulty landed at the same place. On the 4th of January, a messenger, dispatched by the Lord Townshend, arrived at the Cock-pit, with the agreeable news of the King's safe landing at Rye, from whence he intended to have set out for London on the 6th; but, the roads in that part of the Country being unsafe from the fall of snow, it was found necessary to give orders for the clearing of the ways; which done, the King began his journey the next day, and having crossed the water from Rye, at a place called the Point, lay that night at Hytbe, the next at Sittingbourne; and on the 9th arrived in good health at St. James's.

On the 20th of January the Parliament met, The fourth Session of the second Parliament. when the King made the following speech to both Houses by the mouth of the Lord-Chancellor:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Have had such frequent experience of the wisdom and zeal of this Parliament on many important occasions, that it is with pleasure I now meet you again; and I make no doubt, but that your endeavours for the good and service of your Country will be as successful, as they have hitherto been.

"The distressed condition of some of our Protestant Brethren abroad, and the Negotiations and engagements entered into by some foreign powers, which seem to have laid the foundation of new troubles and disturbances in Europe, and to threaten my subjects with the loss of several of the most advantageous branches of their trade, obliged me, without any loss of time, to concert with other powers such measures, as might give a check to the ambitious views of those, who are endeavouring to render themselves formidable, and put a stop to the farther progress of such dangerous designs. For these ends I have entered into a defensive Alliance with the most Christian King and the King of Prussia, to which several other powers, and particularly the States-General, have been invited to accede; and I have not the least reason to doubt of their concurrence. This treaty shall in a short time be laid before you. By these means, and by your support and assistance, I trust in God, I shall be able not only to secure to my own subjects the enjoyment of many valuable rights and privileges long since acquired for them by the most solemn treaties, but effectually ally

1725-26. "ally to preserve the peace and balance of Europe, the only view and end of all my endeavours."

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I have ordered the estimates for the service of this year to be prepared and laid before you, which, from an unwillingness I always have to put my subjects to an extraordinary expence by any unnecessary precautions, are formed upon the foot of employing no greater number of forces, than was thought necessary the last year; for which, if the Supplies you give, shall be fully and effectually raised, I shall be enabled to have a strong fleet at sea early in the spring. If the posture of affairs shall at any time make it necessary to augment our maritime force, I confide so intirely in the zeal and affection of my Parliament, that I assure myself you will enable me to make such an addition to the number of seamen, as shall be found requisite."

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"It is not to be doubted, but the enemies to my Government will conceive hopes, that some favourable opportunity for renewing their attempts may offer from the prospect of new troubles and commotions. They are already very busy by their instruments and emissaries in those Courts, whose measures seem most to favour their purposes, in soliciting and promoting the cause of the Pretender. But I persuade myself, notwithstanding the countenance and encouragement they may have received, or flatter themselves with, the provision you shall make for the safety and defence of the Kingdom, will effectually secure us from any attempts from abroad, and render all such projects vain and abortive."

"When the world shall see, that you will not suffer the British Crown and Nation to be menaced and insulted, those, who most envy the present happiness and tranquility of this Kingdom, and are endeavouring to make us subservient to their ambition, will consider their own interest and circumstances, before they make any attempt upon so brave a people, strengthened and supported by prudent and powerful Alliances, and, though desirous to preserve the peace, able and ready to defend themselves against the efforts of all aggressors. Such resolutions, and such measures, timely taken, I am satisfied, are the most effectual means of preventing a war, and continuing to us the blessings of peace and prosperity."

Proceeding, of the Commons. Addresses suitable to the speech were presented by both Houses, and the Commons proceeded to consider of the Supply. The reduction of the four thousand additional troops was again insisted on, and particularly by Mr. Pulteney, who now set himself up to oppose every motion of the Court; but, after a warm debate, the same number of land-forces 18,264 men, and the same provision for them, were voted. A motion by Mr. Pulteney for a Committee to state the public debts, from the year 1714 to 1725, was rejected by 262 against 89. It was observed, that most of the Tories then in the 1725-26. House were against it.

The treaties of Hanover and of Vienna being laid before the Commons, they were debated by a full House of 420 Members. No stranger was admitted except the Earl of Marchmont, who had been a Plenipotentiary at Cambray. Mr. Horace Walpole, Ambassador at the Court of France, opened the debate with a long speech, setting forth the state of affairs in Europe from the peace of Utrecht to the present time. He took notice, 'That, since his Majesty's Accession to the Throne, his constant care and endeavours had been to settle the balance of power on a solid foundation, and to preserve and secure the tranquility of Christendom; to protect and defend the Protestant cause, and promote the honour and interest of his British subjects.

That, with these great views, his Majesty was become Mediator and Guarantee, both of the Barrier Treaty concluded in 1715, and of a Convention made in 1718, for the execution of that treaty, between the Emperor and the States-General of the United-Provinces. In the year 1716, his Majesty concluded a defensive Alliance with the Emperor; and, in 1717, another with the most Christian King and the States-General; the genuine design of both which treaties was only to preserve the public repose of Christendom, established by the peace of Utrecht, to guaranty the Succession to the Crown of Great-Britain in the Protestant line. In order to fortify all these treaties, and to extinguish the war, the Spaniards had kindled in Italy, his Majesty, in 1718, made a Convention with the most Christian King, for proposing ultimate conditions of peace between the Emperor and the King of Spain, and between his Imperial Majesty and the (then) King of Sicily. This Convention was, a few days after, followed by a treaty of Alliance between the Emperor, the King of Great-Britain, and the most Christian King, which, by their Ministers, was concluded at London, and signed on the 22d of July 1718, and in which the States-General were named as one of the contracting parties (upon a supposition that they would come into it) from whence this treaty was named the Quadruple Alliance. A few months after, the King of Sicily was admitted into this treaty; and at length the King of Spain himself was forced to accede to it, which was mainly owing to the generous assistance, which his Britannic Majesty gave the Emperor in the Mediterranean. There remaining some points still controverted between the Emperor and King of Spain, the same were referred to be amicably determined in a Congress, which was afterwards opened at Cambray, under the Mediation of his Britannic Majesty and the most Christian King. By reason of several difficulties industriously raised by the Courts of Vienna and Madrid, the great pains taken for three years by the Ministers Mediators proved unsuccessful, and at the last Congress was suddenly dissolved, upon advice, that the Emperor and the King of Spain had secretly adjusted the differences between them, and concluded a treaty of peace at Vienna. This unexpected event occasioned no small surprize, and raised jealousies, which appeared to be better grounded, when it was known, that the treaty of peace was soon followed by a treaty of commerce, the main de-

1725-26. sign of which was to support and countenance the East-India Company, some years before established at Offend, by granting to the inhabitants of the Austrian Netherlands greater privileges, both in the East and West-Indies, than were ever granted either to the English or Dutch, which visibly tended to the intire ruin of many valuable branches of our trade, and was contrary to several solemn treaties still in force. His Majesty, ever watchful for the interest of his British subjects, had caused lively representations to be made against the treaty of commerce, both to the Emperor and King of Spain. At the Court of Madrid, these complaints were received with coldness; and at that at Vienna, with stiffness and haughtiness, even to such a degree, that the Imperial Ministers did not stick to insinuate, that, if his Britannic Majesty persisted in his resolution to take measures in opposition to the treaties of Vienna, his Imperial Majesty would not only think himself disengaged from the guaranty of the Protestant Succession to the Crown of Great-Britain, but that the same might be attended with consequences in relation to his Majesty's Dominions in Germany. These insulting menaces made no impression on his Majesty's firmness, nor deterred him from his fixed resolution of concerting with other powers such measures, as might give a check to the ambitious views of those, who endeavoured to render themselves formidable. These measures seemed to be the more necessary, because there were just grounds to believe, that the unforeseen reconciliation of the Emperor and King of Spain was owing to the constant view of the House of Austria, of rendering the Imperial dignity hereditary in their family. In order to that, it might reasonably be supposed, that the treaties of Vienna were to be cemented by a match between the Emperor's eldest Daughter and the Infant Don Carlos. It was easy to foresee the consequences of such a marriage. For the issue male, that might come from it, might, in time, be possessed not only of all the hereditary Dominions belonging to the House of Austria, and of the Imperial dignity, but also of all the Dominions of the Spanish Monarchy; which would intirely overthrow the balance of power, and render the liberties of all the rest of Europe very precarious. This supposition would appear more than probable to any one, who considered that there was scarce any other way of accounting, either for the King of Spain's breaking through solemn treaties with Great-Britain, in favour of the Emperor's subjects in the Netherlands; or for the Emperor's forgetting so far the obligations he had to Great-Britain and Holland, as to enter into engagements to assist Spain towards the recovery of Gibraltar and Minorca, and to persist in supporting and countenancing the Offend Company, established with no other view, than to deprive the subjects of the Maritime Powers of several of the most advantageous branches of their trade. In order to give a timely check to the further progress of such dangerous designs, his Majesty, in his great wisdom, had entered into a defensive Alliance with the most Christian King and the King of Prussia, to which several other powers, and particularly the States-General, had been invited to accede. The States of Holland had already done it; and it was not to be doubted, but their example would soon be followed by the other United-

No. 101. VOL. IV.

Provinces. The main view of this Alliance was to maintain and preserve the public repose and tranquility of Christendom, and to secure to each contracting party the possession of their respective Dominions and Territories, with the rights, immunities, and advantages, particularly those relating to trade, which their subjects enjoyed, or ought, by treaties, to enjoy. And, as his Majesty ever had a particular concern for the Protestant interest, so, out of his Royal and tender compassion for the distressed condition of some of our Protestant Brethren in Poland, his Majesty had not only interposed his good offices in the most pressing manner in their favour, but had taken the occasion of the defensive Alliance made at Hanover, to engage, by a separate article, the most Christian King and the King of Prussia, who, together with his Majesty, are guarantees of the treaty of Oliva, to see it maintained and observed in its full extent, and to cause reparation to be made for what may have been done at Thorn contrary to that treaty. He concluded with an encomium upon his Majesty's wisdom, care, vigilance, steadiness, and resolution in the conduct of all these weighty and important affairs.

Mr. Walpole's speech occasioned a great debate. A Member having suggested, that it was to be supposed, the King of Spain did not seem to grant any further privileges to the Emperor's subjects in the Netherlands, than what had been granted to the English, and other most favoured Nations; he was answered by Colonel Bladen, who pointed to the second article of the treaty of commerce of Vienna, whereby it was expressly stipulated, 'That the ships of war, and merchant-ships belonging to the contracting parties, or their subjects, should be allowed full liberty to frequent the harbours, coasts, and provinces of each other;' naming particularly the East-Indies, and without any exception as to the Spanish West-Indies, or any restraint on the ships of war and merchant-ships, than not to buy any thing besides victuals and materials for repairing their ships; which implied a permission to vend their merchandizes for ready money; so it was manifest, that the subjects of the Austrian Low-Countries were allowed more extensive privileges than ever had been granted to any other Nation, contrary to several treaties in force between the Crowns of Great-Britain and Spain.

Colonel Bladen having cleared this important point, Mr. Daniel Pulleney made a long speech, wherein having made his observations on most of the points mentioned by Mr. Horace Walpole, he insinuated, that the subject-matter of this day's debate was of the greatest importance, and therefore they ought maturely to consider of it, before they came to any resolution upon it. He was supported by Mr. Shippen, who raised the main objection to the treaty of Hanover, That it would engage the British Nation in a war for the defence of his Majesty's Dominions in Germany, contrary to an express provision made for the securing our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, in the act for further limitation and succession of the Crown in the Protestant line; which, being the basis and foundation of the present settlement, was become part of our Constitution, and therefore ought to be sacred and inviolable. They were answered by Mr. Pelham, who urged, that the true meaning and intent of that limitation was not wholly and for ever to deprive his Ma-

1725-26. jeſty's foreign Dominions of any aſſiſtance from this Nation; for, if ſo, his Majeſty, in that reſpect, would be in a worſe condition upon his Acceſſion to the Britiſh Throne than he was before; but only to refrain the Sovereign, for the future, from engaging the Nation, at his pleaſure, in a war for the defence of any Dominions not belonging to the Crown of England, without the conſent of Parliament; to whom the Legiſlature wiſely left to judge and determine, Whether ſuch a war was juſt and neceſſary or no? Concluding, that, for his own part, he was fully of opinion, that, if, in the preſent juncture and circumſtances of affairs, his Majeſty's foreign Dominions ſhould be attacked or injured, this Nation ought to ſtand by and ſupport his Majeſty againſt all his enemies whatſoever. And therefore he moved, 'That an humble addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, to return his Majeſty the thanks of this Houſe for his great goodneſs in communicating the treaties of peace and commerce concluded between the Emperor and the King of Spain, and the deſenſive Alliance between his Majeſty, the moſt Chriſtian King, and the King of Pruſſia. To expreſs our juſt ſenſe of his Majeſty's concern for the balance of power in Europe, and the Proteſtant Religion; and above all our unfeigned gratitude for his earneſt and reaſonable care of the particular intereſts of his Britiſh ſubjects, by forming and entering into the deſenſive Alliance with the moſt Chriſtian King and the King of Pruſſia, in order to obviate and diſappoint the dangerous views and conſequences of the treaty of peace betwixt the Emperor and the King of Spain; and to preſerve the many valuable rights and privileges of this Nation againſt the fatal tendency of the ſaid treaty of commerce, calculated for the entire deſtruction of the Britiſh trade, in breach of ſeveral ſolemn treaties now in force. To acknowledge his Majeſty's prudence and reſolution, in not letting any attempts or inſinuations whatſoever divert his Majeſty from conſulting and ſteadily purſuing the true intereſt of theſe his Kingdoms; and to aſſure his Majeſty, that, in juſtice and vindication of the honour and dignity of the Britiſh Crown, this Houſe will effectually ſtand by and ſupport his Majeſty againſt all inſults and attacks, that any Prince, or Power, in reſentment of the juſt meaſures, which his Majeſty has ſo wiſely taken, ſhall make upon any of his Majeſty's Territories and Dominions, though not belonging to the Crown of Great-Britain (1).'

This motion being at laſt approved by a majority of 285 againſt 107, the addreſs was preſented on the 19th of February, to which the King returned this anſwer:

Gentlemen,

'I return you my thanks for this particular mark of your duty, affection, and confidence in me. Your aſſurances not to ſuffer my foreign Dominions to be expoſed or injured, on account of the meaſures I have taken for the intereſt of theſe Kingdoms, will, I hope, be a means to preſerve the peace and tranquility of Europe. I have no views of ambition to gratify; I have no thought of aggrandizing myſelf, or extending any part of my Dominions at the hazard and expence of the other; and, as my honour is the common cauſe and concern of my ſubjects, their particular intereſts ſhall, upon all occaſions, be my conſtant care.'

The Lords took likewiſe into conſideration the three treaties, which had been laid before them: The Lord Townſend opened the debate, and concluded with a motion much to the ſame purpoſe with that of Mr. Pelham in the Houſe of Commons. He was ſeconded by the Duke of Newcaſtle, who acquainted the Houſe with a remarkable paſſage out of a letter from Mr. Stanbope, his Majeſty's Miniſter in Spain, 'That, in a private converſation, the Duke of Ripperda had not ſcrupled to own, that, beſides what had already been communicated to him about the late treaties of Vienna, there were ſtill ſome other ſecret articles, which in due time ſhould be made public, whereby the contracting parties mutually engaged to aſſiſt each other with a certain number of troops, in order to ſupport the Oſſend Company, and to recover Gibraltar.' The Duke being aſked, Whether he would produce that letter? He ſaid, He had not the King's commands for it, but was only left at liberty to take notice of what he had mentioned. Upon this the Lord Lechmere obſerved, that no ſtreſs could be laid on an information, that did not come regularly and in form before the Houſe: That beſides it was uſual with Miniſters of State ſometimes to drop things, that have no reality, in common converſation, only to found thoſe, with whom they negotiate. That, the treaties, that had been communicated to them, being a matter of the greateſt importance, they ought to proceed in it with the utmoſt caution and matureſt deliberation; and therefore he was of opinion, they ought to take ſome time to conſider of it, and adjourn the debate to another day. He was answered by the Earl of Scarborough; and, the queſtion being put upon the motion for an addreſs, it was carried in the affirmative, by a majority of 1.

After this the Lord Lechmere ſtood up, and declared, 'That he would go as far as any Member of that illuſtrious Aſſembly, in vindicating the honour and dignity of the Britiſh Crown, and in ſupporting and defending his Majeſty's Perſon and Government. That, as their preſent and future happineſs depended, next under God, on the ſettlement of the Crown of theſe Realms on his Majeſty and his Royal Iſſue, they ought to be extremely cautious of any leaſt derogation from the act of Parliament, by which that happy ſettlement was made; and therefore he was of opinion, and moved, that to the reſolution for an addreſs the following words be added:

This Houſe not doubting but your Majeſty, in your great wiſdom and juſtice to theſe your Kingdoms,

(1) Mr. Pulteney ſpoke againſt this motion, and among other things, ſaid, 'That the Imperial Court's backwardneſs in granting the inveſtiture for Bremen and Verden, might have been one of the motives to ſome late meaſures.' Upon this, Sir Robert Wagh aſſured the Houſe, that the King might long ago have had the inveſtiture, if he would have paid the exorbitant fees that were demanded for it.

(1) He

1725-26. doms, will always preserve to them the full and entire benefit of the provision made for the further securing our Religion, Laws and Liberties, by an act passed in the 12th and 13th years of the Reign of his late Majesty King William III. of glorious memory, whereby it is enacted, That, in case the Crown and Imperial Dignity of this Realm shall hereafter come to any person, not being a native of this Kingdom of England, this Nation be not obliged to engage in any war for the defence of any Dominions or Territories, which do not belong to the Crown of England, without the consent of Parliament. But this motion was rejected.

The address, in substance the same with that of the Commons, was presented by the House of Lords in a body, on the 18th of February, and received the like answer.

Mr. Hampden's affair.

On the 2d of March, a petition from Richard Hampden, late Treasurer of the Navy, and Knight of the Shire for the County of Bucks, was presented to the Commons by Sir William Yonge, for leave to bring in a bill, to empower the Commissioners of the Treasury to compound with the Petitioner for his debt to the Crown (1). Sir Robert Walpole having acquainted the House, that the King had given his consent that they might do as they thought fit, the petition was taken into consideration. It was said by Mr. Onslow the Speaker, and some others, 'That, out of regard to his ancient family, and, in particular, in consideration of his great-grandfather, John Hampden, who made a most noble and courageous stand against arbitrary power, in opposing ship-money, and fell the first victim in the glorious cause of liberty, they were for having something done for his relations.' His wife and brother presented petitions, setting forth the distresses they would be reduced to, by the deficiency Mr. Hampden was charged, without relief from the House. These petitions occasioning a debate, Sir William Yonge took notice, 'That Mr. Hampden's deficiency had, in some measure, been occasioned by a general calamity: That he had already done all that lay in his power to make it up: That, however, since neither his lady, nor his brother, had any ways been accessory to his misfortunes, it was unreasonable and unjust to involve them in his offence and its punishment: That his real and patrimonial estate amounted to about 2200*l.* a year, one full half of which was settled for a jointure to his Wife, who brought him near 11,000*l.* in marriage, besides an annuity of 200*l.* per annum during her life, for her separate use; all which settlements ought to be secured to her: That either Mr. Richard Hampden, or his brother, may have issue male; and, in consideration of the signal services, at divers times, performed by their illustrious ancestors, some provision should be made for their posterity out of the family estate.' And therefore he moved, that a bill be brought in for vesting the real and personal estates of Richard Hampden in Trustees, for making some provision for his wife and family, and for the better securing the debt due from him to the Crown. But Mr. Clayton and some other Gentlemen represented, that, if this affair went through the usual tedious course of 1725-26⁶ extents in the Exchequer, great part of Mr. Hampden's estate would be consumed in law expenses, so that the Crown would not get 200*l.* a year out of it. And therefore they proposed, that the estate should be divided into two equal parts, one of which should be allotted as a provision for his wife and family, and the other half immediately sold off, towards satisfying the debt due from him to the Crown. Many Members shewed their approbation of this proposal; but the majority were for Sir William Yonge's motion; and a bill was ordered to be brought in, which afterwards passed into a law.

Upon a petition of Daniel Campbell, Member of Parliament for Glasgow, for satisfaction for his damages, by the Rioters in that City, a bill passed in his favour; and the satisfaction given him was laid upon the place, where the crime was committed, by an act for an imposition of two pennies Scots, upon all ale and beer brewed in the City of Glasgow. However, the malt-tax was thought to great a grievance in Scotland, that the Convention of the Royal Boroughs presented an address by John Campbell, Member for Edinburgh, in which, though they disavowed the conduct of the Glasgow men, they remonstrated against that tax, as a burden too heavy for their Country to bear; and afterwards petitioned the Commons concerning it; as did likewise the shires of Renfrew, Banff, &c.

On the 24th of March, Sir Paul Methuen, Knight of the Bath, delivered the following message from the King to the House of Commons: The King's message for an extraordinary Supply.

'His Majesty having nothing more at heart, than an earnest desire to secure to his own subjects the full and free enjoyment of their Trade and Navigation, and in the best manner to prevent and frustrate such designs, as have been formed against the particular interest of this Nation, and the general peace of Europe, has found it necessary, not only to augment his maritime force, but to concert such other measures, as may most effectually conduce to these desirable ends: And, as these services will require some extraordinary expence, his Majesty hopes he shall be enabled, by the assistance of Parliament, to increase the number of seamen already voted and granted for the service of this year, and to enter into, and make good such engagements, as the circumstances and exigency of affairs may require.'

This message occasioned a debate of six hours; but it was at last agreed to comply with it, by a majority of 270 against 89, and an address to that purpose was presented to the King.

This message had not been communicated to the House of Lords, though the King said in it, that he hoped he should be enabled, by the assistance of his Parliament, to increase the number of seamen already voted. Notice was taken of it, and the Earl of Stafford asserted, 'That the message was unprecedented, and struck at the ancient privileges of the House of Peers, who are the grand standing Council of the Sovereign, the hereditary and perpetual Guardians of the liberties

(1) His debt was at first 95,256*l.* but he had delivered in, by South-Sea Stock, subscriptions, and other securities, about half the debt, so the remainder was about 48,000*l.* His paternal estate was about 2000*l.* a year.

1726. liberties and properties of the People, and, next the King, the principal part of the Legislature, and who therefore have a right to be consulted in all matters of public concern.' He moved, therefore, 'That an address be presented to know, who advised his Majesty not to send the same message to the House of Peers, as was sent to the House of Commons.' The Lord Trevor (who had been made Lord Privy-Seal on the 6th of March, in the room of the Duke of Kingsfon) moved, that the further consideration of that matter might be adjourned for a month. But the Lord Lechmere represented, 'That the subject-matter of this debate was of so great consequence to his Majesty's service, to the honour of that noble and illustrious Assembly, to the ancient constitution of Parliament, and to the prosperity and welfare of the Kingdom, that it ought not to be postponed at all, much less for such a length of time, as amounted to a laying it intirely aside. That it must be for the service and support of the Crown, upon all occasions, to have the advice of both Houses of Parliament; and as the message in question was only sent to the House of Commons, and there had not yet been any communication with their Lordships upon it, though it contained matters of the highest importance, it tended to undermine the very foundation of the House of Peers, and of the ancient Constitution of the Kingdom. That the rights of the People of England were, in some measure, invaded, whenever they were deprived of the assistance of that House of Parliament, without whom no aid can be given to the Crown, nor any taxes laid upon the subjects. And therefore, if this debate should be adjourned to so long a day, it might be inferred from such a dilatory proceeding, that their Lordships were not as jealous of their own privileges, and of their rights and properties of the people, at this time, and as much determined to support and defend them both, as any of their ancestors and predecessors had formerly been. That it was the undoubted, inherent and fundamental right of the House of Peers to alter and amend all money-bills, which came from the Commons; and, though in some last instances the Commons had disputed that right, yet the Lords had never failed to maintain and assert it. That, according to antient usage, all demands of Supply should come from the Throne in the House of Peers; and therefore all other methods are unparliamentary, new, and dangerous to the Constitution.' All these assertions were corroborated with several precedents upon record, which he caused to be read. He was answered by the Lords Onslow and Townshend, who were replied to by the Lord Bathurst, who took notice, 'That the appellation of Parliament being given to the Commons, and separately from the Lords, was intirely new and unprecedented. That this was so far from being the language of former times, that, though of late the Commons took upon them to begin all money-bills, yet there was a time, when they were so inconsiderable, as to apply to the Lords, to desire them to provide money for the public service. That, if, at this time, the Lords suffered themselves to be overlooked in this manner, they might come at last to be voted useless, as they had formerly been. And therefore, lest any mistake of this kind should be attended with such ill consequence, as to encourage evil Ministers hereafter to a total neglect of the House of Peers, he was of opinion, that proper notice should be taken of it immediately, instead of deferring the further consideration of it for a month.' The Earl of Scarborough said, 'He did not deny, that the Peers have a right to be advised with in all matters of importance, and to give their consent to money-bills. But, in the case before them, it seemed needless to send the message in question to their House, because their Lordships had implicitly given their consent to the augmenting the number of seamen, in their address of thanks, wherein the augmentation was hinted at. As to what had been suggested, that formerly [the Commons applied to the Lords to provide money for the public service, the reason of it was, because, at that time, none had any money to give but the Lords, most of the lands being then in their hands; whereas since the Reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII, the case is very much altered; and therefore they ought not to consider, how things were formerly, but how they are at present, and so act as they find them.' After several other speeches the affair was put off for a month, by 69 voices against 31. When the month was expired, it was again adjourned for a fortnight, and the House was moved 'That an humble address be presented to his Majesty, representing the fatal consequences which must happen to this Kingdom, when any advice shall be given to the Crown, whereby the counsel and assistance of this House shall not be asked, at the same time that the counsel and assistance of the House of Commons shall be asked, in matters which concern the peace and safety of this Kingdom; and most earnestly to beseech his Majesty, that he will for the future discourage all such counsels as shall tend, in so unwarrantable and dangerous a manner, to the destruction of the rights of this House.' But this address was rejected.

Among the bills passed this Session were these two: An act for building a bridge over the Thames, from the town of Fulham in Middlesex, to the town of Putney in Surrey.

An act for preventing frivolous and vexatious arrests. By this act, no person shall be held to special bail on any process from a superior Court where the cause of action shall not amount to 10*l*. nor from any inferior Court under 40*s*. In such cases the Plaintiff shall not arrest the body of the Defendant, but shall serve him personally with a copy of the process.

The business of the Session being over, the King dismissed the Parliament with the following speech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Cannot in justice put an end to this Session, without returning you my hearty thanks for the many instances you have given me of your duty and affection to my Person and Government, and of your zeal to maintain the honour and true interest of this Kingdom.

"The spirit and resolution you have shewn on this important occasion, when our most valuable rights and privileges have been struck at, are highly becoming the weight and authority of a British Parliament: And the steps that have been taken abroad, in support of 1726.

End of the fourth Session of the second Parliament.

1726. " the measures entered into against this Nation, must convince every body of your wisdom and prudence in endeavouring to put an early stop to the further progress of them. I hope the precautions, you have enabled me to take, will be sufficient, in conjunction with my Allies, to defeat the designs, which have been formed against us; and that the Promoters of them, when they have fully weighed their own circumstances, and better considered those of the several powers united in defence of the tranquility and liberties of Europe, will find it their own interest to preserve the peace, and think it most safe and prudent to desist from their dangerous schemes.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

" I return you my particular thanks for the Supplies, which you have so cheerfully and effectually raised; and you may be assured, that they shall be faithfully applied to the uses, for which you intended them.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" The constant employment of my thoughts, and the most earnest wishes of my heart, tend wholly to the securing to my subjects their just rights and advantages, and to the preserving to them, and to all Europe, the enjoyment of a safe and honourable peace. And I must not conclude, without giving you the strongest assurances, that the particular confidence you have placed in me, shall be made use of in such manner only, as may most effectually conduce to the attaining those good and great purposes."

Three squadrons fitted out. The Supplies, raised during this Session of Parliament, were immediately employed in fitting out three different squadrons; one of seven men of war, designed for the West-Indies, under the command of Vice-Admiral Hofier; another of twelve or more ships of the line, for the Mediterranean, under the command of Sir John Jennings, Admiral of the White; and a third, designed for the Baltic, under the command of Sir Charles Wager, Vice-Admiral of the Red, and Sir George Walton, Rear-Admiral of the Blue, consisting of twenty-one ships and two fire-ships.

The Court of Great-Britain had evident proofs, that nothing could influence the Emperor and King of Spain to terms of reason, but to shew a vigorous spirit against a very pernicious or suspicious part of the treaty of Vienna. And as all appearances convinced the Ministry, that nothing could so effectually guard against approaching evils, as the dispatching sufficient squadrons of ships to several places, they did with all possible diligence fit out the forementioned squadrons.

The squadron sent to the Baltic was to prevent very great evils in those parts, there being no room to doubt, that the Czarina's real view was to go with a fleet to Stockholm, and, under a pretence of demanding the use of the Ports, and the assistance of Sweden for the recovery of Sleswick to the Duke of Holstein, actually to dethrone the King of Sweden, and make that Nation dependent on Muscovy. It was therefore judged of the utmost importance to prevent this. Accordingly, about the end of April, Sir Charles Wager, with his Squadron, came to Wager an anchor in the road of Copenhagen; and, on the 25th of that month, had an audience of the King of Denmark. On the 2d of May he failed to Stockholm, where, eight days after, he had an audience of the King of Sweden, being introduced by Mr. Poyntz, the British Envoy Extraordinary. A Squadron of Danish men of war having joined the British Squadron, the united fleet became so formidable, that the Court of Russia thought proper to suspend the fitting out their large ships, and only to equip some frigates; and the land-forces, which had been drawn together near Peterburg, in order to be put on board the Russian fleet, were sent to work on the Ludoga canal, and the fortifications at Cronstot. That Court was under the greatest uneasiness, and immediately gave orders for reinforcing the garrisons of Wybourg, Cronstot, Revel, and Riga. Mean while, Sir Charles Wager, having been joined by the Nassau and Port-Mahon on the 20th of May, failed from Elfsnal near Stockholm the 25th, and arrived, the 29th, near the Island of Nargen, three leagues from Revel, and, the next morning, sent an Officer with a letter to Lieutenant-General Wulcoffe, who commanded at Revel, and ordered the Port-Mahon to sail to Cronstot, having on board Mr. Barnet, one of his Lieutenants, by whom he sent his Majesty's letter to the Czarina, inclosed in a packet to Admiral Apraxin (1). In this letter, which was dated the 11th of April, his Majesty observed, 'That as the Czarina's great preparations both by sea and land for war, in a time of peace, could not fail of giving Him, as well as his Allies in those parts, great and just cause to be alarmed; she would not be surprized, that he had sent a strong squadron into the Baltic, to obviate any danger, that might ensue from so extraordinary an armament.' He laid before her the several instances he had given of a sincere disposition to establish a firm and lasting friendship with the Crown of Russia; but that his intentions had been disappointed by the delays of that Court; and he expressed his surprize, that, while he was carrying on amicable Negotiations, and had not given the least provocations on his part, measures were taken at her Court in favour of the Pretender, and great encouragement to his Adherents. After what, says he, we have now set forth, your Majesty will not be surprized, that we, being indispensably obliged to provide for the security of our Dominions, to perform our engagements with our Allies, and to maintain the public tranquility in the North, which seems to be very much in danger from your Majesty's late preparations, have thought it necessary to send a strong fleet of our men of war into the Baltic, and that we have given orders to our Admiral, who commands it, to endeavour to prevent fresh troubles in those parts, by hindering hindering your Majesty's ships from coming out, in case that you persist in your resolution to put your fleet to sea, to execute the designs which you may have in view. But, as it is our firm intention to live in peace and friendship with your Majesty, we wish, from the bottom of our heart, that your Majesty, seriously reflecting upon the true interest of your subjects, would permit them to enjoy the blessings of that peace, which they purchased at the expence of so much blood and treasure, under the conduct of his late Majesty; and that, rather than enter into measures, which must inevitably plunge Russia into a war, and the whole North into confusion, your Majesty would please to give your people and all mankind convincing proofs of your inclination for peace, and of your good disposition to live in quiet with your neighbours.' The Czarina, in her answer dated June 15, declared her surprize at not receiving the King's letter till the very instant the fleet appeared on her coasts, and after it had cast anchor before Revel, 'since it had been more agreeable to the custom established among Sovereigns, and more consistent with the amity, that had so long subsisted between her Kingdoms and the Crown of Great-Britain, had his Majesty thought fit to expostulate with her about the umbrage he might have conceived from her armament; and to expect her answer thereupon, before he advanced to so offensive a step. That then his Majesty might have been assured by her, that it was so far from her thoughts to disturb the repose of the North, that, on the contrary, all her cares and attention were wholly bent on the security and preservation of it, both for the time present, and time to come, as being more concerned than his Majesty, in preventing whatever might endanger that tranquillity.' That, with regard to what was charged upon her, in relation to the Pretender, it 'was a frivolous and stale accusation, made use of as it had heretofore been, as the main pretence for all the unkind steps taken against her.'

(1) The Czar of Muscovy died the 28th of January 1725-6, and was succeeded by the Empress Catherine his wife.

1726.

Sir Charles Wager remained in his station near Revel till October, when, the year being so far advanced, and he having intelligence from Peterburgh and Cronstot, that the Russian galleys were laid up in their winter harbour, and their fleet not in a condition to put to sea, he sailed from the bay of Revel for the coast of Denmark, and arrived at Copenhagen the same month. From thence, after a stay of a few days, he sailed for England, where he safely arrived in November.

Sir John Jennings put to sea.

Sir John Jennings, with his squadron, which was furnished with a considerable number of land-forces and artillery, visited the coasts of Spain, and shut up the ports of that Kingdom. His orders were to cruise between Cadix and Cape St. Vincent, to intercept the Galleons, and to assist Gibraltar, in case of a siege, with the land-forces on board his fleet, and to annoy the enemy to the utmost. But he did no damage on the coast of Spain, and only caused alarms, and protected the trade of Great-Britain.

Hofier
sail to the West-Indies.

Vice-Admiral Hofier's squadron was inferior to those of Sir Charles Wager and Sir John Jennings; but he was authorized to join to his fleet all the ships he could meet with in the West-Indies; and his orders were to prevent the Galleons from sailing out of the Spanish ports there; or, if they should come out, to seize them, and bring their cargoes untouched to England. 1726. He arrived at the Bastimento's off Porto Bello, in the beginning of June; but, ten days before his arrival, an advice-boat from Spain brought orders for putting on shore the money on board the Galleons, said to be twenty-six millions of pieces of eight, and sending it back to Panama.

Ripperda
dismissed.

These measures were taken against Spain, in resentment of the engagements, which that Court had entered into with the Court of Vienna, to the prejudice of Great-Britain, and the designs formed in favour of the Pretender, by the instigation of the Dukes of Ormond and Wharton, and Earl Maribibal, who were then at Madrid. But the Duke de Ripperda, who had been the principal Agent in forming and concluding the treaty of Vienna, and the Author of the violent counsels against Great-Britain, was of a sudden dismissed, on the 14th of May, from all his employments, though allowed a pension of 3000 pistoles for his subsistence. The pretended cause of his disgrace was the embezzlement of the finances (of which he was Superintendent) to the value of four millions. The Duke, upon his receiving the King of Spain's decree for dismissing him from his posts, went immediately to the House of Monsieur Vandermeer, the Dutch Ambassador; but, not thinking himself safe there, Vandermeer carried him in his coach to the house of Colonel Stanbope, the British Ambassador, whose protection he begged and obtained. The King being informed of this, caused the Ambassador's house to be surrounded by two hundred grenadiers. The next day Colonel Stanbope had an audience of the King, and gave him an account of what had happened in relation to the discarded Minister, which the King did not seem to disapprove; and the grenadiers were called off from his house, on a promise from him, that the Duke de Ripperda's person should be forthcoming; and sixty guards were posted in the streets leading to Colonel Stanbope's house, to take him, if he should attempt to make his escape. But on the 25th of May, N. S. the King appointed Don Lewis Cuellar, one of the Alcaldes of his Court, assisted by Don Francis Valansa, Adjutant-General of the Life-guard, to enter Colonel Stanbope's house, and take from thence the Duke de Ripperda, and convey him to the Castle of Segovia, with a sufficient guard; which was done. But this violation of the law of Nations, in forcibly entering the house of an Ambassador, was justly complained of by the Court of Great Britain, who ordered the letters and papers, which passed between the Ministers and Ambassadors of both Courts upon this occasion, and upon Sir John Jennings's coming with his fleet on the coast of Spain, to be published. Among these papers is a memorial of Colonel Stanbope to the King of Spain, dated Sept. 24, 1726, in which he observes, that the King his Master was surprized, that the King of Spain should not know the reasons, and be sensible of the necessity, which obliged his Majesty to send the fleet under Sir John Jennings to the coast of Spain; 'considering, says he, the engagements, into which some of the most considerable powers of Europe have of late entered, and of which his Majesty has complained so often and so loudly. The naval armaments and equipments, which have been made in most of the ports of Spain; the preparations of war, and the moti-

1726. ons of a considerable number of Spanish troops towards that part of the coast, which lies nearest and most convenient for executing an enterprise on his Majesty's Dominions; the great hopes of the Emisfaries and Adherents of the Pretender, who have publicly boasted of the assistance they should receive from those parts; the confidence they had in it, and which has appeared clearly in the pernicious and indiscreet conduct of some among them, who have been lately received and favoured at Madrid: This, joined with the intrigues, which have been carried on with the Muscovites, and the reasons his Majesty has to suspect the ill designs upon which the three ships were sent last year from Peterburgh to Cadix, and thence to St. Andero; the knowledge his Majesty had last winter, by the avowal of the Minister of Spain, that there was an offensive Alliance between the Courts of Madrid and Vienna, and that, by one of the articles of that Alliance, it was stipulated to use open force to get Gibraltar restored to the King of Spain, a place, which his Majesty possesses by virtue of so just a right: the great Subsidies, which have been furnished to the Imperial Court, and which are not seen to be settled by an Alliance, that has yet been made public; the notorious infractions, which the Spanish Guarda Costes have for a long time made, with respect to the commerce and navigation of his Majesty's subjects in the West-Indies, infractions, which have been so often complained of without the least appearance of satisfaction or reparation: These things, joined together, are sufficient to exhibit clearly the reasons, which have induced his Majesty to take the measures he judged proper, and to equip the several fleets, which have put to sea; and his Majesty's subjects would have had just cause to complain, had not care been taken for the security of the Kingdom, and of their rights and properties, which they saw threatened and in danger.

The States
accede to the treaty of Hanover.

The King of Prussia falls off from that treaty.

In August, the States-General signed their accession to the treaty of Hanover, after having been dissuaded by the Imperial and Spanish Ministers not to do it, and pressed to come into that of Vienna. Though the Emperor had not succeeded with the States, he found means to detach, in great measure, the King of Prussia from his engagements with the Allies of Hanover. The conduct of his Prussian Majesty, in this instance, as a Protestant and Son-in-law of King George, could hardly be defended. It was thought he proposed some extraordinary advantages from his desertion of the Allies of Hanover, and closing with those of Vienna; one part of which advantages was probably to be supported by the Emperor, in making some conquest upon the Dominions of Hanover. However that be, he made a treaty with the Emperor, which gave great jealousy to the friends of the treaty of Hanover. By this treaty the King of Prussia engaged in a new contract, not very consistent with the apprehensions of the Hanover Allies, of the Emperor's power and projects; since the King of Prussia was to guarantee the order of Succession in the hereditary Dominions in the heirs female, in default of male issue; while on the other hand, the Emperor obliged himself to use his endeavours to obtain from all those, who had pretensions to the Duchies of Juliers and Bergues, a cession of their rights in favour of his Prussian Majesty.

The treaty of Hanover was attended with the greatest difficulties, and a prodigious but unavoidable expence. Of this Sweden was an instance. All the summer pressing and repeated applications were made by the British and French Ministers at Stockholm, to induce the Court of Sweden to accede to the treaty of Hanover. And no less pains were taken by the Russian and Austrian Ministers, to procure his Swedish Majesty's accession to the treaty of Vienna. But that wife Prince resolved to leave the determination of so important an affair to the General Dyet of the States of Sweden. The Holstein faction in Sweden were spirited in their opposition to this accession, by Count Freitag, the Imperial Ambassador, and the Ambassador of Russia; but that did not hinder the States signing it, as well as the King of Sweden.

During these Negotiations, Spain incensed to the last degree, made great preparations for war. A camp of about twenty thousand men was formed at St. Roch near Gibraltar, and all the necessaries for a siege were provided. Preparations were likewise made at sea; four thousand sailors were landed; several men of war were come to Cadix, and as many more, as could be, were bought. The pretence was, to rebuild the Castle of Old Gibraltar, though some greater design was very visible.

In these circumstances the Parliament of 1726-27: Great-Britain met, on the 17th of January. The King opened the Session with a very long, lively, and pathetic speech, but, at the same time, extremely offensive to the Princes of whom mention was made. The speech was as follows: King George.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Acquainted you last year with the treaties of peace and commerce concluded between the Emperor and the King of Spain. As that sudden and unaccountable conjunction gave, at the first appearance, just grounds of jealousy and apprehension to the neighbouring powers of Europe, and the subsequent proceedings and transactions in those two Courts, and the secret and offensive Alliances concluded between them about the same time, have laid the foundations of a most exorbitant and formidable power, and are so directly levelled against the most valuable and darling interests and privileges of this Nation, that we must determine either tamely to submit to the peremptory and unjust demands of the King of Spain in giving up Gibraltar, and patiently to acquiesce in the Emperor's usurped and extended exercise of trade and commerce, or must resolve to be in a condition to do ourselves justice, and to defend our undoubted rights against those reciprocal engagements, entered into in defiance and violation of all the national faith and the most solemn treaties.

"I have likewise received information from different parts, on which I can intirely depend, that the placing the Pretender upon the Throne of this Kingdom is one of the articles of the secret engagements: And if time shall evince, that the giving up the trade of this Nation to one power, and Gibraltar and Port-Mahon to another, is made the price and reward of imposing upon this Kingdom 1726-27. " a Popish Pretender: What an indignation must this raise in the breast of every Protestant Briton!

"a Popish

" Nor were these fatal combinations confined to those parts of the world alone, but they extended themselves into Russia; and, had not the designs of that Court against some of their neighbours been prevented, by the seasonable arrival of our fleet in those seas, a way had been opened for invading those Kingdoms, and giving a powerful assistance to any attempt to be made from other quarters.

" Such circumstances would not suffer Me and my Allies, among whom there has been and is the most perfect harmony, union, and concert, to be idle spectators, and regardless of our own safety, and the common cause of Europe; for which purpose his most Christian Majesty has been at a great expence, this last year, in augmenting his forces; and the States-General, sensible of the imminent danger, have not only acceded to the defensive Alliance concluded at Hanover, but have come to strong and seasonable resolutions for an extraordinary augmentation of their forces both by sea and land. The Accession of the Crown of Sweden is in such a forwardness, and the Negotiations with the Crown of Denmark are so far advanced, that we may reasonably depend upon the success and good effect of them.

" This short view of the present posture of affairs, will, I am confident, not only secure to Me the support and assistance of my Parliament, in carrying on this great and necessary work, in conjunction with my Allies, but justify the measures hitherto taken, and the expences already made.

" The confidence, you reposed in me last year, has been made use of for the benefit of the public: And as the chief article of exceeding has by my equipping and sending to sea three considerable squadrons, fallen upon the head of the Navy, I am persuaded the necessity of the services, and the security, advantage, and glory, that has accrued to this Nation from those squadrons, will sufficiently speak for themselves, as long as both friends and foes, with joy and concern, confess they have seen and felt the effects of the naval power of Great-Britain.

" It is not to be wondered at, that the Princes engaged in these enterprizes are very much disturbed to see their projects rendered abortive. The King of Spain, impatient of the disappointments he has met with, can no longer disguise that enmity to us, which for some time he has only waited for a favourable opportunity to declare. He has now ordered his Minister residing here to depart immediately from this Country, leaving a memorial, that is little short of a declaration of war, wherein he again demands and insists upon the restitution of Gibraltar. He does not himself deny the offensive Alliance, nor his engagements to support the Osind Company. He makes my recalling those squadrons, which his conduct has put me under a necessity of sending to the West-Indies, and the coast of Spain, the condition of any further correspondence between the two Crowns; and supposing the continuance of my fleets abroad to be actual hostilities, threatens to repel them with force, to the utmost of his power.

" But, not content with these menaces, insults and infractions of treaties, his Catholic Majesty is now making preparations to attack and besiege Gibraltar; and in order to carry on that service, or to cover another design, has assembled a great body of troops in that neighbourhood. But as the present state and condition of that garrison, with the reinforcement I have ordered thither, give me little cause to apprehend, or my enemies to hope for success in that undertaking, the certain and undoubted intelligence I have, that it is now resolved to attempt an invasion upon these Kingdoms in favour of the Pretender, by an embarkation from the coasts of Spain, gives me reason to believe, that, though the siege of Gibraltar may probably be undertaken, the public, avowed, and immense preparations made for that purpose are chiefly calculated to amuse the world, and to disguise the intended invasion, which I am surely informed has been for some time agreed to be the first step and beginning of the long premeditated rupture.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

" These considerations must awaken in you all such a sense of our common and immediate danger, as will, I doubt not, inspire you with a zeal and cheerfulness in raising the Supplies necessary for the defence of your Country, and for making good our engagements with our Allies.

" I received too much satisfaction from the happiness of my people in their full enjoyment and future prospect of peace, ease, and prosperity, not to be sensibly affected with these new convulsions, and the unavoidable necessity I am under of asking larger Supplies of my people, and of desiring to be enabled to make such an augmentation of my forces by sea and land, as the present exigency of my affairs requires.

" I will order the proper estimates to be laid before you, and such treaties as I have made with foreign Princes for the hire of foreign troops: And as the expence, I was last year in a particular manner intrusted to make, has amounted to no inconsiderable sum, and the public utility may again require the like services to be performed, I hope you will again repose the same trust and confidence in me.

" It is with great pleasure that I see the time so near approaching, when such a considerable addition will be made to the sinking fund. Let all, that wish well to the peace and quiet of my Government, have the satisfaction to see, that our present necessities shall make no interruption in the progress of that desirable work of gradually discharging the national debt. I hope therefore you will make a provision for the immediate application of the produce of the sinking fund to the uses for which it was so wisely contrived, and to which it stands now appropriated.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I have had no thoughts of making any ac-quittions

1726-27. " quilibet to any part of my Dominions. My whole care and concern has been to preserve and maintain the undoubted rights and privileges of my people; and therefore all my measures have been preventive and defensive. But, such endeavours being now rendered impracticable, vigorous resolutions, and a speedy execution of them, can alone put an effectual end to the dangers that surround us. However hazardous and desperate the enterprizes formed against us may appear to be, your being assured that they are resolved upon, will, I am persuaded, be sufficient to prevail upon you, to put yourselves in a condition to resist and defeat them.

" If preserving a due balance of power in Europe; if defending the possessions of the Crown of Great-Britain, of infinite advantage and security to our trade and commerce; if supporting that trade and commerce against dangerous and unlawful incroachments; and if the present Establishment, the Religion, Liberties, and Properties of a Protestant people, are any longer considerations worthy of the care and attention of a British Parliament, I need say no more to incite my loyal and faithful Houses of Parliament to exert themselves in the defence of all that is dear and valuable to them."

The zeal and indignation raised by this speech was so great, that, in the addresses of thanks, words were wanted to express the deep resentment at the insults offered the King, at the invasions of the most valuable branches of trade, at the designs formed against the Nation, and to applaud the wise measures taken by the King, to prevent the destructive designs against the liberties of Europe. However, when the address was moved for in the House of Commons, it was opposed by Mr. Pulteney and others. They urged, 'That the matter of peace and war is of the greatest weight that can fall under their consideration: That, as his Majesty's speech contained many points of the highest moment and importance, so no doubt his Majesty, in his great wisdom and goodness towards his people, expected, on this occasion, not only the support, but likewise the advice of that House: That, in order thereto, they ought maturely to deliberate on those several heads, which could not be done, before several papers were communicated to them, that seemed absolutely necessary to state some facts relating to those weighty matters: That the motion, as it was drawn up, implied an approbation of measures taken to prevent dangers; which seemed preposterous, before they knew either what those measures were, or whether those dangers were real: That therefore they ought, for the present, to content themselves with returning his Majesty the most humble thanks of the House, 1726-27. for his most gracious speech, with assurances of supporting his Majesty in all just and necessary measures; and appoint a day for taking the speech into consideration.' To this it was answered in general, 'That delays were often dangerous, and might be fatal in the present situation of affairs, which required vigorous and speedy resolutions, both for the encouragement of our Friends, and the perfecting some Alliances, that were already in great forwardness, and for the discouragement of our Enemies, who had already blocked up Gibraltar, and threatened it with a siege: That the measures, that had been taken, were but a consequence of the last year's resolution, which the House had come to, after a full examination and mature consideration of the state of affairs, then laid before both Houses by his Majesty: But that, however, such an address, as was proposed, did not preclude a further inquiry into those matters.' As the promise of restoring Gibraltar was mentioned in some of the speeches, Sir Robert Walpole said, 'That, such a promise not having been made, while he had the honour to be in the Administration, he could say nothing to it: That, if such a promise was ever made, he durst aver, that it was conditional, and made void and invalid by the King of Spain's refusing to comply with the conditions on which it was made; and that, whenever the performance of that promise was mentioned to him, as insisted on by the King of Spain, he always delivered it as his fixed and positive opinion, That Gibraltar could not be given up without the consent of Parliament.' After the debate, the address was carried by 251 against 81.

The Commons, pursuant to the King's desire in his speech, applied themselves to the affair of the Supplies. It was unanimously resolved to grant 20,000 seamen, and to augment the land-forces to 26,383 men. To delay the expence of the fleet and army, Sir Robert Walpole proposed a tax of four shillings in the pound on land. This was opposed by some Members, who alledged, That it was more eligible to apply the produce of the sinking fund towards the present occasions; but the land-tax was voted (1).

The warmest debate this Session was in the House of Lords, on the 24th of January, all the Peers in London having been summoned to attend: In a Grand Committee, of which the Lord de la War was Chairman, the Clerk was directed to read the titles of the papers that had been laid before the House, consisting chiefly of letters and memorials between the Ministers of Great-Britain, France, and Spain, and the act of accession of the States to the Hanover treaty. This done, the debate was opened by the Lord Batburs, whose speech, and the Lord Townshend's answer, were as follow: The Lord Batburs began

(1) The whole Supply of this last year of King George was as follows:

	l.	s.	d.		l.	s.	d.
Jan. 24. For 20,000 seamen	1,040,000	0	0	— 14. For half-pay Officers	60,000	0	0
— 26. For 26,383 land-men	885,494	9	4	— For Chelsea Hospital out-pensioners	4,847	2	0
— For garrisons in the Plantations, Minorca, Gibraltar, &c.	157,637	6	5	— For arrears to the Landg. of Hesse	50,000	0	0
— For ext. expences not provided for	30,750	19	5	— For 12,000 Hessians	170,000	0	0
Feb. 2. For the Office of Land-Ord.	100,000	0	0	— For deficiency of funds	160,306	17	5
— For the Ordinary of the Navy	199,071	7	8	March 21. For making good the deficiency of the general fund	54,196	7	9
No. 102. Vol. IV.
					2,998,104	11	0

1726-27. gan with taking notice, ' With what caution and circumspection the States-General had acted in this whole affair. That they had not fully acceded to the treaty of Hanover, since they had formally and expressly excused and discharged themselves from the general guarantee of the treaties of Westphalia and Oliva, in which, they said, they were never engaged. And, as to the business of Thorn, they had only promised to employ their friendly offices for obtaining a reasonable satisfaction. So that they acceded only upon account of the 5th and 6th articles of the treaty of Munster, for preserving and maintaining their right and respect to commerce; whereas, by the treaty of Hanover, Great-Britain and France stood engaged to guarantee to the Dutch, not only the 5th and 6th articles of the peace of Westphalia, but likewise the barrier treaty, and the treaty of Oliva, in favour of the Protestants of Germany. And thus, in short, the Dutch having engaged themselves to nothing, what they had done, did not deserve the name of accession, the rather because they had made it an express condition, that their act of accession should be approved and ratified by the King of Great-Britain, the most Christian King, and the King of Prussia. But, though this last Potentate was one of the principal contractors in the treaty of Hanover, yet, no mention being now made of him, he could not tell what to make of it. That it seems his Minister had refused signing the act of accession, probably upon account of the Dutch excusing themselves from the general guaranty. But, let his reasons for receding from his engagements be what they would, his example might be of dangerous consequence; for by a letter from the Duke de Bourbonville, the Spanish Minister at Vienna, it appeared, that they were not without hopes at the Imperial Court, that France might thereby think herself disengaged from the Hanover Alliance; in which event Great-Britain alone must bear the burden of an expensive war with two of the greatest Potentates in Europe. That, the Dutch receiving far greater advantages than Great-Britain, from the East-India trade, and consequently being more concerned than we in the suppression of the Ostend Company, they ought, at least, to bear an equal share with us in the expences of this war, and guarantee to us the possession of Gibraltar, in the same manner, as Great Britain guarantees to them their barrier. That, after all, he did not see any just reason for a rupture with Spain. That indeed the Duke de Ripperda might have dropped some indecent and indelicate expressions; but he was known to be a hot-headed man; and Princes have a right to disavow the indiscretions of their Ministers, which the King of Spain had done in a most solemn manner, with relation to Ripperda. That it was well known, that violent Ministers do many unaccountable things. And, if their idle talk and foolish expressions were a just foundation for war, Nations would ever be at daggers drawing. That, for some time past, the Emperor had been treated here very cavalierly by some persons; and that, in the memorial the Marquis de Pozzobuono left behind him, at his departure, it was suggested, That the violent state, in which affairs are now reduced, is owing to the Ministers of England. That, in the same memorial, mention is made of a positive promise made by the King of Great-Britain for the restitution of Gi- braltar; which could not be supposed to be said without any foundation; and therefore it would be agreeable to inquire, whether, in reality, such a promise was ever made; and whether any thing like it was mentioned in the treaty concluded at Madrid? That, let that matter stand how it would, and possible methods of an amicable accommodation ought, in his opinion, to be tried before they engaged in a war, which, in our present circumstances, might be attended with very dangerous consequences. That the Nation is loaded with a debt of above fifty millions. But, though they are told of a sinking fund applied to the gradual discharge of that heavy burden, yet it was more to be wished than expected, that the operation of that wise contrivance should suffer no interruption by the exigencies inseparable from a war. That one of our best Mathematicians has computed, that, in ever so good a rate above five millions in a year, it will inevitably be exhausted and runed in a few years. Now if, at this juncture, we should enter upon a war, and not meddle with the sinking fund, according to the scheme of those in the Administration, they must be obliged to raise, at least, seven millions a year upon the people of England; the consequence of which was obvious and glaring to any one, who admitted the principle of that great Mathematician. That, in some of the papers laid before the House, mention was made of great sums of money distributed in divers places, to bring some measures to bear. That, for his own part, he had touched neither Spanish nor English gold. He was neither a Spaniard, nor a Frenchman, but a true Englishman, and, as long as he had the honour to sit in that House, he would speak and act for the good of his Country. That therefore he would sum up all he had said, with earnestly desiring their Lordships seriously to consider the matter before them, which was of the last consequence and importance to the whole Nation. What (said he) can we get by a war, if it be a successful one? I will say it in one word, nothing. What can we lose, if it be unprosperous? I will say it in one word, in a syllable, all."

This speech was answered by the Lord Townshend, who said, ' That the treaty of Hanover, being purely defensive, had made no alteration in the treaties subsisting before, either between the contracting Powers, or other Princes and States. That the true aim and intention of this Alliance was a reciprocal guaranty for the protecting and maintaining the Dominions and Countries, both in and out of Europe, whereof each of the Allies was actually possessed at the time of the signing this Alliance. So that, by acceding thereto, the Crowns of Great-Britain and France became guarantees of the 5th and 6th articles of the treaty of Munster, by which the Dutch are intitled to exclusive rights and privileges of trade in the East-Indies. But that this guaranty was reciprocal between Great-Britain and the States-General, since, by the treaty of 1667, Spain had granted to England the same rights and privileges, which the Dutch enjoyed by the 5th and 6th articles of the treaty of Westphalia. That therefore the suppressing of the Ostend Company, which manifestly invaded those exclusive rights and privileges, was become a common cause between us and the Dutch. That our concern therein is almost equal to theirs; since our East-India trade brings about 300,000*l.* a year

1726-27. a year into the Customs; which being part of the general mortgage, if so considerable a branch of trade should be lost, that yearly sum would be taken from the sinking fund. That by former treaties Great-Britain was guarantee to the Dutch for their barrier in the Netherlands, as reciprocally, by the same treaties, they were guarantees to Great-Britain for the Protestant Succession. So that, in those respects, we stood no more engaged to them, than they to us. That, indeed, by their act of accession to the Hanover Alliance, the States-General exempt themselves from the general guaranty of the treaties of Westphalia, and Oliva, to which they never stood engaged; but, nevertheless, by the same act, they engage themselves to employ, jointly with Great-Britain, and France, their friendly offices for obtaining a reasonable satisfaction and reparation as to the infractions, which might have been made in the treaty of Oliva; which is as much as the contracting powers have engaged themselves to by the first secret article of the treaty of Hanover, and is indeed as little, as the Protestant Potentates could do, in commiseration of the severities lately exercised against the Protestants of Thorn. That as to the idle talk and indecent expressions of Duke de Ripperda, they were not alledged as a just foundation for a rupture with Spain, but only as pregnant and corroborating indications of an offensive Alliance between that Prince and the Emperor, of which there were such convincing proofs, as left no room to doubt it. That, as to the secret article of that Alliance in favour of the Pretender, his Majesty had received from several parts such positive and concurring informations, that, if the safety of the State permitted to lay those advices before the House, they would no more question the certainty of such an article, than it they had been present at the signing of it. But he hoped that illustrious Assembly would not think any of his Majesty's servants, who had the honour to sit among them, so audacious, as to tell them downright untruths, or to presume to impose upon their Lordships, by alledging facts of so great importance, without sufficient vouchers. That, as to the other articles of the secret offensive alliance, relating to the supporting of the Offend Company, and the restitution of Gibraltar, the King of Spain and his Ministers were so far from denying them, that, on the contrary, they did not scruple publicly to avow and justify them. That therefore his Majesty could not, in prudence, but take early and proper measures to oppose an Alliance, so directly levelled against his Crown and Dignity, and invasive of most valuable rights and privileges acquired to his subjects by the most solemn treaties. That, at the same time, notwithstanding these high provocations, his Majesty shewed his inclination and disposition to an amicable accommodation; and, with this view, it was intimated to the Courts of Vienna and Madrid, that if the Emperor would remove the Offend Company to Trieste, or any other place in his Dominions, which did not heretofore belong to the Spanish Monarchy, Great-Britain would quietly acquiesce. But instead of accepting this proposal, those two Courts not only seemed resolved to support the Offend trade, but Spain, in the memorial lately presented by the Marquis de Pozzobuono insisted on the speedy restitution of Gibraltar, by virtue of a pretended positive promise, that exists no where; which put his Majesty and the whole Nation under the necessity of a vigorous self-defence.

After these and several other speeches, particularly by the Lord Bingley, who was answered by the Lord Carteret, it was resolved (by 98 against 25) 'That it fully appears to this Committee, upon consideration of his Majesty's speech, and the letters and memorials laid before the House, by his Majesty's order, That the measures his Majesty had thought fit to take, were honourable, just, and necessary, for preventing the execution of the dangerous engagements, entered into in favour of the Pretender; for preserving the Dominions belonging to the Crown of Great-Britain, by solemn treaties, and, particularly, those of Gibraltar, and the Island of Minorca; and for maintaining to his people their most valuable rights and privileges of commerce, and the peace and tranquillity of Europe.'

Against this resolution, a protest was entered by seventeen Lords; and the Lord Lechmere moved for an address to the King, 'to make new and pressing instances with his Prussian Majesty, and his other Allies, in such manner as the present critical and dangerous juncture requires.' But this motion was rejected, which occasioned another protest.

Mean time the Commons addressed the King, Proceeds for the accession of the States to the treaty of King of the Hanover, and for copies of the memorials, let. Commons. ters, answers between the British Ministers and the Courts of Vienna and Madrid. Some pushed matters farther, and moved for a copy of the memorial presented by Mr. Pointz to the King of Sweden, the 4th of June 1726, and also for the secret offensive article between the Emperor and the King of Spain; but both these motions were rejected. As the Court of Spain had persisted in the restitution of Gibraltar, pursuant to a promise made to that purpose, it was moved for an address for the declaration, letters, or engagements, which, in the Marquis de Pozzobuono's letter to the Duke of Norfolk, of the 21st of December last, is asserted to be a positive promise (1). This motion was supported

(1) The paragraph in the letter relating to Gibraltar was as follows:

'But as to what was then declared to Mr. Stanhope by word of mouth, and in writing, that the good correspondence and friendship with England depended absolutely on the speedy restitution of Gibraltar; I cannot avoid confirming it anew to your Excellency, by order from the King my Master, as a declaration most justly founded, insinuating on that restitution, after the King of Great-Britain, had on this point given, as he did give, a positive promise; besides that, on the other hand, the Cession, which his Majesty made precedently of that place, is become null, because of the infractum made in the conditions on which it was permitted that the English garrison should remain in possession of Gibraltar; seeing that, contrary to all the protestations made, they have not only extended their fortification, by exceeding the limits prescribed and stipulated, but what is more, contrary to the express and literal tenor of the treaties, they receive and admit the Turks and *Moor*s, in the same manner as the Spaniards, and other Nations confounded and mixed, contrary to our Holy Religion;

1726-27. ported by Mr. Pulteney, and opposed by Sir Robert Walpole, who did not disown, 'That such a promise might indeed have been made in a former Administration: But this he was sure of, that, if there was such a promise, it was upon certain conditions, which not having been performed within the limited time, it was thereby become invalid: And as for the declaration, or letter, the communication of which was insisted on, the same was altogether impracticable and unprecedented, the private letters of Princes being almost as sacred as their very persons.' After a debate, this motion was also rejected by a majority of 204 against 97. After this, the Lord Morpeth moved 'for an address for copies of all such memorials or representations to his Majesty from the Crowns of Sweden and Denmark, as did induce him to send the Squadron the last year into the Baltic.' This motion was opposed by Mr. Horace Walpole, who, in a long speech, justified all the steps that had been taken by Great-Britain, since his Majesty's Accession (particularly from the opening of the Congress at Cambray) to preserve the balance of power, the peace of Europe, and the tranquility of the North; and with this last view to prevent the Czarina's designs against Sweden and Denmark, in favour of the Duke of Holstein. Mr. William Pulteney answered his speech; but, the question being put upon the Lord Morpeth's motion, it passed in the negative by a majority of 196 voices against 79.

In the account how the money given for the service of the last year was disposed of, there was an article of the sum of 125,000 l. charged in general terms, as issued out for other engagements and expences, over and above such as were therein specified. Upon this it was resolved to address the King for an account of the disposition of that money; in answer to which the House was told, 'That the sum mentioned in the address was issued and disbursed, pursuant to the power given to his Majesty by Parliament, for necessary services and engagements, of the utmost importance to the trade and navigation of this Kingdom, and the tranquility of Europe; and which require the greatest secrecy, and therefore a particular account of the distribution of it cannot possibly be given, without a manifest prejudice to the Public.'

Mr. Pulteney, not satisfied with this answer, 1726-27. said, 'That, when the Commons, in the last Session, resolved to make good all such expences, as should be for the security of trade and navigation, and for the preservation of the peace of Europe, they did not divest themselves of their undoubted right of being acquainted with the disposition of public money: That, if they gave up so essential a right, that House would become altogether useless, to serve only blindly to approve of and register the acts and deeds of the Ministers: That he did not, in the least, doubt the disbursement of the 125,000 l. for necessary services: But that, if they were satisfied with such a general account, the same might in future Reigns prove a very dangerous precedent, and serve to cover embezzlements of the public treasure.' Then he moved for a further address for an account of that sum. But the question was carried against addressing, by 235 against 110; and, instead of it, it was resolved without a division, 'That an humble address be presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty the thanks of this House, for his great care and wisdom, in taking such steps, and entering into such engagements, as his Majesty thought would best conduce to the securing of the trade and navigation of this Kingdom, and to the preservation of the peace of Europe; and to assure his Majesty, that this House, placing an entire confidence in his Majesty's goodness and regard for the true interest of his people, will stand by and support his Majesty in all such further measures, as his Majesty shall find necessary and expedient for preventing a rupture for the honour and advantage of these Kingdoms.'

The King's speech was examined in other places ^{Palms',} as well as in the Parliament. The Court of ^{memorial} Vienna took great offence, and passed severe censures upon it. The imperial Resident at London was ordered to present a bold memorial to the King, and afterwards to publish it to the whole Nation, as an appeal to the People against their Sovereign. With it was published Count Zinzendorf's letter to Palms, which was still more injurious than the memorial (1).

The King had the satisfaction to see this me- ^{confuted in} memorial highly refuted by the Parliament. Both ^{Parlia-} Houses joined in an address, expressing their indignation Religion; not to mention the frauds and continual contrabands which are carried on there, to the prejudice of his Majesty's revenues.'

(1) The memorial was as follows:

Most Serene and Potent King,

'As soon as the speech, made by your Majesty to the Parliament of Great-Britain now assembled, came to the knowledge of his Imperial and Catholic Majesty, my most gracious Master; he was struck with the utmost astonishment, that your Majesty could suffer yourself to be prevailed upon to declare from the Royal Throne, to that most renowned Nation, in a manner hitherto unheard-of, as certain and undoubted facts, several things, some of which are strained in that speech to a wrong sense, some are intirely distant from the intentions of his Imperial and Catholic Majesty; and lastly (which affect much more sensibly than all the rest) some things absolutely void of all foundation.

For as to what regards the peace, concluded at Vienna, with the most serene King of Spain, who can forbear being astonished, that this very peace, which is built on the Quadruple Alliance, signed at London, and other treaties contracted with your Majesty, as its solid and sole foundation; and, for the obtaining of which peace, your Majesty, together with your Allies, waged so bloody, so long, and so glorious a war, and took yourself so much pains to procure, should now be alleged by your Majesty as a just ground of complaint, and should be made use of as a pretence for these things, which hitherto your Ministers have been doing in all parts, to the great detriment of the Emperor and the Empire, and the public tranquility, and should be represented by your Majesty to the British Nation, with so much animosity against the Emperor and King of Spain, as a violation of treaties.

After complaining of the peace made at Vienna, complaint is likewise made of the treaty of commerce entered into with Spain, which is calculated to promote the mutual and lawful advantages of the subjects of both parties, which is agreeable to the law of Nations, and to the customs of all people in amity with each other; which can in no respect be of any prejudice to the Bri-

1726-27. indignation at the affront offered to his Majesty, by the memorial of Mr. Palms, and at his insolence in dispersing the same throughout the Kingdom: Assuring, that this audacious manner of appealing to the people, and turning a memorial into a seditious libel, was a proceeding that created in them the utmost abhorrence and detestation.

‘The endeavouring (says the Address) to instil into the minds of any of your faithful subjects the least distrust or diffidence in your Majesty’s most sacred Royal word, or to make a distinction between your Majesty and your People, is an attempt as vain as presumptuous. If time has not effaced the memory of the glorious exploits, and important succours (conferred to have been received from Great-Britain) gratitude, affection and esteem for this Nation, will be best manifested, by doing honour to the King, whom the People honour, and justice to the People, whose rights and privileges the best of Kings is now defending, against the invasions and incroachments made upon them.’ Besides this address, the Lord Townshend sent a letter in the King’s name to the Emperor’s Resident, ordering him forthwith to depart the Kingdom.

About the same time Monsieur de Chavigny, the French Minister at the General Diet of Ratisbon, presented a declaration to the Diet, affirming that the preparations, which were making in France, were only for the preservation of peace: That the guarantee of the treaty of Münster, in favour of the States, did not in any way concern the Germanic body: That, far from designing to invade the territories of Germany, the King of France on the contrary would exert himself to preserve their rights and privileges: That the report, as if his Ambassador at the Port had solicited the Turks to come to resolutions against the peace of the Empire, was a calumny: That he would faithfully observe the treaty of Westphalia: And hoped for a suitable return by the like sentiments and dispositions.

The Imperial Commissioners at the Diet were highly offended at this declaration, which was not registered according to custom, and they published a few days after an Imperial decree, full 1726-27. of invectives against the steps taken by the Courts of Great-Britain and France, particularly against his Britannic Majesty’s speech to his Parliament. Mr. Le Heup, the British Minister at Ratisbon, delivered the next day to the Diet a declaration of the same import with Chavigny’s, which raised a great ferment among the Imperialists, who loudly complained, ‘That this second declaration was manifestly intended as a personal insult to his Imperial Majesty, since it was presented in open defiance of his decree against the first.’ But to this it was answered, in behalf of the British Minister, ‘That he was not to take any public notice of his Imperial Majesty’s decree; and that such decrees, in what form or stile soever, cannot divert or interrupt foreign Ministers in the exercise of their functions, directed to the States of the Empire, and not to the Emperor; nor in the execution of the orders they may, at any time, receive from their respective Masters.’ The Imperial Ministers at Ratisbon made also a terrible outcry against an expression in the English and French Envoys memorials, wherein they call the charge against the Kings their Masters, as if they had endeavoured to excite the Ottoman Port against the Emperor, by no soter a name than that of Calumny; which was so warmly refuted, that the Imperialists gave out, There could be no reconciliation between the Emperor and the King of Great-Britain, till satisfaction was made for that affront.

The King at this time had the satisfaction of Sweden hearing the King of Sweden’s Accession to the treaty of Hanover. This Accession was signed the 14th of March, at Stockholm. The King of Sweden was to furnish, when the case of the Alliance should happen, three thousand foot and two thousand horse: His guarantee was not to reach beyond the limits of Europe: The stipulated troops were not to be employed in Italy or Spain: His engagement was only with Great-Britain and France. The main point was the secret article, by virtue of which the two Kings, to shew their friendship to his Swedish Majesty, were tish Nation, whether we regard the situation of the Countries, or the particular nature of the trade, and which is not in the least repugnant to the treaties made with Great-Britain. So that, if this treaty be considered with a mind free from prejudice, and from all design of inflaming the Nation, there will remain no pretence to say, that this treaty can be grievous or hurtful to a Nation for which his Imperial Majesty has the greatest affection and esteem, and whose glorious exploits and important succours no time will efface out of his memory.

The other head of complaint, which contains such things as are void of all foundation, relates principally to that imaginary Alliance, which in the speech is called offensive, and is there supposed to have been made against your Majesty, between the Emperor and King of Spain. But it will not only appear how groundless and frivolous this supposition is, from the offer lately made by his Imperial and Catholic Majesty, of entering into a Convention, De se mutuo non Offendendo, but will be entirely refuted by the consideration of the tenor of the treaty of Alliance and Friendship itself made with the Crown of Spain, and communicated in its whole extent to your Majesty when it was proper; from the words of which, whether the least shadow or appearance of an offensive Alliance can be drawn, is submitted to the judgment of the whole world.

No. 102. VOL. IV.

Another part of the complaint relates to the secret articles made in favour of the Pretender, whereof your Majesty asserts that you have certain and undoubted informations, by which articles it should have been agreed to set the Pretender on the Throne of Great-Britain. With what view, on what motive, and to what purpose, these informations, founded on the falsest reports, were represented to the people of Great-Britain, is not only easy to be understood by his Imperial and Catholic Majesty, but is obvious to the meanest capacity. But since the inviolable dignity and honour of such great Princes cannot suffer, that assertions of this nature, intirely unsupported by truth, should be advanced from the Royal Throne to the whole Nation, and to all Mankind; his sacred Imperial and Catholic Majesty has expressly commanded me, that I should declare to your Majesty, and to the whole Kingdom of Great-Britain, how highly he thinks himself affronted thereby, solemnly affirming, upon his Imperial word, that there exists no secret article nor convention whatsoever, which contains, or can tend to prove the least tittle of what has been alledged.

But that the secret designs, which lie concealed under a conduct till this time unheard of, may more manifestly appear, it must be observed, that the time is purposely taken for doing this, when a Negotiation is on foot at Paris, for composing the differences which 1726-27. were to pay at Hamburg, Amsterdam, or London, as Sweden should direct, the sum of 50,000 l. sterling for three years, or the value thereof, according to the Exchange, in half-yearly payments. In return for this mark of their friendship, the King of Sweden was to hold in readiness another body of 7,000 foot, and 3,000 horse, to be employed where the cases of the Alliance should render it necessary. Provided however, that, when their Britannic and most Christian Majesties should require the service of these 10,000 men, they should be in their pay, and liable to be recalled when Sweden should be in any real or imminent danger.

Treaty
with Denmark.

The King of Denmark did not accede to form to the treaty of Hanover, but signed an Alliance the 16th of April. The King of Denmark promised to keep on foot 24,000 men, ready to march upon the first advice of the motion of the Muscovites, or of any other troops that should come to attack Sleswick, and disturb the peace of Lower Saxony: The French King promised to pay to his Danish Majesty 350,000 Rix-dollars for four years, payable quarterly at Hamburg. As soon as the Danish army should march, the King of France was to take 12,000 men into his pay: His Britannic Majesty was to hold in readiness 12,000 men to join the 24,000 Danes, when they began to march, and to send a Squadron of ships to cover the Danish coasts upon the first advice of the motions of the Muscovite fleet. The French King was to hold in readiness at least 30,000 men to march or make diversions where it should be needful, and his Britannic Majesty engaged to have likewise in readiness another body of at least 12,000 men for the same purposes. If the King of Prussia should be attacked for refusing passage to the Muscovites, the contracting Kings were to join their armies in his defence. By the secret articles, the King of Denmark was not to dispose of any troops contrary to the interest of the two Kings. If the French King should desire to employ the 12,000 men in his pay, for affairs not relating to Denmark, but only to his own service, or that of the treaty of Hanover, in such cases they should be allowed for the service of his most Christian Majesty. As the Muscovites, in order to trouble the peace of the Empire, must penetrate through Poland, his Polish Majesty was to be acquainted with the measures taken to hinder their coming into the Empire, and invited to stop the passes the Muscovites would take in his territories.

Convention with Hesse Cassel.

A Convention had likewise been made the last year with the Prince of Hesse, by which he was to hold in readiness, for the service of Great-Britain, eight thousand foot and four thousand horse. He was to maintain these troops at his own charge for two years. As the Landgrave had not so many troops on foot, and was to be at a great expence in levying what was wanted, as well as in remounting the cavalry, the King promised to pay him 75,000 l. sterling after the ratification of the Convention, and 50,000 l. in the February following, or before, in case the troops should be required. For the subsidies, pay, and subsistence of these forces when they should serve, they were to be settled according to the treaty made at London in 1722. France came not into this treaty, so the whole expence fell upon England.

As these treaties were very expensive, an opportunity was taken, when the Commons were debating, on the malt-bill, to have it moved by Mr. Scroope, Secretary of the Treasury, 'That a clause of appropriation should be received, empowering the King to apply such sums as should be necessary for defraying the expences and engagements as had been, or should be made before the 25th of December next, in concerting such measures as he should think most conducive to the security of trade and navigation, and restoring the peace of Europe.' Upon this arose a very long and warm debate. It was said, in support of the motion, 'That his Majesty was so unwilling to put his subjects to any extraordinary expences, that he had demanded no more Supplies this Session, than what he thought absolutely necessary for the service of the year: But, in the present posture of affairs, some unforeseen accidents might require a further expence, for which no estimate could now be made, because some treaties, his Majesty thought fit to enter into, were not yet finished. Therefore they ought to enable him to answer such contingences. That the House had several times reposed the same confidence in him, which he had never abused: And what was now asked was only for a short time.' On the other hand it was urged, 'That the asking and granting Supplies without an estimate was unparliamentary: That the clause moved for was inconsistent with that part of the bill, which forbids the issuing of the Supplies thereby granted to any other purposes than those specified, and rendered ineffectual that appropriation of the public money, which the wisdom of all Parliaments had thought a necessary security against the misapplication of it: Which was the more to be feared, because no provision was made to oblige any person

1727.

Motion for a clause in the malt-tax.

have arisen without any fault of his Imperial and Catholic Majesty; which Negotiation sufficiently shews how much his Imperial and Catholic Majesty is at all times inclined to peace, and to the religious observation of his treaties.

As to what is said of Gibraltar, and concerning the siege thereof, under which in the speech it is insinuated, as if some other design was concealed; the hostilities notoriously committed in the Indies, and elsewhere, against the King of Spain, in violation of treaties, seem to have given a very just occasion to the King of Spain, for attempting that siege. But, as to the intentions and engagements of the Emperor upon that article, it is easy to see what they are, by the treaty above-mentioned, which has been communicated.

As to what is said in the last place, concerning the Ostend trade, which the goodness of the Catholic King induced him to favour (being bound by no treaty) after he had been apprized of the just reasons for the establishment of it, various expedients for a composition have been proposed, not only at the Hague, but even lately at Paris, lest this harmless method of providing for the security of the barrier should prove an obstacle to the common friendship of neighbouring powers.

Which things being thus, the injury offered to truth, the honour and dignity of his sacred Imperial and Catholic Majesty require, that they should be exposed to your Majesty, to the Kingdom of Great-Britain, and to the whole World. And his sacred Imperial Majesty demands that reparation which is due to him by all manner of right, for the great injuries which have been done to his Majesty, and to his Kingdom.

In the Collection of Jacob Tonson Esq. Impensis J. Waples, Cantuarii 1718

ALEXANDER POPE ESQ.

En the Possession of the Author - Lond. - Amman - and the nearest Indes

1727. person to account for any money, that shall be disposed of, by virtue of the power in this clause. That vast sums had already been granted, which appeared sufficient to answer any occasions, as far as their present views could reach; and, if any unexpected emergency should demand a further Supply, that might be provided for in the usual manner, when necessity required. That this might be done with less inconvenience, and with less danger of misapplication, than by such a delegation of almost a dictatorial authority to the Ministers. That this Parliament had already given so many instances of their zeal and affection for his Majesty, that there could be no room to doubt of their readiness to make good whatever he should expend in concerting such measures, as he should think most conducive to the advantage and interest of his people. That such an unlimited and absolute power ought never to be given in a free Government, but upon occasions of evident necessity, when the very being of the Government is in imminent danger. That the reposing a confidence in the Crown in the disposition of such immense sums of money, as by the advice of unthrifty Ministers may be expended, might be attended with great prejudice to the properties of the subjects, and great danger to our most excellent Constitution, which cannot be preserved but by a strict adherence to those essential Parliamentary forms of granting Supplies only upon estimates, and of appropriating the same to services and occasions publicly avowed and judged necessary. That the departing from these excellent methods would by degrees render Parliaments altogether useless. That the precedents alledged to justify this clause were far from being full to the point, and satisfactory; and, if they were, ought not to be followed, lest clauses of the same nature might become so frequent, as in time to lodge in the Crown, and in the Ministers, an absolute and uncontrollable power of raising money upon the people, which by our wise Constitution is, and with safety can only be, lodged in the whole Legislature.* The debate being ended, Mr. Scrope's motion was carried by a majority of 225 against 109; and the clause was added to the malt bill; which being sent up to the Lords, occasioned the like debate there as in the House of Commons, but was at last carried by a majority of 76 against 20 (1).

Two days after it was moved by Sir William Motion for raising part of the Supply in the coal-tax. Longe, 'That, towards the Supply granted to the King, the sum of 370,000*l.* should be raised by loans on Exchequer bills, to be charged on the surplus of the duties on coal and culm, which was reserved for the disposition of the Parliament.' This motion was strenuously opposed; and particularly by Mr. Pakeney and Sir Joseph Jekyll. They objected, 'That, by several votes and acts of Parliament, all the exceedings or surpluses of public funds were to be applied towards the lessening of the public debts, or to the increase of the sinking fund. That this disposition could not be altered without wounding public credit, which was already extremely low, since the taking off any part of the mortgage, could not but lessen the security of the debt. That it was somewhat strange, such a motion should be made by those very persons, who had the honour of being in the Administration, who could not have forgot, what his Majesty had so strongly recommended from the Throne at the opening of this Session, That the produce of the sinking fund might be immediately applied to the uses, for which it was so wisely contrived, and to which it now stands appropriated. And that this motion was still the more surprising, after the large vote of credit, the House had so lately come to.' To all this it was answered, that the surpluses in coals could not be deemed a part of the sinking fund, since they had never been appropriated, but were reserved for the disposition of Parliament. Upon which the motion was carried by a majority of 209 against 82 (2).

On

(1) It may here be observed, that these Clauses of appropriation have been by some late Writers confounded with votes of credit, which are of very different nature. Votes of credit were frequent in King William's first war, and when, at the beginning of a Session, money was wanting, for providing for the services of the next year, before the Supplies were granted, or any money-bills could pass, the Commons came to votes that gave the Crown a power to borrow money to a certain sum, and at a certain rate, to be repaid out of the first Supplies to be granted that Session: These were properly votes of credit, upon which money was advanced before the Supplies were granted or raised by act of Parliament.

But a clause of appropriation is not a power given to borrow or raise money by a vote of the House of Commons, but a power given, by authority of the Legislature, and by act of Parliament, to apply or dispose of some part of the Supplies (raised by law) to particular uses or services, not specified in the estimates or resolutions of Supplies, at the discretion of the Crown, upon future emergencies, or such services, as, by the nature of them, cannot properly, or without danger of rendering them ineffectual, be explained or laid before a House of Commons.

There are many instances of this method of granting money; particularly in the year 1706, a latitude is given in the clause of appropriation of the Supplies of that year, 'to pay sums due upon treaties made or to be made, and other charges of the war, for any time before or till the 25th of December 1706, which method was continued several years successively.'

This is a method, no doubt, that ought not to be wantonly or frequently practised. The grounds and foundation, upon which such a confidence should be allowed, ought to arise from a supposition, that services may occur that are unforeseen, and therefore could not be provided for; that opportunities may offer which may be unexpected and sudden, but very essential and decisive; that there are services, which, by the nature of them, must be kept secret, because, by being divulged, they would be disappointed; and that there are services which equally require the greatest secrecy, from the circumstances and situation of the persons with whom you transact, and this secrecy must equally extend to future times, as well as preceding times. There are, for instance, Princes, whose situation will not permit them to enter at once into offensive engagements, till a safe opportunity shall present, who will, in the mean time, be induced to accept private subsidies and supplies, to put themselves in a condition to declare, when called upon.

(2) As the affair of the coal-tax has been misunderstood and misrepresented, it may not be improper to put it in a clear light. In order to this it must be observed, that the sinking fund consists of the surpluses of the aggregate fund, the South Sea fund, and the general fund, and of these only*. In the act of 1 Geo. I. which establishes the aggregate fund, it is enacted, 'That all other public monies which after Michaelmas, 1715, shall shall 1727. On the 15th of May, the King put an end to the Session, with this his last speech to both Houses:

* See p.

535-536.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Acquainted you, at the opening of this Session, with the dangers which threatened this Kingdom, and the peace and liberties of Europe. I am now to return you my thanks for the zeal and dispatch, with which you have proceeded upon the several points I then recommended to your care; for the confidence you have reposed in me; and for the assurance you have given me of your support and assistance, in vindication of my honour, and in the maintenance and defence of the undoubted rights and privileges of this Nation, so openly and notoriously invaded and attacked.

"The siege of Gibraltar proves, beyond all dispute, the end and design of the engagements entered into by the Emperor and the King of Spain; but the preparations I had made for the defence of that place, and the bravery of my troops, will, I doubt not, convince them of the rashness and folly of that undertaking. However, the love of peace has hitherto prevailed upon me, even under this high provocation, to suspend, in some measure, my resentments; and, instead of having immediate recourse to arms, and demanding of my Allies that assistance, which they are engaged and ready to give me, I have concurred with the most Christian King and the States-General, in making such overtures of accommodation, as must convince all the world of the uprightness of our intentions, and of our sincere disposition to peace, and demonstrate to whole ambition and thirst 1727. "of power the calamities of a war are to be imputed, if these just and reasonable propositions are rejected. In the mean time, I have the pleasure to acquaint you, that the Crown of Sweden has acceded to the treaty of Hanover, and that the Convention between Me, his most Christian Majesty, and the King of Denmark, is actually signed.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"The vigour and cheerfulness you have shewn in raising so effectually, and upon such easy terms, the necessary Supplies for the service of the current year, are not only instances of your zeal and affection to me, but demonstrate the established credit, power, and strength of this Kingdom.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"It would have been a great satisfaction to me, if, before your separation, I had been able to speak to you more positively, and with greater certainty, upon the present posture and state of affairs. But, as you have now dispatched the public business, and as the season of the year requires your going into your respective Countries, I chuse rather to put an end to this Session, than to keep you any longer together unnecessarily. The provisions you have made, and the perfect union and harmony between Me and my Allies, will, I hope, enable me, by the Divine Assistance, either to withstand and defeat the designs of our enemies, if their conduct shall bring upon us the necessity of a war; or to improve the blessings of peace, if peace can, with justice, honour, and security, be obtained."

By

shall come into the Exchequer, not being appropriated or appointed to any use by any act of Parliament made, or to be made, shall be set apart and applied to, and for the uses by the present act declared, as likewise the overplus monies of the yearly sum of 700,000 l. per ann. established for the King's Civil List. By virtue of these clauses, the surplus of the Civil List revenues, and all public monies remaining in the Exchequer, not appropriated by any act made or to be made, were part of the aggregate fund; but, as they were left to be appropriated by any acts to be made, as well as made, and any surplus, at that time arising from the aggregate fund, was made disposable for the public use by Parliament, it is evident that any public debts and revenues which were not in themselves part of any of the three capital funds, the surpluses whereof constitute the sinking fund, as they might be carried to the sinking fund, as long as they remained unappropriated, so they might be disposed of to any other use or service by authority of Parliament. Now it will appear, upon examination, that the coal-duty made no part of the sinking fund. By the 9th of Queen Anne, the coal-duty was granted from Sept. 28, 1716, to Sept. 28, 1724, and made a fund for building fifty new Churches, &c. By 1 George I, the duty is continued for another year, to provide for the Ministers of the fifty new Churches. By 5 George I, the duty is farther continued, and a fund of 21,000 l. is granted for thirty-two years, for raising 360,000 l. for building Churches, &c. with an interest of 4 l. per cent; and another fund of 30,559 l. was created, for raising 500,000 l. by a lottery; and the further sum of 21,325 l. was applied, for completing the Supplies granted that Session. It is there enacted, "That all the surplus money of the coal duty, which should, at the end of any quarter, remain, during the said thirty-two years, after the aforesaid sum should be discharged, should be reserved for the disposition of Parliament, and should not be disposed of to any use, but by authority of Parliament, and according to such future acts, as should be passed for that purpose." This then was the state of the coal-duty in the year 1719: It was charged with two funds of 21,000 l. per annum, and 30,559 l. 14 s. per annum, when the produce of it was estimated at 70,000 l. per annum, which made a provision for the disposing the surplus necessary. This transaction was in 1719: The sinking fund was established in 1716; but if it had been the sense of the Parliament, that the coal duty, or any surplus of it, had belonged to the sinking fund, the provision for the disposition of the surplus had been unnecessary, or the direction, that is given by the act of Parliament, had been an invasion of the sinking fund; but we see in 1719 (in the infancy of the sinking fund, when it wanted assistance) 521,325 l. taken out of the coal-duty for the service of the year, and the surplus reserved for the future disposition of Parliament, which is an express exception of this surplus out of the sinking fund, because, by the act establishing the aggregate fund, this surplus might have been carried to that fund, and consequently into the sinking fund, which it is plain this restriction was purposely inserted to prevent, and to leave it to the discretion of future Parliaments, to make such use of this surplus, as they should from time to time think most conducive to the public good. Thus Mr. Pulteney and Sir Joseph Jekyll's objections, founded on the coal-duty's being part of the sinking fund, and those of others since, are entirely groundless.

1727.

1727.

Gibraltar
besieged.

By this speech it appears that, notwithstanding the preparations for war, as well by the Allies of Hanover, as by those of Vienna, overtures of accommodation had been made. All had declared, that the preservation of the tranquillity of Europe was the end of their armaments. This the Court of Spain did, at the same time that the siege of Gibraltar was ordered. The Conde de las Torres, Captain-General of the King of Spain's forces in Andalusia, opened the trenches before Gibraltar the 11th of February. He had an army of about twenty thousand men, and was well provided with artillery of all sorts, with ammunition, and warlike stores, proportioned to the strength of the place, and the bravery of the garrison, which the Spaniards expected would lengthen the siege. Colonel Clayton, Lieutenant-Governor of the place, had troops and necessaries sufficient for defence, till Supplies could come from England, for which due preparations had been made. Upon the repeated advices, that the Spaniards were preparing for the siege of Gibraltar, six men of war, the Kent, Lenox, Berwick, Royal Oak, Portland, and Tyger, were fitted out with all expedition. With these ships, and three regiments, Newton's, Disney's, and Anstruther's, Sir Charles Wager sailed in January. When the siege was begun, Colonel Stanhope, the British Ambassador in Spain, having received the passports, he had demanded of King Philip, set out from Madrid for Bayonne, in his way to England, having given the British Merchants in that Kingdom such timely notice to take necessary precautions for securing their effects, that, when orders came to the Spanish Governors to seize them, these Merchants suffered no considerable loss by that seizure. In the beginning of March, Colonel Hayes's and Colonel Middleton's regiment of foot were put on board the transports at Portsmouth, and sailed for Gibraltar, under convoy of the Torbay, Captain Haddock, and the Poole fireship. Colonel Clayton's regiment was about the same time ordered to embark in the river of Thames, and a draught of ten companies out of the first regiment of foot-guards was made by lot (1).

The Earl of Portmore, Governor of Gibraltar, notwithstanding his advanced age, having been a Colonel near forty years, resolved to repair to his Government, and embarked at Portsmouth, on board the Prince Frederick, appointed with the Falmouth (two seventy gun-ships) to convoy the transports, on which the detachment of the guards and Clayton's regiment were embarked. All these forces arrived at Gibraltar the beginning of April, as did likewise five hundred men from Minorca, who with the garrison formed a body of six thousand men, the greatest part of whom incamped on the South point without the town, while the rest did duty within, and were relieved from the camp. The besiegers threw a great quantity of bombs into the place, which did the less damage, as most of the houses were empty by the desertion of the old inhabitants. The garrison had store of salt provisions from England and Ireland, and of fresh from Barbary; for which purpose a frigate was ordered to be continually going to and from Tetuan and Tangier. Sir Charles Wager, having caused the ammunition and warlike stores, with twenty-four pieces of cannon, to be put on shore, sailed from Gibraltar to cruise with the Torbay, Sterling-Castle, Burford, Kent, Royal Oak, Canterbury, York, and Poole fireship, leaving there the Tyger, Winchester, Lyme, Solebay bombship, Thunder bombship, Cruizer and Harok sloops; which were joined by the Portland and Durley galley; the Colchester and Swallow being ordered to Port-Mahon to be cleaned. In this disposition of defence the siege of Gibraltar gave little pain to the English, either at home or abroad; while the Spaniards, in the prosecution of it, for four months lost above half their army by slaughter, sickness, and desertion.

About the same time the Court of Vienna having shewn a disposition to begin the war in the Netherlands, by attacking the Dutch barrier, the King ordered an augmentation of thirty companies of foot, and that the ten thousand auxiliaries, which England was obliged by treaty to send to the assistance of the States, should hold themselves in readiness for embarkation (2).

As the King of Sweden had acceded to the treaty of Hanover, Sir John Norris was sent with a considerable fleet to the Baltick, to support him in this new Alliance, so disagreeable to the Courts of Vienna and Russia. The English being joined by a Danish squadron, the Russian Court thought fit to put a stop to the equip-

(1) The lots fell on those of

Colonel Price,
Colonel Hastings,
Colonel Pearson,
Colonel Meyrick,
Colonel Duncombe,
Colonel Huswood,
Colonel Treby,
Colonel Brown,
Colonel Oughton,
Colonel Williamson.

The whole detachment to be under the command of Colonel Gust, Major in the said regiment. Of these, Colonel Treby resigned his commission, and was succeeded by Colonel Onslow; Captain Stan- hope, of the said regiment, also laid down his commission, and was succeeded in it by Mr. Parker.

(2) Of this number were Colonel Campbell's, Major-General Gore's, Brigadier Churchill's, and Major-General Honeywood's Dragoons; and two Battalions of guards commanded by Colonel Robinson, and Colonel Robinson's, Colonel Kirke's, Colonel Harrison's, Earl of Deloraine's, Sir James Wood's, Lord Tyrawley's, Colonel Pocock's, Colonel Murray's, and Colonel Grouse's regiment of foot. This body of forces were to be commanded by the Earl of Orkney, Commander in chief, the Duke of Argyle, General of the foot, the Lord Cobham and the Earl of Stair, Lieutenants-General. The Earl of Deloraine and Philip Honeywood, Major-Generals; Sir James Wood, Colonel Pocock, Colonel Kirke, Colonel Kerr, and the Earl of Scarborough, Brigadiers-General.

1727. equipment of their fleet, which was no more talked of after the death of the Czarina, on the 17th of May, about the time of Sir John Norris's arrival in the Baltic.

Preliminary articles agreed on. The Court of France, being equally concerned with England to prevent a war, augmented their troops, and formed incampments for the exercise of their militia. But, as the Hanover Alliance was only defensive, it did not exclude France from a mediation, which tended to adjust all the differences of the several parties. Accordingly, his most Christian Majesty undertook that office, which was conducted by the Duke of Richlieu, his Ambassador at Vienna. The Duke, in concert with the British and Dutch Ministers, drew up a project of accommodation, which was sent to the Emperor and the King of Spain. This scheme consisted of eight articles, which were to serve as preliminaries for a general Congress. The Emperor did not think proper to reject it, but formed a counter-project, which he sent to the Allies of Hanover. The Allies, judging it not satisfactory, formed their last resolution, in which they declared, they could make no alteration. The Emperor, pressed by the Duke of Richlieu, accepted, at last of the scheme, consisting of the twelve following articles:

I. His Imperial and Catholic Majesty having no other view, than to contribute to the public tranquility of Europe, and observing, that the commerce of Ostend has given birth to jealousy and uneasiness, consents, that there shall be a suspension of the Charter of the Ostend Company, and of all Traffic between the Austrian Netherlands and the Indies, during the term of seven years.

II. All rights or possessions shall remain intire to such of the contracting powers, as enjoyed them by virtue of the treaties of Utrecht, Baden, and the Quadruple Alliance, or the treaties and Conventions made before the year 1725, which regard neither the Emperor nor the States-General. But if any change has been made with relation to the said possessions; or if, in consequence of those Conventions, somewhat has not been executed, the change that has happened, or the points, which have not been executed, shall be discussed and decided in the future Congress, according to the tenor of the Treaties and Conventions.

III. Consequently all the Privileges of commerce in Europe, Spain, and the Indies, grounded upon treaties, and formerly enjoyed by the English and French Nations, and by the Subjects of the States-General, shall be restored upon the same foot, and settled in the same manner they were, particularly by the treaties preceding the year 1725.

IV. The powers of the North shall be invited and desired by their respective Allies, not to have recourse to hostilities; but, on the contrary, to embrace all reasonable methods of accommodation; and that, until the opening of the Congress hereafter mentioned, wherein all the respective differences shall be discussed, the contracting powers shall not contribute to any hostilities directly or indirectly, under any colour or pretence whatever, which may disturb the present state of affairs in the North; but, on the contrary, they shall engage to act in concert, to put an end to hostilities, if any should be commenced.

V. All hostilities whatsoever, if any should happen, shall instantly cease after the signing of the present articles; and with respect to Spain, eight day after his Catholic Majesty shall have received the articles signed. The ships, which sailed from Ostend to the Indies before this Convention, the names whereof shall be given in a list on the part of his Imperial Majesty, may return freely and safely from the Indies to Ostend; and, if any of these ships be detained or taken, they shall be restored bona fide, with their cargoes. The galleons also shall be permitted to return to Spain unmolested, in firm confidence, that his Catholic Majesty will, with regard to the effects on board the galleons and the flotilla, deal in the same manner as usual in all times of liberty. In consequence of this, the English squadron commanded by Admiral Hofier, shall depart as soon as possible from Porto-Bello, and all other ports of America belonging to the King of Spain: He shall even return with his squadron into Europe, that the subjects of his Catholic Majesty in the Indies may be free from all further apprehensions and uneasiness. The commerce of the English in America shall be carried on as formerly, according to the treaties. Moreover, the English, French, and Dutch squadrons, which may appear upon the coasts of Spain, or on those of the States of his Imperial Majesty, at the time when this present cessation of hostilities commence, shall depart thence as soon as possible, that the Inhabitants of those coasts may henceforth be rid of all disturbance and fear. Neither shall those ships be permitted to undertake any thing directly or indirectly against the said Port.

VI. This cessation of hostilities shall continue as long as the suspension of the Charter granted to the Ostend Company, viz. seven years, that the jarring interests may be reconciled in that time, and peace settled on a more firm foundation.

VII. If, after the signing of these preliminaries, any troubles or hostilities should happen between the subjects of the contracting powers, whether in Europe or the Indies, under what pretence soever it may be, they shall join together to get reparation of the damage or prejudice their respective subjects have sustained.

VIII. If these articles are accepted and signed, a Congress shall be opened in four months, reckoning from the day of signing at Aix la Chapelle, wherein the respective rights of all the contracting powers, and those invited to it, shall be examined, discussed, and settled.

IX. The Plenipotentiaries, that shall be named, shall have in their retinue no more than two Gentlemen, two Pages, and six Footmen, that they may be sooner ready for their journey, and to avoid pomp and expence.

X. The

1727. X. The Plenipotentiaries shall insist on no ceremonial, but follow the regulations settled at the Congress of Cambray, to obviate all disputes relating to rank: However, each shall have liberty left to protest.

XI. The several Powers shall earnestly recommend to their respective Plenipotentiaries, to avoid any thing trifling, that may in any wise retard the Congress.

XII. The ratification of these preliminary articles shall be exchanged in the space of two months, or sooner, if possible, reckoning from the day of signing.

These articles were first signed at Paris, the 20th of May, by the Minister of the Hanover Alliance, and afterwards at Vienna, by the Ministers of the Emperor and the King of Spain.

Cessation of arms at Gibraltar and elsewhere. The Emperor punctually executed the first of these articles, and ratified the preliminaries within the time agreed on. Though Aix la Chapelle was appointed for the place of Congress, it was afterwards transferred to Cambray for the convenience of the Minister of France, whose presence was necessary at that Court. The King of Spain also executed in part what concerned him; he gave orders for suspending all further attacks against Gibraltar, and all hostilities against the English elsewhere. This was an honourable way of abandoning a siege, which lasted four months without success; nor had it done much execution among the English, for they lost in all but three hundred and seventy-three men. The suspension of arms was signed the 23d of June, N. S. But, when the siege was on the point of being entirely raised, and the preliminaries to be ratified in form, Spain started new difficulties, and urged new pretensions. The Spaniards insisted, that a temporary suspension of arms did not imply an actual raising of the siege of Gibraltar: and that the restitution of the Prince Frederick, the South-Sea ship (taken at la vera Cruz, before Spain was in war with England) was not mentioned or included in the articles, whereas the English demanded both, by virtue of the preliminaries. Upon this hostilities began again between the ships of the two Nations, and Sir Charles Wager continued to cruise on the coasts of Spain, after the cessation of arms at Gibraltar. And what was very remarkable, whilst he was looking out with seven ships for the Spanish Galleons (which were said to be coming home) thirteen French men of war (six from Brest, and seven from Toulon) suddenly came and anchored before Cadiz, of which Squadron Admiral Wager had received no intelligence either from London or Madrid. As therefore he had no notice of their coming, all communication with the French fleet was forbid. However, after many cavils and delays, the preliminary articles were at last signed at Madrid, on the 24th of February, above eight months after the death of King George I., by the Ministers of the Emperor, England, France, Spain, and the States, which opened the way to the Congress (1).

King George had not visited his German Dominions these two years, and therefore, soon after the breaking up of the Parliament, he prepared for his journey to Hanover, where he thought

1727.

(1) To bring down these matters to the present time, it may be observed, that means were found to detach Spain from the Emperor, and a treaty was concluded at Seville, Nov. 9, N. S. 1729, between Great-Britain, France, and Spain. By this treaty Commissioners were to be appointed to examine at the Court of Spain, and decide about the captures on both sides, among which were reckoned the ships taken by the English fleet in 1718. That instead of neutral garrisons (as agreed to in the Quadruple Alliance) Spanish garrisons should be introduced into Leghorn, &c. for preserving the Succession of Don Carlos. This it was that induced the Queen of Spain to come into a treaty, which gave great offence to the Emperor, as it put an end to his subsidy from Spain, of about a million sterling a year. He thundered out complaints against it at all the Courts of Europe, and particularly by a commissitorial decree, directed to the Diet of Ratisbon. But it was to no purpose, for the treaty of Seville, with regard to the Emperor, and all other States, and the balance of power, varied in nothing from the Quadruple Alliance, but in substituting six thousand Spanish instead of so many neutral troops, for asserting the eventual Succession of the Infant of Spain to the Grand Duke's Dominions, to which the Emperor had agreed. However, the British Court offering to guarantee the Pragmatic Sanction, or the Emperor's settlement of his hereditary Dominions, on his eldest daughter, on his failure of issue male (which was thought necessary to preserve the balance of power) the Emperor was at last pacified. This produced the second treaty of Vienna, March 16, 1731, between the Emperor and Great-Britain, in which the States were included. By it the order of the Succession, settled by the Emperor, was guaranteed by Great-Britain and the States; the commerce and navigation to the East-Indies were to cease in the Netherlands, except two ships for once from Ostend: A tariff or new treaty concerning trade, and the rule of imports relating to the Austrian Netherlands, was to be settled by Commissioners at Antwerp: The introduction of Spanish garrisons into Leghorn, &c. was agreed to by the Emperor. Thus the Queen of Spain was pacified by the variation of neutral troops, and the Emperor was contented, by guaranteeing his Succession. The conclusion of these treaties gave hopes of a lasting tranquility: But the death of the King of Poland soon put an end to these hopes. The Emperor, in conjunction with Russia, espoused the quarrel of the Elector of Saxony, and supported an unfair election of a King forced upon a free Nation. This being opposed by France, a war broke out between their Imperial and most Christian Majesties, in which Great-Britain and the States stood neuter, as they did also in the differences which arose between Spain and Portugal. But, though Great-Britain and the States were not engaged in these disputes, they were both obliged to guard against events, which had a good effect. Our naval armaments struck terror into France and Spain alternately. The French durst not venture to the Baltic to relieve Dantzick, whilst our navy rid in the Downs, nor the Spaniards to insult, much less attack Portugal, whilst our fleet lay in the Tagus. At last, in order to adjust all differences between Great-Britain and Spain, the famous Convention was transacted by Sir Robert Walpole, but meeting with opposition was laid aside, and the present war with Spain ensued, which has brought on a war also with France.

1727. thought to enjoy the fruit of his labours in peace, or continue his endeavours for the good of the common cause. Having appointed the Lords Justices for the Administration of the Government, he embarked at Greenwich, on board the Carolina yacht, the 3d of June, attended by the Earl of Illy and the Lord Townshend. The King landed, on the 7th, at Vaert in Holland, where he lay that night. The next day he proceeded on his journey to Hanover; and, on the 9th of June, between ten and eleven at night, arrived at Delden, in all appearance in perfect health. He supped there very heartily, and eat an orange, but no melon, as was reported; and, having rested well that night, set out from Delden about four the next morning. Between eight and nine he ordered the coach to stop, in order to make water, and perceiving, that one of his hands hung motionless, said, I cannot move this hand. Monsieur Fabrice rubbed it with both his, but to no effect; upon which he called the Surgeon (who followed on horseback) who rubbed it also with spirits. In this interval the King's mouth and eyes began to move strangely, and his tongue to swell, so that he could not speak. The Surgeon, taking it for an apopleptic fit, opened a vein, and the King recovered his speech, so as to say, Hasten to Osnaburg; but immediately fell into a slumber in Fabrice's arms. As the violent motion of the coach could not keep the King awake, Fabrice asked the Surgeon, What he thought of him? Who answered, he despaired of his life. Fabrice ordered him to take care of him, and rid post himself from the last stage to Osnaburg, to prepare the Duke of Tork, the King's Brother, for such unexpected news. The King, being arrived there about ten, was immediately carried to bed, where he continued speechless and in agonies till two o'clock in the morning, on Sunday the 11th of June, when he expired in the 68th year of his age, and 13th of his Reign; and was interred at Hanover, among his Ancestors (1).

His circumstances and character.

Thus died George the First, who may truly be considered as more fortunate in more important circumstances of his life and affairs, than any Prince of the last or present century. This good fortune, which is often the reward of virtue, and as often the effect of prudence, attended him as well before as after his Accession to the Crown of Great-Britain. The establishment of the Electoral dignity in his Family, was a work which, though begun by his Father, was reserved for him finally to accomplish. A large accession of dominion fell to him by his succeeding to the Dukedom of Zell, whereby he became one of the greatest Princes of Germany, and by far the most powerful person that ever stood next heir to the British Throne. The Duchy of Bremen and the Bishoprick of Osnaburg considerably strengthened his interests in the Empire, and gave an additional weight to the Protestant cause.

But his good fortune appeared in nothing so remarkable as in the removal of those seemingly invincible obstacles to his Succession to the Crown of these Kingdoms. Queen Anne had high notions of Hereditary Right; and, in the latter part of her Reign, slavish doctrines in support of the indefeasibleness of that right, were avowed in numerous addresses. Preparations were made for the execution of purposes well understood, though not expressly avowed. The Ministers, and all, who had been the sure supports of the Hanover Succession, had been disgraced. Many favourable concessions were made to our often defeated enemies, who both by interest and inclination were the protectors and friends of the Pretender. The Administration of affairs was committed to the most daring and determined, and the Nation deluded into madness for destruction. But, amidst these apprehensions and dangers, the Queen's sudden and unexpected death gave the fortunate Elector of Hanover an easy and unmoilested Accession to the Throne.

King George did not labour under King William's first disadvantages. His and their Country's enemies were well known, and could with no colour of right demand confidence and power. After strong professions of submission and loyalty, many actually entered into Rebellion; and greater numbers wished it success. The murmurings and complaints, which were occasioned by the disgrace of the General and Ministry, who had raised the credit and glory of the Nation to an height before unknown, had been resented as unpardonable affronts to the Royal Prerogative: And yet, when the Successor removed those, from whom he had received many indignities, and of whose measures and designs to defeat him of his Royal dignity, he had many and undoubted proofs, this was represented as extreme partiality and injustice; and in public, and on the most solemn occasions, it was pleaded as a just provocation to Rebellion, and all punishments of the Authors of so much mischief and misery were opposed under the pretence of being acts of inhumanity and cruelty.

There are many circumstances not publicly known, which, if brought to the light, would demonstrate the King's extraordinary good fortune in defeating the Rebellion. Besides what broke out in the North, the associations and preparations in the South and the West were great and numerous. Caution, fearfulness, and delay prevented the execution of measures, which could hardly have failed of proving fatal to the Government. Such a multitude of enemies in so many places would have divided the troops, and have rendered the army insignificant in the defence of the whole. The march of part of the Rebels into England, their trifling at Preston, and their speedy defeat, were of unspeakable advantage, by effectually discouraging insurrections in many other places; whereas a few days march further would have very

(1) His wife, the Princess Sophia Dorothy, died November 2, 1726, at the Castle of Ablen, in the Electorate of Brunswick, where she had been confined many years. She was daughter and heiress of the Duke of Zell, born in 1666, and married in 1682.

1727. very much swelled their numbers, and given them a dangerous strength.

But nothing could be more fortunate to the King than the death of Levis XIV. of France. From him the Rebels would have received all sorts of Succours and Supplies. Bigotry and revenge animated the whole French Nation with unanimous zeal for the success of the Pretender. And even a minority, a contested regency, and the probable need which the Regent might have of our support, did not prevent all assistance. However, those circumstances proved a powerful restraint; and the situation of the neighbouring Nations was an eminent security to this reign. The utmost degree of aversion and jealousy subsisted between the Regent of France and the Court of Madrid; which was properly improved by destroying the growing naval power of Spain; and our surprizing and complete advantage in this affair utterly disappointed the vast designs of an able and enterprising Minister.

The Invasion and Rebellion, in 1719, are the less remembered, because not one person suffered death on that account. The Spanish fleet with five thousand soldiers suffered too much in a storm, as to be obliged to return home; but about four hundred of them landed in Scotland, where they were joined by a considerable body of Highlanders, but were soon defeated, by an inferior number of the King's forces.

The King of Sweden's death was far from being the least considerable of many favourable events; for, had that implacable Monarch lived, his designs against Denmark would probably have succeeded; and then he would have had full leisure and opportunity for transporting his hardy troops into Scotland.

But, on the other hand, how great and uncommon soever the King's good fortune was in removing all obstructions, and firmly establishing himself in the Throne, it was not without some alloy. Had his Succession taken place before the change of the Ministry, and the disgrace of the General, it would have been infinitely more happy, not only for the nation but for the lasting tranquility and liberties of Europe. France would then have been compelled to give up the Spanish Monarchy. By advantages in trading to the Dominions of Spain, in Europe and America, and by several concessions, we should have had ample means of repairing the losses sustained in a long and expensive war. The House of Bourbon had been reduced within their proper bounds, and ceased to have been the terror and scourge of their neighbours.

To this may be added, that King George came to a people, who had been corrupted both in their political and religious notions, and had been taught an aversion to our natural Allies, and to all foreign Protestants, while an esteem and affection for France, and a tenderness for many doctrines of popery had been infused into them with great success; and these prejudices had indisposed the Nation to submit to a Protestant Prince, while the dangers from a popish one were not attended to. The advantages likewise of a prosperous war, and many valuable branches of commerce had been given up or neglected; and the revenue was loaded with a very heavy debt. The Authors of these calamities had the art and assurance to impute the consequences of them to the King and his Ministers; and their peace-making had left Europe in such a state, and their principles infected the Nation to such a degree, that a good body of regular troops was absolutely necessary to the safety of the Nation; and yet this was exclaimed against as enslaving it.

No. CIII. Vol. IV.

The moderate and sure methods of discharging the public debts which had been offered, having been neglected, the South-Sea scheme took place to the great misfortune and disgrace of this Reign, as well as of the Nation in general; and though men of all parties and degrees upon this occasion equally renounced common sense and honesty, yet they transferred the whole blame from themselves to the Government. But whatever mistakes or misfortunes happened, they cannot justly be imputed to the King, whose integrity and good designs were eminent and undoubted, and his resolution to govern agreeably to our laws and constitution steady and unalterable; though the best understanding, and the best disposition are not always secure from the arts of bold and ambitious men.

With regard to the management of affairs abroad, a due attention was paid to the feeble and corrupt state of our Allies; and the eager and hasty disposition of the people for war, their perpetual complaints of the wisest conduct, caviling at the most affecting successes, soon growing weary of the expence, and longing for peace on any terms, were well considered; but at the same time the dignity and honour of the Nation were maintained in our methods of composing the disorders and disturbances; which was performed with as little expence and hazard as possible; and preventive and defensive measures were the wise and safe politics, the happiness and glory of this Reign.

As King James, instead of giving the laws their proper course, assumed a power to dispense with them: and as Queen Anne was flattered into a persuasion that the regal authority was unlimited. King George on the contrary, desired no power but what enabled him to promote the welfare of his subjects, and was too wise to deem those his friends, who would have made their court to him by the profession of an obedience which they never practised, and which has always proved fatal to those Princes who have put it to the trial. He had given a proof of his sovereign virtues before he exercised them in this Nation. His natural inclination to justice led him to rule his German subjects in the same manner that our constitution directed him to govern the English. He regarded civil liberties as the natural rights of mankind, and therefore indulged them to a people who pleaded no other claim to them than his known goodness. The consistency of his behaviour was such, that he inflexibly pursued those measures which appeared the most just and equitable. As he was most prudent in laying proper schemes, he was no less remarkable for his steadiness in accomplishing what he had once concerted. To this uniformity and firmness of mind which appeared in all his proceedings, ceedings, the successes that attended him were chiefly owing. His martial virtues were no less conspicuous than his civil, though for the good of his subjects he studied to decline all occasions of military glory. He had acquired great reputation in his younger days, in Hungary and the Morea, when he fought against the Turks, as well as in Germany and Flanders, where he commanded against the disturber of the peace of Europe. And, as if personal courage was an hereditary virtue of his family, three of his brothers fell gloriously in the field, fighting against the enemies of their country, and his son (his present Majesty King George II.) fought with the bravery of his father at the battle of Audenarde, when the sons of France and the Pretender fled before him.

As to his most private virtues, He was of a grave, easy, and calm temper, and generous upon all occasions; and the serenity and benignity of his mind discovered themselves in his countenance, and captivated the love and veneration of all, who approached him.

The End of the Reign of GEORGE I.

- Capital Cities.
- Large Towns.
- Archbishopsricks.
- Bishopsricks.
- Universities.
- Forts.
- Castles.
- Battles fought by the English.

R.W. Scale delin. et sculp.

A MAP OF ITALY

with its KINGDOMS, STATES &c.
from the latest & best Observations.

For Mr Tindal's Continuation of Mr Rapin's History.

EXPLANATION.
a Capital Cities.
+ Archbishops.
† Bishops.
! Universities.
† Castles.
P. Principality.
D. Dukedom.
R. Republic.

Italian & British Miles. 60 to a Degree.
German Leagues. 15 to a Degree.

For M^r. Tyndal's Continuation of M^r. Rapin's History

A MAP OF
NORTH AMERICA
With the European Settlements & whatever else is remarkable in WEST INDIES.
from the latest and best Observations.

EXPLANATION.
European Cities &
and Towns.
Indian Towns.
Forts.
Circles.

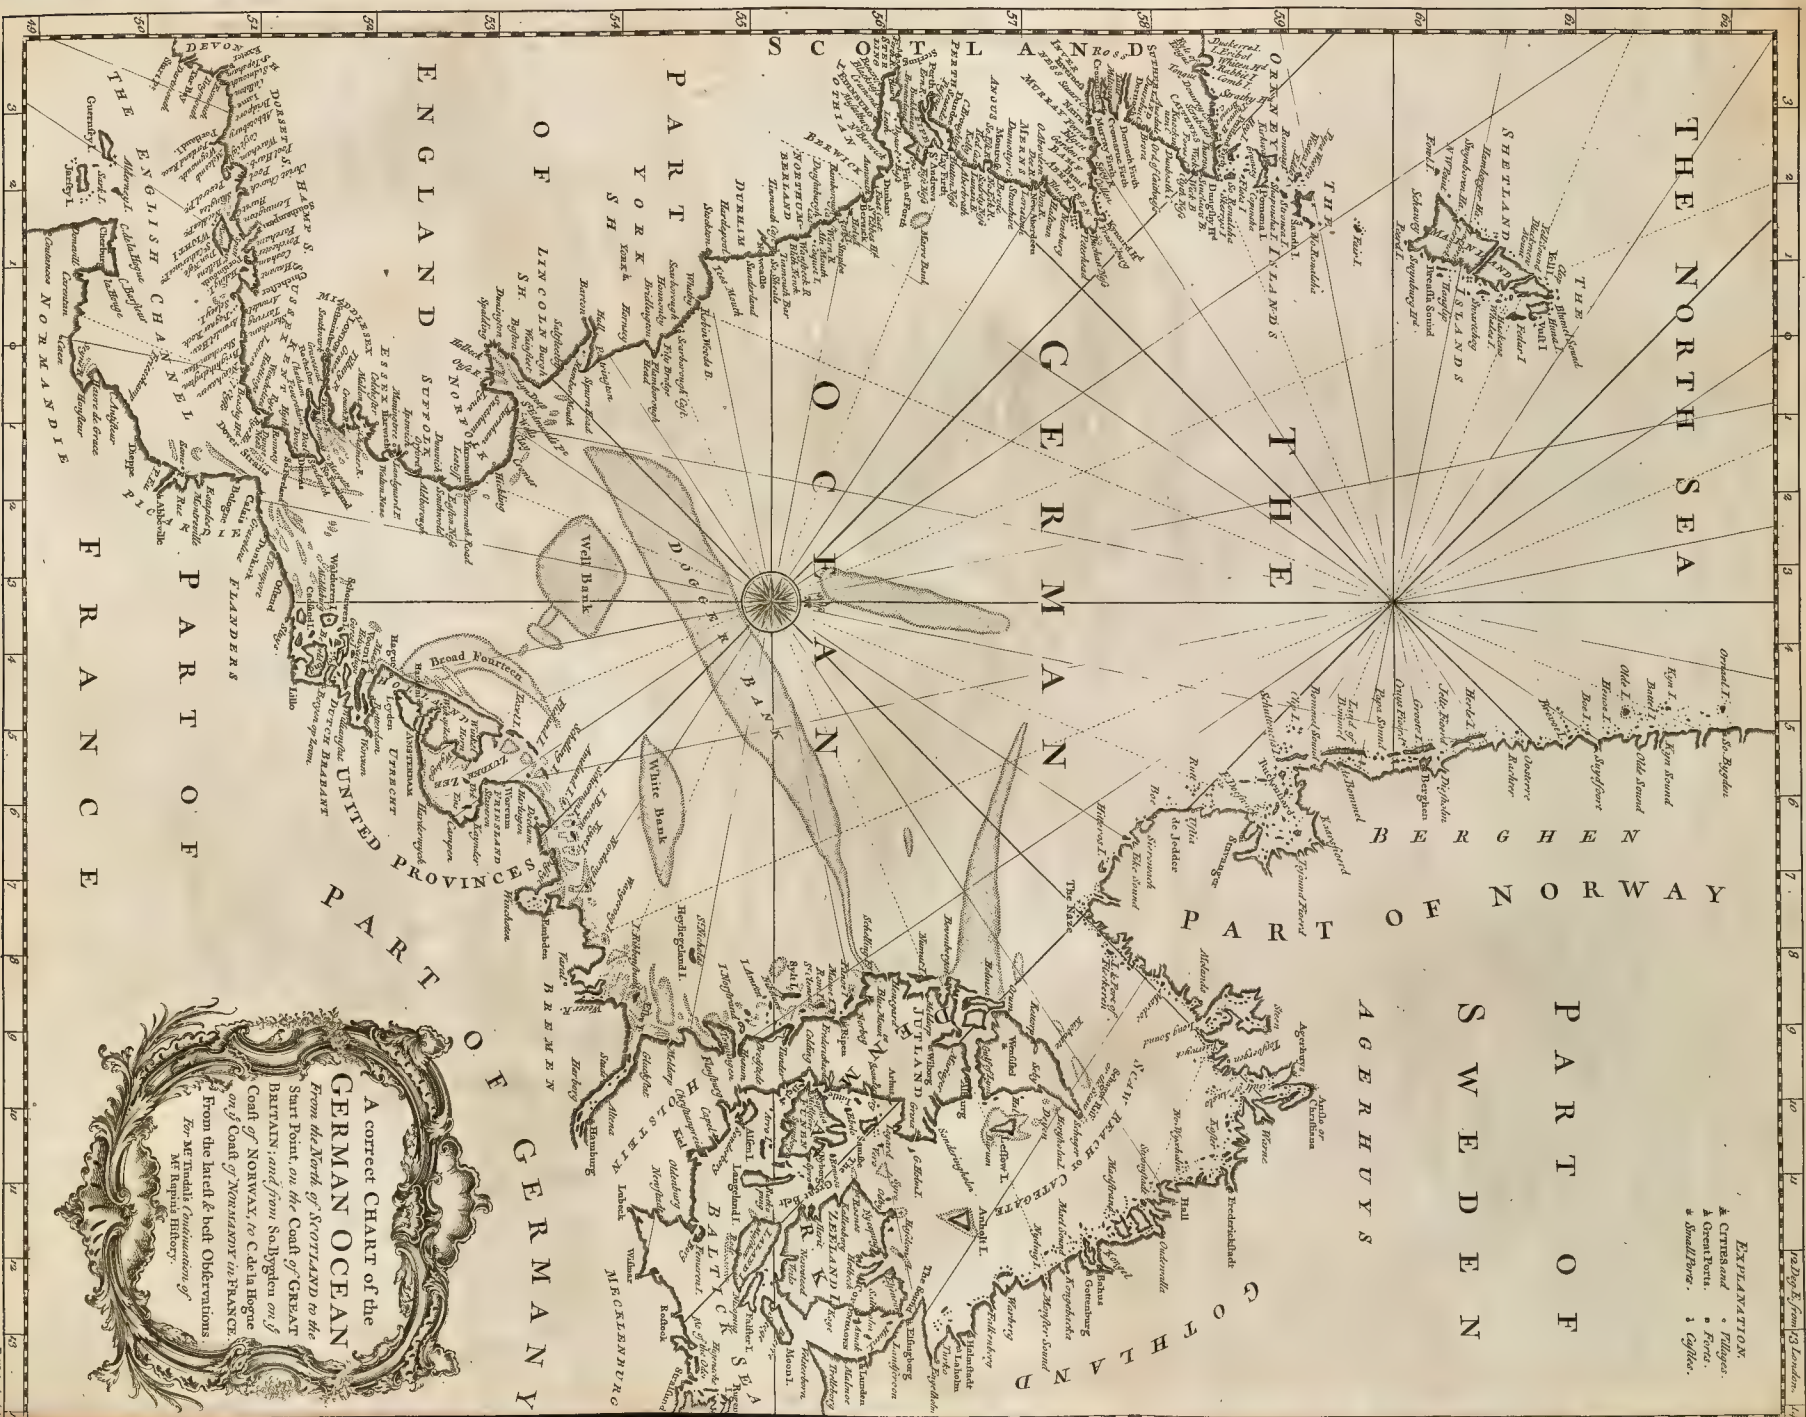

A MAP OF
SOUTH AMERICA
With all the European Settlements & whatever else is remarkable from the latest & best Observations.

EXPLANATION.
European Cities. *
and Towns. +
Indian Towns. +
Rivers & Light. +
Mountains & Hills. +

EXPLANATORY
 A. Cities and Towns
 B. Great Rivers
 C. Small Rivers
 D. Light.

A Correct Chart of St. GEORGE'S CHANNEL and the IRISH SEA, including all the Coast of IRELAND, and of West Coast of GREAT BRITAIN from Canine to Portland Head:
 From the latest & best Observations:
 For the Use of the Admiralty of the Royal Navy.

Seven Stones

A correct CHART of the
ENGLISH CHANNEL.
From the No. Foreland to the Lands End on the Coast of ENGLAND, and from Calais to Brest on the Coast of FRANCE :
 From the latest & best Observations.
For M^r Tindal's Continuation of M^r Rapin's History.

EXPLANATION.

CITIES and	Villages.
Great Ports.	Forts.
Small Ports.	Castles.

EXPLANATION.

- Place whose Latitude & Longitude have been determined by Observation.
- Where the Latitude alone has been taken.
- Where the Latitude has been accurately observed by able Navigators.
- Names of Capital Places are in the Roman Print Character.
- The Longitude is reckoned from London.

A correct CHART of the MEDITERRANEAN SEA,
from the Straits of Gibraltar to the LEVANT;
From the latest and best Observations.
For M^r Tindal's Continuation of M^r Rapin's History.

T H E W E S T E R N O C E A N

A correct CHART of the BAY of BISCAY, Part of the WESTERN OCEAN &
MEDITERRANEAN SEA
Defining the Coasts of SPAIN and PORTUGAL
with Part of FRANCE, from Morhax to Valencia;
Done, from the latest & best Observations.

EXPLANATION.

△ Cines and	○ Villages,
▲ Great Ports,	■ Ports,
△ Small Ports,	◇ Castles.

R. W. Scale del. et sculp.

THE INDEX

TO THE

Continuation of the History of England.

N. B. The Numbers III and IV. denote the Third and Fourth Volumes. K. stands for King, D. for Duke, &c.

A.
ABDICATION: debates about it, III. 24.
Aberdeen, Earl of, William Gordon brought prisoner to London, IV. 65
Aberdeen, the Clergy and People of that place present addresses to the Pretender, IV. 465, 466.

Abington, Earl of, Montague Bertie, his motion in the debate about the Union, III. 786, 787.

Abington, Earl of, Montague-Venable Bertie, made Justice in Eyre, and his Countess one of the Ladies of the Bedchamber, IV. 195. Is against the treaty of commerce, 520 Abjuration of K. James II. Bill for it, III. 13.

Accounts, public, examined into, IV. 203
Acts for suspending the Habeas Corpus act, III. 44. of Toleration, 48. for declaring the rights and liberties of the subject, and settling the succession to the Crown, 55. and 444. act to explain this, IV. 432. for repealing a clause in it, 499. of settlement in Ireland, repealed, III. 87. for the relief of the Protestant Irish Clergy, 98. of indemnity, 132. for raising the subsidy in 1691, 161. for abrogating the oath of supremacy in Ireland, &c. 193. for recognition of their Majesties title to the Crown of Ireland, 218. for encouragement of Protestant strangers to settle in that Kingdom, ibid. to prevent frauds by clandestine mortgages, 236. to prevent malicious informations in the Crown-Office, ibid. to erect a company in Scotland trading to Africa and the East-Indies, 283. in favour of the episcopal Clergy in Scotland, 286. for regulating trials in cases of high-treason, 304. for remedying the ill state of the coin, 308, 333, 334. to enforce the signing of the allocation, 322. for attainting Sir John Fenwick, 345. and all concerned in the conspiracy, 346. for settling the African Company, 371. against Papists, 401, 402. for renewing the East-India Company, 371. for the Protestant Succession, 442, &c. for attainting the Pretender, 501. act that the solemn affirmation of the Quakers shall be accepted instead of an oath, 506. for the union of England and Scotland, 550. act of commision for a treaty between England and Scotland, 602, &c. for regency, 722. the act which declared the Scots aliens, repealed, 723. for ratifying and approving the treaty of union, 775. for confirming the union, 787, 788. for settling the manner of election of the sixteen Peers in Scotland, 777
Act for improving the union of the two Kingdoms, IV. 114. for naturalising all foreign Protestants, 110. for the South-Sea trade, 204, 535. for increasing it's capital stock, 612. See South-Sea Company. Act to suspend the Habeas Corpus, 433. for septennial Parliaments, 490. for a general fund, with a clause establishing the linking fund, 534, 535. to restrain the Sub-Governor, &c. of the South-Sea Company from going out of the Kingdom, 632. in favour of the sufferers by the South-Sea affair, 645. for suppressing the Mint, 672
Addition, Joseph, his letter to the E. of Manchester, about the affair of the Russian Ambassador, IV. 103. made Secretary to the Lieutenant of Ireland, 104. has a hand in the Crisis, 335. assists R. Steele at his trial, 343. appointed Secretary to the Lords of the Regency, 395. made Secretary of State, 525. added to the secret Committee, 541. writes the Old Whigs, 586. dies, 606. an account of him, ibid.

Addresses to K. James II. III. 17.
Addresses of both Houses to K. William, promising assistance for the reduction of Ireland, III. 53. of the House of Commons for a war with France, 89. for removing French Papists, ibid. from the Lords, to put the Isles of Wight, Jersey, Guernsey, &c. in a posture of defence, 96. for removing the Marquises of Caermarthen and Halifax, 97. from the Convocation, 110. to Q. Mary, from the City of London, 141. from the Tinniers in Cornwall, ibid. from Madagascar, ibid. from both Houses to the King and Queen, 159, 189. of advice from the Lords to the King, 233. upon the state of Ireland, 234. addresses to the King on the Queen's death, 264, 282. about the Scottish East-India Company, 308. about a grant made to the E. of Portland, 310. of both Houses on the discovery of the Assassination plot, 320. against profaneness and immorality, 374. against the woollen manufacture in Ireland, 376. upon disbanded the army, 388. about the Dutch Guards, ibid. against the Papists and Jacobites, 389. about the Navy, 390. from Scotland, about the affair of Darien, 407. of the Commons against the Partition treaty, 447. of the Lords complaining of the same, 452. of the Commons desiring the King to remove the Lords Somers, Orford, and Halifax, from his Presence and Councils, 460. counter-addresses of the Lords, ibid. addresses of the City of London, and other parts of the Kingdom, upon the proclaiming of the Pretender in France, 495. from the Lords and Commons upon that occasion, 499, 500. from the Commons to the King, that he would desire the Allies to increase their quotas of land-forces, and provide for the half-pay Officers in the first place, 504. from the Convocation to the King, 526. addresses of condolence to Q. Anne from the Bishops and Clergy in London, from the Dissenters, and from Counties, Cities, &c. 540. of the Commons about the Princess Sophia, 550. concerning Bp. Lloyd, 575. of the Lords, ibid. on the ill-managers of the funds, 585. of the Commons on account of the plot in Scotland, 630. their address upon the Lords appointing a select Committee, 632. from the Parliament of Scotland, 652, 653. from the House of Lords in England about Scotland, 675. from the Commons, to desire that the Allies might furnish their compleat quota's, 678. about the Succession of Scotland in the House of Hanover, and for promoting the Union, 719. addresses from both Houses concerning the endeavours used for creating jealousies between the Dutch and us, 723. of both Houses concerning the danger of the Church, 728.

of thanks from the Commons to the Queen, for her tender regard to the privileges of their House, 729. draught of an address from the Upper House of Convocation, 733. another form drawn up by the Lower House, ibid. of Scotland against the Union, 774. congratulatory addresses upon the Union, 791. from the French Refugees to the Queen, in favour of their brethren persecuted in France, ibid.

Addresses from the Lords about the Admiralty, IV. 42. from the Commons for the relief of the Scotch Merchants, 43. from both Houses, not to make peace without the restitution of all Spain, 46. of the Commons about the number of English forces in Spain and Portugal, at the time of the battle of Almanza, 53, 54. the same address renewed, 54. their address of thanks to the Queen, for taking measures to restore the affairs in Spain, ibid. addresses of the Lords and Commons, upon the news of the Pretender's intended descent in Scotland, 57. another of the Commons thereupon, 59. and of the Lords, ibid. of condolence upon the death of Prince George, 108. for demolishing of Dunkirk, 117. to the Queen, for marrying again, ibid. about Dr Sacheverell's Trial, 196, 185. of both Houses to order the Duke of Marborough into Holland, 186. against the officers of France, 249. address of thanks by the Commons about the peace, 269. of the City of London, and other places, 273. addresses on account of the peace, debates about them, 312, 314. of thanks from the Commons for the treaties of peace and commerce, 319. for having the Pretender removed out of Lorraine, 323, 350. against the public spirit of the Whigs, 341. about the Spanish trade, 365. about the Affiento contract, 366. from the Corporation of Wigan, in behalf of Q. Anne's late Ministry, 419. addresses upon the intended invasion from Sweden, 510, &c. for a copy of the treaty with Sweden, 522. about the E. of Oxford, 545. of the Commons, in relation to their proceedings against the South-Sea Directors, 643. upon the discovery of the Plot, 662

Admiralty, a motion made in the House of Commons, to advise his Majesty to make such Commissioners of the Admiralty, as were of known experience in maritime affairs, III. 230. the state of it inquired into by the House of Lords, 678

Advocates, faculty of, the Pretender's medal sent to them, IV. 217.

Act taken by the French, III. 353. by the Allies, 751. a description of that place, ibid. African Company of Scotland, III. 283.

African trade regulated, III. 371

Aghrim, battle of, III. 177.

Alibury-men; five of them bring an action against the Constable of that Corporation, III. 679

Alibab, John, speaks against the bill for confirming the treaty of commerce, IV. 320. leaves the court party, and is removed from being one of the Lords of the Admiralty, 355. speaks against the peace, ibid. made

Treasurer of the Navy, 406. his speech against the E. of Straford, 429. and upon the E. of Oxford's impeachment, 430, and 434. proposes the lowering of the gold species, 553. resigns his places, 634. has great quantities of South-Sea stock given him, 637. expelled the House, and ordered to be committed to the Tower, 641.

Cardinal, makes great pretensions in Spain, IV. 562. his anger at receiving Admiral Byng's letter, 566. account of him, 569. his letter upon the defeat of the Spanish fleet, 573. acts in favour of the Pretender, 575, 582. forms a plot against the Regent of France, 582. consents to a peace, 624. disgraced, and Alexander VIII., Pope, chosen, III. 102. Affairs; the peace between that Regency and England renewed, III. 615.

Alliance, offensive and defensive concluded between the Emperor and the States-General, III. 102. between England, Holland, and Denmark, 483, 484. between France and Portugal, 487. between the Emperor, England, and Holland, ibid. triple alliance, IV. 508. triple and quadruple, 562. between England and Sweden, 588. between Great-Britain, France, and Spain, 650. between Great-Britain, France, and Denmark, 706. Adam, Peter, his Ecclesiastical History, III. 398.

Almonara, battle of, IV. 176. Almonara, battle of, IV. 5, &c. English regiments there, 7, &c. and 197, 198. Almonar of Castile, proposes that Archduke Charles should be made K. of Spain, III. 624. Alena burnt by the Swedes, IV. 309. Amber, bill for preserving their privileges, IV. 117. Andrum taken by the D. of Savoy, III. 215. is, account of, I. 4.

Anion, D. of. See Philip V. K. of Spain. Argyle, Arthur Argyle, E. of, votes with the Whig Lords, IV. 348. and again with the Court Lords, 350. set down for one of the Regency, 349. sups with Bellinghame, ibid. promised the Government of Ireland, ibid. joins with the Whigs, 352. speaks for the schism-bill, 361. moves to have that bill extended to Ireland, 363. voted an enemy to the Kingdom, for being one of the advisers for breaking the army, 479, 480. removed from the King's council and service, ibid.

Arundell, William Johnston, Marquis of, takes upon him the government of Scotland, III. 61. in a plot against K. William, 122, &c. made President of the Council in Scotland, 595. and Kt. of the Thistle, 604. made Secretary of State, 669. presses the settling of the Succession, ibid. presents a memorial to the Parliament, 690. made Earl, 697. carries the bill against the Cavaliers, ibid. was against the make his addresses to her, 534. is married to Prince George of Denmark, ibid. their issue, ibid. makes the Lady Churchill her great favourite, ibid. her Father's endeavours to pervert her to Popery, 535. withdraws from Court, and goes to Nottingham, 536.

Annandale, James Johnston, Marquis of, his speech about the Peerage-bill, IV. 586. ANNE, her accession to the Crown, III. 231.

great coolness between her and K. William and Q. Mary, ibid. was prejudiced against the Whigs, 538. her speech to the Privy Council, ibid. her agreeable manner in pronouncing her speeches, 539. forms her Ministry, and admits many Tories, 544. her letter to the States of Holland, 541. her Civil List settled, 543. declares war against France, 546. orders the Princess Sophia's name to be put into the public Prayers, 550. recommends to the Parliament the Union of England and Scotland, ibid. a pretended design to exclude her from the Succession, ibid. refuses to receive an address from the Duke of Hamilton, and other Lords in Scotland, 557. resolves to maintain the Session of the Parliament there, ibid. appoints Commissioners to treat about an Union between England and Scotland, ibid. makes an order against fel- offices in her House to Bath, &c. ibid. dines at Gumbard in London, 574. goes in state to St Paul's on the thanksgiving-day for the victory at Lige, ibid. desires some provision for her husband Prince George, 575. touches for the evil, 592. the K. of Spain, (Charles III.) has an interview with her at Windsor, 625. her sentiments about the Occasional Conformity-bill, 627. endeavoured to dissuade the Parliament from bringing it in again, ibid. her speech on account of the plot in Scotland, 639. her answer to the Lords' address about settling the Crown of Scotland in the House of Hanover, 639. gives the first-fruits and tenths to the Clergy, 641. pressed by the E. of Nottingham to dismiss the Dukes of Somerst and Devonshire from her Cabinet-Council, 647. is desirous of having the Succession settled in Scotland, 648. her answer to the Commons about the Albany-men, 681. her answer to the representation of the Lords upon the same subject, 684. her letter to the Parliament of Scotland, 690. another letter of her's, appointing the Lord Archib. Campbell to have the place and vote of High-treasurer, ibid. amazed at the Tories proposal, of bringing over the next Successor, 720. her answer to the address about the danger of the Church, 728. another about the privileges of the House of Commons, 729. her letter to the Archbp. of Canterbury about the Convocation, 734. goes to the meeting of the Commissioners for the Union of the two Kingdoms, and makes speeches to them, 739. the articles of the Union are presented to her, ibid. &c. her speech of thanks to them, 740. inclined to pacific measures, 780. Mr Harley in her confidence, ibid. her speech concerning the enacting it, 781. is, revives the Parliament, and declares her pleasure for holding the first Parliament of Great-Britain, 791. was against the E. of Sunderland's being made Secretary of State, 793. forms a project jointly with the States-General and the D. of Savoy to invade Provence, IV. 23. her letter to the Emperor about the conquest of Naples, 24. takes Mrs Masham and Mr Harley into her utmost confidence, at which the Dukes of Marlborough is extremely uneasy, 34, 35, &c. the Dukes's letters to her Majesty upon that occasion, 36. is made jealous of the Duke of Marlborough's too great power, 35. the L. Goldolphin threatens to quit her service if Mr Harley continued in her confidence, 36. her speech to her first British Parliament, 39. displeased with the Lord's address about the Admiralty, 13. uneasy at the D. of Marlborough's offering to resign, 55. remarkable variations in her speeches, 60. a letter from her to the D. of Marlborough's, 69. another to him after the victory at Oudenarde, 104. does not come to Parliament, but grants a commission to several Lords to represent her, 105. her answer to the Commons's address for marrying

117. ratifies the Preliminaries of peace, 130. books written against her title, 150. bp. Burnet speaks to her with great freedom about the Pretender, 163. begins a change in her Ministry, ibid. and 165, &c. her answer to the Sacheverell's trial, 185. writes to the D. of Marlborough to give the E. of Essex's Regiment to J. Hill, 187. sits from her undertaking, ibid. communicates to the E. of Goldolphin her resolution of making the E. of Sherburn Lord Chamberlain, 187. the Dukes of Marlborough wait upon her Majesty for the last time, 186. the Queen dismisses the E. of Goldolphin from his employments, 190. delighted with the alteration, 190. the D. of Marlborough he was not to expect the thanks of both Houses, as usual, 196. her name exposed to cover all the negotiations of the peace, 222. Mr Messenger has a private conversation with her, and speaks to her in favour of the Pretender, 223. the Elector of Hanover's memorial shewn to her, 225. the closets the D. of Marlborough and several other Lords, 226. dismisses the D. of Marlborough from all his employments, 232, 233. her proclamation for suppressing the Mobbers,

245. acknowledged Queen by the K. of France, 249. her answer to the Lord's address about the offers of France, 251. communicates the plan of peace to the Parliament, 267. her answer to the Commons address of thanks upon that occasion, 269. and to the Lords address, 270. her new plan of peace, 271. tries to prevent the El

Prince of Saxony's turning Papist, 304. her answer to the letter of the States-General, 305. ratifies the treaty of peace and commerce, 311. causes several French Protestants to be released from the galleys, 329. is ill, 335. Dr Shadwell's account of her illness, 335, 336. has a fit of the gout, 336. the Protestants write a letter to her, concerning the clause in the fourth article of the treaty of Kijuck, 337. is taken ill again, 346. her answer to the Lords address in behalf of the Hanover Succession, and for removing the Pretender out of Lorraine, 351. her letter to the Princess Sophia, 357. is again indisposed, the address about the Spanish trade, 365. and about the Affairs, 366. extremely shocked at the quarrel between her Ministers, 368. her last illness, ibid. constitutes the D. of Sherburn Lord Treasurer, 369. dies, 370. not able to receive the Sacrament nor sign her will, ibid. her character, ibid. a strict observer of forms, 371. questioned, whether she knew Anspach, Corsina, Princess of, is courted by K. Charles III. but refuses to embrace Popery, IV. 34. is married to the Electoral Prince of Brandenburg, and becomes Q. of Great-Britain, ibid.

Antonians, III. 515, &c.

Argyle, Archibald Campbell E. of, account of him, III. 59. Commissioner from the

425. is head of the Presbyterians in Scotland, 596. made High Commissioner, 676. created Baron of Chastam, and Earl of Greenwich, 724. is present at the battle of

Ghent, 92. at the battle of Malplaquet, 136. his speech at Dr Sacheverell's Trial, 157. objects against the Duke of Marlborough's being thanked by the House of Lords, 195. recalled from the service in Flanders, and appointed to command the English forces in Spain, 212, 213. had acted in constant opposition to the Duke of Marlborough, 213. goes through the Hague without visiting that Duke, ibid. does not receive the expected remittances, ibid. borrows 10,000 l. on his own credit, ibid. complains of his not being supported, ibid. returns to England, and is of K. William's grants, 245. excuses the orders given to the D. of Ormond, not to fight, 261. opposes the malt-tax in Scotland, 318. reflected on in the Public Spirit of the the Ministry, ibid. removed from all his places, 346. his account of the distressed condition of France, 349. repairs to Coun-of Hales, 402. Chief of the forces in Scotland, 404. sets out for that Kingdom, 438. engages the E. of Mar near Dunblain, 459, &c. speaks for the Septennial bill, 494. removed from all his employments, 500. made Steward of the

Arminius and Arminians, III. 511, 512, 514

Army; the Agents of the army oppress the common soldiers, III. 267, 268. the King orders the officers of the army to examine all informations and complaints, ibid. consultations about the standing army, 364. papers for and against a standing army, 365. the commons resolve to pay off and disband the army, 366. list of the army, 367. reduced to ten thousand men, ibid. the Confederate army, their bravery at the battle of Romilies, 746. &c. defeat the French at Oudenarde, IV. 74, 75. demolishes the French and plunders Picardy, 79. motion for reducing the army, 526. is reduced, 551. debates

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

bates about a standing army, 552, 558. articles for the regulation and government of the army, 559

Arran, James Hamilton, Earl of, endeavours to restore K. James, III. 44. sent to the Tower, ibid. his proposal to the Scotch Lords assembled at London, 63

Argyll, John, his absurd notions, III. 520. speaks against the bill for further preventing the growth of Popery, 730. expelled the House of Commons for a book of his, IV. 44

Ashburnham, John Lord, made Deputy-warden of the Cinque-Ports, and Colonel of the first troop of Horse-guards, IV. 325. votes with the Whig Lords, 348. and again with the Court, 350. reflected on by the D. of Argyle, 349

Abby and White, their case, III. 639

Abby, Sir John, his conduct at la Hague fight, III. 203. examined before the House of Commons, 222

Abley, Lord, unable to proceed in his speech in the House of Commons, III. 304. See E. of Shaftesbury.

Ashton enters into a plot to restore King James, III. 166. seized, ibid. tried, condemned, and executed, 169, 170. his dying speech, ibid.

Affassination plot, III. 196, &c. 312

Association signed by the Commons, III. 321. and by the Lords, ibid. and all over England, 322. an act to enforce the signing of it, ibid. signed in Scotland, 332. entered into throughout the kingdom, IV. 451

Athanasian Creed, III. 107

Athlone, summoned, III. 146. besieged, 174. and taken, 176

Athlone, E. of. See Ginckle.

Athal, John Murray, Marquis of, created Duke, III. 604. made Knight of the Thistle, ibid. a letter from the Pretender directed to him, 629. the conspiracy in Scotland said to be a contrivance to ruin him, 634. his memorial hereupon, ibid. Lord Privy-Seal for Scotland, his speech in his own vindication about the plot, 694. his protest against the Scots being declared aliens, 696. letter sent to him by the Pretender, III. 768. is against the Union, 770. was for violent measures, 771. engaged deeply in the Pretender's interest and receives letters from him, IV. 63. sworn of the Privy-Council, 311. causes K. George to be proclaimed at Perth, 403

Atterbury, Francis, his letter to a Convocation man, III. 523. his character, ibid. his letter reprinted with additions, 524. approved of, 529. chosen Prolocutor of the Convocation, IV. 206. draws up a representation, 207. thought that a prerogative put an end to all matters not finished, 254. made Bishop of Rechester, and Dean of Westminster, 325. he is the supposed author of English advice, 415. advises the Duke of Ormond to leave England, 428. refuses to sign the Declaration, testifying an abhorrence of the rebellion, 452. endeavours to justify the University of Oxford. with regard to the riot there, 519. his speech about the South-Sea affair, 633. against the Quakers, 655. is apprehended and committed to the Tower, 660. his commitment causes great uneasiness, 661. he is prayed for, ibid. See William Young's speech against him, 668. it is voted that he had been concerned in the Conspiracy, ibid. bill to inflict pains and penalties upon him, ibid. is brought to his trial, ibid. the bill against him passes, 670. deprived of all his offices, and banished the realm, ibid. carried to France, 674. says, he was exchanged, ibid. Dr Sacheverell left him 500 l. 681

Augsburg: the Elector of Bavaria endeavours to seize it, III. 621. a description of that city, ibid. taken by the Elector of Bavaria, 622. the Czar complains of him, 792

Augustine St., his doctrine made by our reformers the standard of religion, III. 511

Augustine, Fort St., in North America, attacked by the English, III. 594

Augustus K. of Poland, engaged in a war with the K. of Sweden, III. 559. defeated by that King, 568. is deposed, 626. retires into Saxony, ibid. causes the two Princes Sibicki to be taken prisoners, ibid. his Saxon Dominions are invaded by the K. of Sweden, 763. makes a peace with that King, ibid.

reigns Poland and Lithuania, ibid. serves as volunteer at the siege of Lisse, IV. 81. pretends that the resignation of the Crown of Poland was extorted from him, 142

Augustus King of Poland, his forces assist the Czar, IV. 183

Austrian, Robert, made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, III. 236

Austrian Dominions; the succession guaranteed by Spain, IV. 689

Auxiliaries in British pay, retained by the States, IV. 274. refuse to march with the D. of Ormond, 277. their pay and subsidies from England taken from them, 281

Aylebury, Thomas Bruce, E. of, proclamation for apprehending him, III. 142. concerned in the assassination plot, 312. goes to France, and has a secret conference with K. Lewis, 313. committed to the Tower, 326. released upon bail, 350.

B.

BADEN, Prince Lewis of, his bravery in Hungary, III. 187. and in Germany, 241. comes to England, 252. commands on the Rhine, which he passes, and takes a great booty, 257. commands the Imperialists, 300. takes Eberburg, 363. invests Landau, 561. 562. defeats the French at the battle of Fridlingen, 565. hinders the Elector of Bavaria from seizing Augsburg, 621. sends the D. of Marlborough an express with intercepted letters, 654. it is agreed that he and the Duke should command each day alternately, 655. wounded at the battle of Schellenberg, ibid. jealous of the D. of Marlborough's success, 661. and 668, 699. promised to join him, but failed him, 698. suspected of favouring the French, ibid. the Emperor sends to expostulate the matter with him, 703. publishes thereupon a manifesto, ibid. forces the French lines at Hagenau, ibid. nothing however considerable done by him, 704. the Emperor Joseph disaffected with him, ibid. dies, IV. 4

Baden, a Congress there, IV. 337

Baker, Major, bravely defends Londonderry, III. 51

Baltick; a fleet sent thither, IV. 525, 538, 589, 618. which is affirmed to be an infringement of the act of settlement, 654. a motion to know the reasons of sending it, 704

Bangor, Bishop of, See Headley.

Bank erected, III. 253. complaints against it, 267. 800,000 l. engrailed upon it, 335. Bank-notes, ibid. Land-bank, 322. fails, 334. great demand upon it, IV. 61. their loans, 530. the Bank act, 535. the Bank present their proposals to the Government, 611. Bank contract, 625. dropped, 628

Barcelona besieged by the Allies, III. 708, &c. surrenders, 710. besieged by King Philip, who raises the siege, 752

Barrier-Treaty with the States, IV. 240. complained of, 241. condemned by the House of Commons, 242. a new one proposed, 300. signed, 302. See also 408. ratified, 464

Barfille, a description of it, III. 621. taken by the French, ibid.

Bafoille, Monsieur de, intendant of Languedoc, III. 613

Bath, order of the, revived, IV. 687

Bathurst, Allen, created a Baron, IV. 235. his speeches in Parliament, 647, 663, 666, 669, 678, 696, 701, and 702

Battle of Boyne, III. 136. of Aghrim, 177. of la Hague, 201. of Steenkirk, 208. of Landen, 238. of Marsaglia, 241. of Scardingen, 616. of Schellenberg, 655. of Hochstet, 657. of Ramillies, 746. of Turin, 759. of Kalisz, 763. IV. 5. &c. of Oudenard, 74. of Blaraignes, or Malplaquet, 136. of Almanara, 176. of Saragossa, 178. of Villaviciosa, 181. of Preston, 456. of Dumbain, 459

Bavaria, Maximilian Elector of, commands the Imperialists, III. 158. made Governor of Flanders, 188. puts that country in a good state, 206. left commander in chief there, 219. commands an army in the Netherlands, 288. at the siege of Namur, 289. his bravery, 298. was to have Spain, &c. by the partition-treaty, 383. has several negotiations with the Emperor, 559. declares for France, ibid. and 564. surprises Ulm, 564. defeated by Count Stirum, 616. defeats the Imperialists, ibid. takes Ratisbon, 617. marches into Tirol, and takes Innsbruck, 620. driven out by the boors, ibid. takes Augsburg, 622. the D. of Marlborough enters into a Treaty with him, but the Elector refuses to sign it, 656. surprises Diehl, 703. appointed to command on the Rhine instead of the Netherlands, IV. 68. gains some interest in that country by his politeness and popular behaviour, 70. besieges Brussels, and raises the siege, 88. gives out hopes of a peace, 121. proposal from France to restore him to his dominions, and to give him Sardinia and Sicily, 288, 293. comes to Paris and has a conference with L. Bolingbroke, 289. Sardinia to be given to him, 301. renounces the Spanish Netherlands, 313

Baxter, Richard, his reformed Liturgy, III. 518. refuses the See of Hereford, 519

Beaufort, Henry Somerset, Duke of, his laying to the Queen, IV. 190. sworn a Privy-Counsellor, 195. appointed Captain of the Band of Gentlemen Pensioners, 234. moves for an address of thanks about the peace, 312. installed Knight of the Garter, 308. dies, 344

Belford, Earl of, created Marquis of Tavistock, and D. of Bedford, III. 253

Benson, William, writes the Plebeian, IV. 586. removed from his place, 587

Bentinck, William, a great favourite of K. William, made Groom of the Stole, and Privy-Purse, III. 39. created Baron of Cirencester, Viscount of Woodstock, and E. of Portland, 45. See Portland.

Beretti Landi, Marquis de, signs the quadruple alliance, IV. 600. delivers a plan of peace to the States-General, 605

Berkley, James, Earl of, appointed to command the fleet, IV. 370. fails to Holland to bring over K. George, 399. made one of the Lords of the Bedchamber, 401

Berwick, James Fitz-James, D. of, fails from Ireland into France with King James, III. 138, 145. returns, and is left Commander of the French forces in Ireland, 151. taken prisoner at the battle of Landen, 239. takes Segura, Salvaterra, and many other places in Portugal, 667. defeats a body of the Dutch, passes the Tagus, and invests Portalegre, ibid. defeats the Allies at Almanza, IV. 5. &c. plunders the neighbourhood of Salvatierra, 294. takes Fontarabia and Port-Pajosse, 603. and St Sebastian and Port-Antonia, 604

Belhune, description of it, IV. 174. taken, ibid.

Beveridge, Dr William, is offered the Bishopric of Bath and Wells, which he declines, III. 173. one of the promoters of the Society for Reformation of Manners, 374. made Bishop of St Asaph, 687. dies, - IV. 67

Bill for excluding Placemen from sitting in Parliament, III. 226, 227, 587. IV. 162, 200. for limiting their number, IV. 342, 344. for ascertaining the fees of Officers of Justice rejected, III. 227. touching the free and impartial proceedings in Parliament, 228. passes both Houses, but the King refuses it, 250. for frequent calling and meeting of Parliaments, 231. rejected, 249. passed at last, 260. for continuing the Parliament notwithstanding the King's death, 321. to prevent the publishing of any news without licence, 350. for disbanding the army, 387. Preliminaries of the bill of succession, 443, &c. that bill passed, 445. for the Union of England and Scotland, 550. against occasional conformity, 578, 627. that no persons be chosen Members of Parliament but such as have a sufficient real estate, 588. to prevent occasional conformity, 671, &c. for an Union with Scotland, 675. for the naturalization of the French Protestants, 684, 685. self-denying bill, 685. for a Regency, intitled a bill for the better security of her Majesty's person and government, and of the succession to the Crown of England, 720. for further preventing the growth of Popery, 730. for correcting some of the proceedings in the Common Law and Chancery, 731. for enacting the Union, 787. for a general naturalization of all Protestants, IV. 110. about privileges of Ambassadors, 117. to repeal the naturalization act, 200. for building fifty new churches in and about London, 208. to give the Electoral Prince of Hanover as D. of Cambridge the precedence of all Peers, 231, 238. for a Toleration of the Episcopal Clergy in Scotland,

243. for making good the 8th and 9th articles of the Treaty of Commerce, 315. rejected, 317. to regulate the land-forces, 423, 425. for recognizing K. George's title to the Crown, and for the better security of his Person and Government, in the Parliament of Ireland, 478. to attain the Pretender and D. of Ormond, ibid. for septennial Parliaments, 490, &c. to prohibit commerce with Sweden, 519. about mutiny and desertion, ibid. Peetrage-bill, 585, &c. rejected, 608. for securing the dependency of Ireland, 609. for enabling the South-Sea Company to increase their stock, 610, &c. for ingrafting nine millions of the South-Sea stock into the bank, 631, &c. for the relief of the sufferers by the South-Sea Company, 642, &c. to prevent the infection from the Plague, 654, &c. for altering the Quakers affirmation, 655. for the freedom of elections of Members of Parliament, 656. to lay a tax on Papists, 665. to inflict pains and penalties on Kelly and Plunket, and on Bishop Atterbury, 667, 668. to prevent the King's subjects from being concerned in the Offend East-India Company, 672. for lessening the public debts, 677. to indemnify the Masters in Chancery, 684
Births, marriages, and burials, a tax on them, III. 259
Bishops, their votes taken away, III. 8. excuse themselves from causing K. James II. declaration to be read in all churches, 20. tried for the same, and acquitted, ibid. excuse themselves from declaring under their hands their abhorrence of the Prince of Orange's invasion, 22. move for a bill of Toleration, and another of comprehension, 44, 106. Bishops of Gloucester, Ely, Norwich, Bath and Wells, and Peterborough, suspended, 105. letter from the Bishops in Scotland to K. James, 58. their proceedings in the Convention there, 64. non-juring a severe pamphlet against them, 143. disown what was therein asserted, 144. are in a plot, neglect the concerns of the church, 172. the Bishops looked upon by many of the Clergy as betrayers of the rights of the church, 524. blame upon the loss of the occasional conformity bill, 581. contest between them and the Lower-House of Convocation, 590. their behaviour upon the occasional conformity bill being brought in again, 628. disputes between them and the Lower-House of Convocation, 645
Blackall, Offspring, made Bishop of Exeter, IV. 36
Blenheim, a description of that place, and battle near it, III. 657. the standards and colours taken there hung up in Windsor-Hall, 677
Blenheim-House, III. 678
Blount, Charles, his book to prove K. William and Q. Mary conquerors, burnt, III. 232 Bolingbroke, L. Viscount. See St John.
Bolton, Charles Paulet, D. of, dies, III. 394. his odd character, ibid.
Bolton, Charles Paulet, D. of, made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, IV. 525. his speech to the Parliament of that kingdom, 606
Bonne besieged by the Allies, III. 615. taken, 617. a description of it, ibid.
Bonneval, Monsieur de, invades Ferrara, and takes several places belonging to the Pope, IV. 98, 99
Booth, George, Lord de la Mere, afterwards Earl of Warrington, made Chancellor of the Exchequer, III. 40. his character, ibid. protests against rejecting the charter for taking away the Sacramental Test, 46. infuses jealousies of the King into the Whigs, 54. dismissed from his employments, 126
Boreghy, finally, the rotten part of our constitution, III. 497
Bohmar, Baron de, publishes the Elector of Hanover's memorial, IV. 225. causes a clause relating to the Regency to be rectified, 329
Bossiers, Marshal de, his proceedings in Flanders, III. 288, &c. throws himself into Namur, 289, &c. arrested by way of reprisal, and released again, 299. passes the Mare, 560. tries to surprise Nimeguen, 561. sent to besiege Linge, 618. disgraced, 619
Bourbon, D. of, nominated Prime Minister in France, IV. 676. removed from that employment, 690
Boyle, Robert, founds his lecture, III. 238

Boyle, Henry, Secretary of State, IV. 103. his speeches, &c. at the trial of Dr Sacheverell, 153. removed from his place of Secretary of State, 191
Brandenburgh, Frederic, Elector of, enters into a league against Sweden, III. 410. expects the title of King, 412
Bremen and Verden made over to K. George, IV. 424. the Pretender's observation about it, 454. the K. of Sweden enraged at this acquisition, 505, 509, &c. annexed to the Electorate of Hanover, 674. the Emperor denies K. George the investiture of them, 690 Bribery, proceedings in Parliament against it, III. 267, &c.
Bridgewater, Scroop Egerton, E. of, created Duke, IV. 617. forms a bubble for building houses in London, &c. 621 Brissac taken by the French, III. 566. Old Brissac taken also by them, 621. a description of it, ibid.
Bronley, William, one of the Managers of the Occasional Conformity Bill, III. 579, &c. 627. brings in the bill to prevent Occasional Conformity, and his speech upon it, 671, 672. his speech on the debate about the danger of the church, 728. his speeches, &c. at the trial of Dr Sacheverell, IV. 152, 154. chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, 194. made Secretary of State, 328. promotes the Schism Bill, 360. dismissed from his place, 404
Brown, Dr. Chairman of the Committee of Convocation, IV. 149. made Bishop of Cork, ibid. writes and preaches against drinking to the memory of K. William, ibid.
Bruges, a description of that place, IV. 70. surprized by the French, 71. abandoned by them, 92
Brussels, a description of that city, IV. 70. surprized by the French, 71. abandoned by them, 92
Buckinghamshire, John Sheffield, D. of, removed from the office of Privy-Seal, III. 687. seconds the motion for inviting the Princess Sophia over, 719. his speech about the Union, 781. speaks in behalf of Dr Sacheverell, IV. 158, 159, 160. made Lord Steward, 191. most verber in Parliamentary Proceedings, 228. does not attend at the Coronation of K. George, 407. dies, 651
Bull, George, made Bishop of St David's, III. 687
Burgundy, Lewis, D. of, dies, IV. 246. his character, 247
Burnet, Gilbert, made Bishop of Salisbury, III. 41. is against the laity being put into the commission for a comprehension, 50. concerned in the bill of Succession to the Crown, 55. writes a pastoral letter, 56. is against the inquiry into the murder of the Earl of Essex, 95. discovers a plot against the King, 118. his letter to Mr Johnston, 160. his pastoral letter burnt, 231. his reasons for Sir John Fennock's attainder, 343. does him some service, 346. made Preceptor to the D. of Gloucester, 380. addresses for removing him from that post, 397. publishes his exposition of the 39 articles, ibid. which is censured in Convocation, 529. his method of instructing the D. of Gloucester, 409. is one of the Commissioners for disposing of church preferments, 523. one of the Managers against the Occasional Conformity Bill, 581. censured for it, ibid. instrumental in obtaining the first fruits and tenths, 642. reflected upon by the Lower House of Convocation, 686. proposes the first model of the act of Regency, 720. his speech about the danger of the church, 725, 726. Chairman of the Committee in the debates about the Union, 783. reports the resolutions of the same, 787. speaks in favour of the bill for naturalizing Protestant Foreigners, IV. 112. his notions upon the acts of treasons in Scotland, 115. Dr Sacheverell reflects upon him, 150. threatened by the mob, 155. his speech at Dr Sacheverell's trial, 157, 158. speaks to the Queen with great freedom against the Pretender, 163. the Queen speaks to him about the peace, 226. his speech about the peace, 320, &c. his preface to his pastoral care complained of in Parliament, 345. makes a long speech, 352. his speech about the peace with Spain, 353
Byng, George, made Rear-Admiral of the Red, III. 590. goes into the Mediterranean, 612. at the taking of Gibraltar, 664. made Vice-Admiral of the Blue, 678. fails towards Dunkirk, to defeat the Pretender's designed expedition to Scotland, IV. 58. comes back into the Downs, and sails towards the coast of France, ibid. pursues the French fleet, and comes near the Firth of Edinburgh, 60. his two letters, ibid. thanked by the House of Commons, 61. one of the Lords of the Admiralty, 192. made Admiral of the White, 219. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 406. takes upon him the command of the fleet, 433. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 525, 562. sent with a fleet into the Baltic, 525. and with a large squadron into the Mediterranean, 562, 565. his instructions, ibid. dispatches his Secretary with a letter to Colonel Stanhope, 566. the King of Spain's answer to his letter, ibid. sends a letter to the Marquis de Lede, 568. defeats the Spanish fleet, ibid. the King's letter to him upon that occasion, 569. receives a gracious letter from the Emperor, with his picture, 571. motion in the House of Lords to have his instructions laid before them, 576. confiscates all French ships in the service of Spain, 589. lends the Imperialists cannon and ammunition, 594. destroys some Spanish men of war in Misina Road, 596. sends cannon to Sicily, 597. convays the Imperialists to Trepani, 599. returns to England, 603. account and character of him, ibid.

C.

CABAL, III. 13. dissolved, 14
Cabinet-Council appointed for Q. Mary, III. 139. detrimental to the public for affairs pursued through the Cabinet-Council, 223. IV. 404
Cadix, attack of the English upon that place, III. 568
Cadogan, Major-General, gives the Queen information of the Pretender's designs against Scotland, IV. 57. sends some regiments from abroad upon that occasion, 58. his bravery at the battle of Oudenard, 74, 75. at the battle of Winnendale, 84. forces the French lines, 170. removed from being Lieutenant of the Tower, 234. receives the Duke of Marlborough with great respect at his landing at Offend, for which he is dismissed, 300. takes measures to secure the Protestant Succession, 347. appointed Colonel of the 2d regiment of foot guards, 407. sent as Plenipotentiary to Anwerp, about the barrier treaty, 408. his proceedings against the Rebels in Scotland, 467, &c. created Baron of Reading, 499. negotiates a treaty between England and the Duke of Orleans, 505. a censure designed to be passed upon him, 526. made General of the forces in England, 548. sent Ambassador to the League, 549. created an Earl, 562. made Master-General of the Ordnance, 658
Cambray, a Congress there, IV. 619. the sole mediation there offered to K. George, who refuses it, 689
Cammock, a Spanish Rear-Admiral, IV. 568, &c. gets into Misina, 572. account of him, 589. his romantic offers to Admiral Byng, ibid.
Campaign in Flanders, III. 102, 154, 182, 255. IV. 19, 69, 139. in Germany, III. 103, 654, &c. IV. 101. in Italy, III. 184. in Italy and Prevence, IV. 21. in Italy, IV. 93. on the Rhine, III. 187, 257, 328. IV. 140, 175. in Catalonia, III. 328, 705, &c. in Portugal, III. 665. IV. 183. in Piedmont and Dauphiné, IV. 140, 175
Cape-Breten yielded up to the French by the treaty of Utrecht, 314, 391
Carlos, Don, a marriage concluded between him and one of the Duke of Orleans's daughters, IV. 674. the is sent back, 689. a match designed between the Emperor's eldest daughter and him, 690. the succession to Tuscany preserved to him, 711 Carmarthen, Marquis of. See Osborne, Thomas.
Carnarvon, Robert Dolziel, E. of, takes arms for the Pretender, IV. 445. his character, 448. taken prisoner at Freston, 459. brought up to London and examined, 465. committed to the Tower, ibid. impeached, 482. brought to the bar of the House of Lords, and pleads guilty, 484. condemned, ibid. respited, 487

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

- Carolina Wilhelmina*, Princess of Wales, delivered of Prince William, IV. 651. and of the Princess Louisa. 686
- Carpenter*, General, in Spain, IV. 94. at the battle of Almanara, 176. sent to ford over the Ebro, 177. his good advice not followed, 180. taken prisoner at Brihuega, 181. made Commander in Chief of the forces in Scotland, Governor of Minorca, &c. 501
- Carteret*, John Lord, votes with the Whig Lords, IV. 348. made one of the Lords of the Bedchamber, 407. his speech about the Septennial bill, 492. about a standing army, 558. Ambassador and Plenipotentiary to Sweden, 588. concludes an alliance between England and Sweden, 614. made Secretary of State, 649. motion for his private instructions to be laid before the Parliament, 654. appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. 679
- Carthage* in America taken by Pointis, III. 354
- Castelmains*, Roger Palmer E. of, impeached, III. 113. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132
- Catalans* very kind to the English troops, IV. 213. forsaken by the English, 296. amnesty for them, 307. resolved to defend their liberty, 335. are to have a full pardon, 339. their safe taken into consideration by the House of Lords, 345, 347. reflection on their condition, 373. their safe reported by the Committee of Secrecy, 379. the Lords of the Regency write to the King of France in their behalf, 398
- Catalonia*, affairs there, III. 300, 328.
- Catharine*, Empress of Russia, her answer to K. George's letter to her, IV. 698. dies, 710
- Cession of arms* proposed, IV. 275. proclaimed, 281. prolonged, 304
- Covenants* rise in arms, III. 613. the English fleet attempts in vain to assist them, 614. suffer much, and are not relieved, 668. enter into a treaty with the French General, ibid.
- Chancery*, Matters in, their affair, IV. 683
- Charles II.* See Spain, K. of.
- Charles XI.* K. of Sweden, Mediator, III. 351. dies, 352
- Charles XII.* K. of Sweden, Mediator, III. 354. See Sweden.
- Charles*, Archduke of Austria, proclaimed K. of Spain, III. 614. several Spaniards declare for him, 615. lands in England, 625. his character, 626. is besieged in Barcelona, 753. delays going to Madrid, which is a great injury to him, 754. comes to Tarragona, and thence to Saragossa, and is acknowledged by the Kingdoms of Valencia and Aragon, 755. comes up near Madrid, ibid. joins the E. of Galway, and advances against K. Philip, 757. concludes a treaty of commerce with England, IV. 12. but ratifies it with reluctance, ibid. courts the Princess of Anspach, who refuses to change her Religion, and he marries the Princess of Wolfenbuttel, 32. the Pope acknowledges him, 100. the French offer to give him Spain and the West-Indies, 121, &c. comes to Madrid, 179. no care is taken by the Allies to support him, 180. his affairs are in a bad situation, 182. is elected Emperor, 214. See Emperor.
- Cholmondeley*, Hugh E. of, objects against the ratification of the treaties of peace and commerce, IV. 311. removed from the place of Treasurer of the Household, ibid. received with great favour by K. George, 402. appointed Treasurer of the Household, 406. his speech in Parliament, 579
- Cholmondeley*, George E. of, his speech upon the Septennial bill, IV. 492
- Church of England* said to be in danger, III. 715. memorial of the Church of England, ibid. danger of the Church inquired into by the House of Lords, 724, &c. protests about it, 728, 729
- Churchill*, Lord John, made a Privy-Counsellor, III. 38. and Gentleman of the King's Bedchamber, 39. created E. of Marlborough, 45. acts in Flanders, 103. See Marlborough.
- Civil Life*, III. 51, 52
- Clarendon*, Henry Hyde E. of, in great credit in Ireland, III. 77. aspires to the post of Lord-Lieutenant, ibid. discontented, ibid. spreads slanders against K. William, 105. enters into a plot to restore K. James, 166. committed to the Tower and released, 171. the Earl's History published, 592. appointed Envoy Extraordinary to Hanover, IV. 352. his speeches, ibid.
- Clark*, Dr Samuel, publishes his Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity, IV. 412. lays a paper before the Convocation to vindicate himself, 413
- Clement XI.* Pope, dies, IV. 651. was a great friend to the Pretender, ibid.
- Clergy*, adhere to the divine rights of Monarchy, and lineal Succession, and to the distinction of a King de jure and de facto, III. 27. it is proposed in Parliament to exclude them from taking the oaths to K. William, 47. but they are at length obliged to take them before August 1, 1689. 48. shew their hatred to the Dissenters, 49. episcopal Clergy in Scotland zealous for K. James, which proves the ruin of Episcopacy in that Kingdom, 58, &c. Protestant Clergy in Ireland, design to suppress them, 88. Clergy in England take the oaths to K. William with reservations and distinctions, 105. excepted out of the abjuration bill, 131. the Clergy in England give offence by their behaviour about the oaths, 218. sign the Association, 322. divisions among them encourage profaneness, 374. some of them against a toleration, ibid. complain of the Convocation's not sitting, 522, &c. helped to recover many privileges by the help of Mr Atterbury's book, 524. used to grant their own subsidies apart, ibid. taxed by the House of Commons ever since the year 1665, ibid. and 525. promote the notion of the Church's being in danger, 715
- Coin*, the loss the Nation suffered by reclaiming the money, III. 327. proceedings of the Commons about it, 333, 334
- Collier*, Jeremy, gives absolution to Sir John Freind, and Sir William Perkins, III. 325. vindicates that practice, ibid. his short view of the stage, 391
- Commerce*, treaty of, between England and France, IV. 303. rejected by the Parliament, 304. between the Emperor and Spain, 690
- Commission* for reviewing the Liturgy and the Commissioners names, III. 106, 107. ecclesiastical Commission for disposing of Church preferments, 523
- Commissioners* to treat of an Union between England and Scotland, III. 557, &c. 736, &c. they meet, 737
- Committee* of both Houses to advise K. William, III. 223, &c. 235. of Secrecy chosen, IV. 420. meets, 421. their Report, 426, &c. their report concerning Mr Prior, 435. a select one to inspect into the execution of the South-Sea scheme, 632. their report, 636, &c. of the House of Commons examines Lyster, 666. their report, ibid.
- Commons*, House of, will not agree to exclude the Clergy from taking the oaths, III. 47. present an address of thanks to the King, for his having discharged chimney-money, 52. address to the King for a war with France, 89. settle upon the King the hereditary excise for life, and grant him the customs for four years, 128, 129. vote a Supply of four millions, 160. another of above three millions, 190. one of above five millions, 226, &c. of five millions and a half, 249, &c. of almost five millions. 259. their representation to the King upon his refusing to pass the Place-bill, 250. their proceedings against Pauncefort and others guilty of bribery, 267, 268. debates in that House about reclaiming the money, 305. their proceedings about the Coin, 333, 334. bent upon disbanding the forces, and grant a Supply for that purpose, 387. their address of thanks to the King upon disbanding the army, 388. the King's message to them about the Dutch Guards, and their address thereupon, ibid. many hard things said in that House against the Court and the King, 389. find fault with the partition treaty, 447. vote forty thousand sailors, and the same number of soldiers, 501. vote that it is the undoubted right of the People to petition, 503. present an address to the Queen on the ill-management of the funds, 584. disputes between them and the House of Lords, in the case of Abby and White, 639, &c. shew a great neglect in all that related to the fleet, 642. lose much of their reputation, 644. their proceedings about the five Shylbury men, 679, &c. motion for excluding Pensioners and Placemen from the House of Commons, 722. debates about the danger of the Church, 728. their resolutions for making the Union more complete, IV. 43. and about the trade to Portugal, Italy, and Spain, ibid. enquire strictly into the E. of Galway's conduct at the battle of Almanza, 53. their resolution for the preservation of public credit, 61. their partiality in judging of contested elections, 108. great debates about the Peers of Scotland's eldest sons, ibid. impeach Dr Sacheverel, 151. their Managers at his trial, 153, 154. take into consideration the management of the war, and find some abuses in the victualling, 199. inquire into the affair of the Palatine, 200. grant 1,500,000l. for the service in Spain, 212. reject in their address of thanks a clause that had been inserted in the Lords address, 229. form several resolutions injurious to the States, 242. and condemn the barrier treaty, ibid. debates there about the negotiation of peace, 263. order Bp Fleetwood's Preface to be burnt, 270, 271. their resolution against the letter from the States, 272. and about the Queen's care for the Protestant Succession, ibid. they stigmatize those that delighted in war, 313. vote the Protestant Succession to be in no danger, 354. debates about K. George's proclamation for calling a new Parliament, 419. on the bill for Septennial Parliaments, 494, &c. measures taken by them for reducing the public debts, 527, &c. debates there about the repeal of the Schin and Occasional bills, 578. and about the South-Sea scheme, 611. their proceedings about the South-Sea affair, 630, &c. their resolutions about the South-Sea Directors, 637, &c. in favour of the Sufferers by the South-Sea scheme, 642, &c. they present an address to the King, demonstrating the necessity and wisdom of their proceedings, 643. debates there about the Subsidy to Sweden, 647. and about the Navy debt, 653. their votes against the Old East-India Company, 672. their proceedings against the Mallors in Chancery, 683
- Comprehension*, bill for it, III. 49. why miscarried, 51. attempted again, 106
- Compton*, Henry, Bishop of London, made Privy Counsellor, III. 38. and Dean of the Royal Chapel, 39. crowns K. William and Q. Mary, 45. his speech in the Convocation, 109. twice disappointed of the See of Canterbury, 529. opposes the Court, ibid. had the education of the Princess (afterwards Q. Anne) 534. marries her to the Prince of Denmark, ibid. helps to convey her from the Court to Nottingham, 536. his speech about the danger of the Church, 725. his death and character, IV. 323.
- Compton*, Spencer, chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, IV. 416
- Congress* at Alb and Aland between the Swedish and Russian Ministers, IV. 540, 616. at Brunswick and Cambray, 619
- Conspiracy* in Scotland, III. 629. the papers relating to it laid before the House of Lords, 633. endeavours used to stifle it, 634. account of that Conspiracy, 637. the Lords vote about it, 639. in England, IV. 426. discovered, 438. carried on 443. another Conspiracy, 506
- Convention* turned into a Parliament, III. 41. the Convention in Scotland meets, 64. proceeding therein, 65, &c. the lawfulness of it, 67. their acts for the security of the Nation, 68. send relief to Ireland, ibid. their answer to K. William's letter, 69. publish a proclamation against K. James, 73
- Convocation* meets, and their proceedings, III. 109, &c. their address to the King, 110. books about it, 522. regularly called by K. William, but always prorogued, 524. is allowed to sit, ibid. pretended they had a right to sit whenever the Parliament sat, ibid. and that they had no need of a licence to enter upon debates, ibid. disputes between the Lower-House and the Archbishop about adjourning, 525. report of the Lower-House, 526. their power as to censuring of books, 527. whether dissolved by the King's death, 531

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

531, 532. their proceedings in 1702, 589, &c. their petition to the Queen, 591. lit again, their proceedings, 644, &c. meet again, and present a representation, 645, remarks upon it, ibid. a new one meets, 732. difference between the two Houses, 733. meet again, 793. speak against the Union, and name a Committee to consider of the present danger of the Church, ibid. pro- rogued, ibid. order a representation to be made to the Bishops, 794. the Lower-House continues sitting after the prorogation, 795, and prepares a protestation against the Arch- bishop, ibid. the Prolocutor absents himself, for which he is declared contumacious, ibid. the Convocation opened, IV. 206. the Queen's licence for the fitting of it, ibid. their representation to the Queen, 207. has a jurisdiction, and may proceed in case of heresy, ibid. whether the Queen's licence to it sub- sisted after a prorogation by a Royal writ, 254. meets again, 340. and 412.

Cook, Sir Thomas, Governor of the East- India Company, proceedings of the Com- mons against him, III. 270. committed to the Tower, and a bill brought in against him, 272. act to indemnify him, 273. examined before the Commons, ibid. act for imprison- ing him, 279.

Corporation-Act repealed, IV. 578, &c.

Corruption, an universal one complained of, III. 269.

Cottonian Library, III. 731.

Coulper, William, made Lord-Keeper, III. 716. his character, ibid. discourages the great number of private bills, 731. his pro- ceedings and speeches about the Union of the two Kingdoms, 737, &c. presents the arti- cles of Union to the Queen, 739. is created Baron of Wingham, 781. declared Lord High Chancellor, 792. his speech to the Parliament, IV. 106. speaks at Dr Sacheverel's trial, 158. delivers up the Great Seal, 191. speaks against the resumption of K. William's grants, 245. his speech about the peace, 261, 269. represents the dan- gers that threatened the Protestant Succession, 345. his speech about the Catalans, 347. made Lord Chancellor, 404. Lord High- Steward at the time of the condemnation of the seven impeached Lords, 484. and of the E. of Winton, 488. his speech on the Sep- tentennial bill, 493. appointed Lord High- Steward at the E. of Oxford's trial, 541. resigns the Great Seal, 562. created an Earl, ibid. is against the repeal of the Schism Act, 570. his speeches about the Peerage-bill, 586. and 608. and about the South-Sea scheme, 611. was against securing Knights, 633. dies, 676. his character, ibid.

Court of Conscience erected in Bristol, Glou- cester, and Newcastle, III. 98. Court of the Marshes of Wales abolished, ibid.

Craggs, James, sent to the Tower, III. 265. concerned in clothing the army, ibid. ex- amined in the House of Commons about the East-India Company, 277. act for impris- oning him, 279. speaks against the Affiento trade, IV. 339. sent to K. George with a letter, 370. returns to England with letters to the Lords-Judices, 397. made Secretary at War, 525. made Secretary of State, 562. his answer to Marquis de Montelou's letter, 574. gives the House of Commons an ac- count of the measures pursued by the King, 577. was to have been created a Peer, 609. challenges the House of Commons, 632. dies, 635.

Crawford, William Lindsay E. of, appoint- ed to preside in the Parliament of Scotland, III. 74. against the Episcopal Clergy, 105. his character, ibid. and 118.

Credit, the public, restored, III. 334. very high, 729. the Commons care for pre- serving it, IV. 61.

Crew, Nathaniel, Bishop of Durham, takes the oaths, III. 112. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132.

Cromarty, George Mackenzie E. of, Secre- tary of State for Scotland, III. 649. his speech, 650. is made Justice-General, 653.

Czar, Peter I, travels to Holland and England, III. 356. his character, ibid. suc- cessful against the Tartars, 363. defeated at Narva, 438. over-runs Poland, IV. 15. presses the Poles to chafe another King, ibid.

tries to make a peace with the K. of Swe- den, ibid. reduces Livonia to his obedience, 183. the Grand Seigneur declares war against him, 184. has an engagement with the Turks, and concludes a peace with them, 214. the K. of Sweden endeavours to stir up the Turks against him, 309. makes him- self master of Finland, ibid. had taken from the K. of Sweden his German Dominions, 505. angry with K. George, 506, 511, &c. misunderstanding between him and the Court of Hanover, 538, 539. goes to France, and concludes a treaty with that Court, 540. a peace between him and Sweden, ibid. ravages part of Sweden, 589. his Minister's Se- cretary committed, 606. alliance between England and Sweden against him, 614. con- tinues the war, and makes peace without any Mediator, 615. refuses the mediation of England, 618. peace between him and Swe- den, 650. his memorial upon Mr Bstflugel's being ordered to leave England, ibid. dies, 697.

Czarina. See Caibarine.

D.

Dalrymple, John, made Joint-Secretary of State for Scotland, III. 182. undertakes to bring the Jacobites into the King's service, ibid. created Lord Stair, 194.

Dalrymple, Sir David, frames a bill to dis- charge the Clans of Scotland from their vas- sals, IV. 58. Lord Advocate of Scotland, ordered to enquire into the affair of the Pre- tender's medal, 218. removed, ibid. made Auditor of the Exchequer in Scotland, 617.

Danby, E. of. See Osborne, Thomas.

Danes refuse to stir from their quarters till their arrears were paid, III. 743. join the Allies, 744.

Darien; account of that Settlement, III. 283, 308, 392. miscarries, 392, &c. the French King complains, and the K. of Spain presents a memorial against it, 393. great discontent upon the loss of it, 394. and 406.

Dartmouth, William Legg, Lord, made Secretary of State, IV. 189. created Vis- count Lewisham, and Earl of Dartmouth, 219. made Lord Privy-Seal, 328.

Davenant, Dr Charles, some of his books censured, III. 551. appointed Secretary to the English Commissioners for the Union, 558. his Essays upon peace at home, and war abroad, 627.

D'Aumont, D. of, appointed Ambassador Extraordinary to England, IV. 296. comes to England, 300. his character, ibid. insult- ed, and his house burnt, 325, 326. the Pre- tender thought to be with him, ibid. presents a memorial against Mr Dubourdieux, an emi- nent French Preacher, ibid. makes his pub- lic entry, 327. leaves England, 328.

Dauphin, an attempt to carry him off, IV. 32. he dies, 203. two other Dauphins died, 246.

Dawes, Sir William, Bp of Chester, speaks against the bill for naturalizing Protestant for- eigners, IV. 112. votes for the E. of Ox- ford, 431. endeavours to justify the Uni- versity of Oxford, with relation to the riot there, 510. speaks against the Quaker's bill, and presents a petition against it, 655.

Debts; measures for reducing the public debts, IV. 527. state of them, 528, &c. bill for lessening them, 677. debts of the Civil List, 684.

De Foe, Daniel, his shortest way with the Dissenters, III. 582.

De la Mère, Lord. See Booth, George.

Deleval, Sir Ralph, presides at the Court- martial which tried the E. of Torrington, III. 145. examined in the House of Commons about a letter from the E. of Nottingham, 192. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 236.

Dendermonde, deserviced, III. 751. taken by the Allies, ibid.

Denmark, George Pr. of, created Baron of Oakingham, E. of Kendal, and D. of Cum- berland, III. 45. attends K. William in Ire- land, 133. is married to the Princess Anne, 534. their issue, ibid. prejudiced against the Whigs, 538. is declared Generalissimo of all the Queen's forces by sea and land, 344. made Lord High-Admiral, 545. a bill for settling a provision upon him, if he survived the Queen, 575, 576. protests against it, 576. is for the Occasional Conformity bill, 581. underflood sea-affairs very little, and was imposed upon, 611. negligent in the management of the Admiralty, 678. declared High-Admiral, 792. his Council in the affairs of the Admiralty, ibid. they manage badly, IV. 30. engages in Mr Harley's party, 35. great complaints against his Coun- cil, 41. is thanked by the House of Com- mons for his diligence in fitting out a fleet, when Scotland was threatened with an in- vasion, 61. dies, 104. his character, ibid.

Denmark, Anne Princess of, 50,000 l. a year settled upon her, III. 52, 120. K. William and Q. Mary uneasy at her requiring a pro- vision, ibid. motion for her maintenance causes the E. of Marlborough's disgrace, 195. Q. Mary falls out with her because she would not dismiss the Councils of Marlborough, 196. retires to Lion-House, 197. not admitted to see her Sister Q. Mary on her death-bed, 263. the King reconciled to her, ibid. not put at the head of the Lords-Judices, 280. See Q. ANNE.

Denmark, Frederick IV. K. of, travels through the Courts of Germany and Italy, IV. 143. it is given out that he intended to change his Religion, ibid. attacks Sweden, ibid. and 184. invades Pomrania, 214. takes Swe- den, and reduces the Duchy of Bremen, 308. exacts 300,000 l. of the City of Hamburgh, ibid. defeated by the Swedes, 309. the Czar's designs against him, 538. his manifesto against the Czar, 538. treaty between Eng- land and Denmark, 617. restores all the places taken from Sweden, and makes peace, 618. treaty between Denmark, Great-Brit- tain, and France, 706.

Derwentwater, James Ratcliffe E. of, en- gaged in the Rebellion, IV. 443. his char- acter, 450. taken prisoner at Preston, 458. brought up to London, and examined, 465. impeached of High-Treason, 482. brought to the bar of the House of Lords, and pleads guilty, 484. His Lady intercedes with the King for mercy, 485. petitions the Parlia- ment in his behalf, 486. he is executed, and his dying speech, 487.

Descent, one in France intended, III. 761. one designed by the Pretender, in Scotland, IV. 56.

Devonshire, William Cavendish E. of, made Lord Steward of the Household, III. 39. and Knight of the Garter, 45. his safe taken in- to consideration by the Parliament, 92, 93. created Marquis of Hartington, and D. of Devonshire, 253. made one of the Lords- Judges, 280. made Lord-Steward, 545. is for declaring war against France, ibid. against the Occasional Conformity bill, 581, 678. has a meeting with some of the eminent Members of the House of Commons, IV. 37. removed from being Lord-Steward, 191. his speech on occasion of the D. of Ormond's refusing to fight, 261. made Steward of the Household, 404. brings in the bill for Sep- tentennial Parliaments, 490. made President of the Council, 500. resigns his place of Pre- sident of the Council, 525. brings about a reconciliation between the King and the Pr. of Wales, 617. brought again into favour, and made one of the Lords-Judices, ibid.

Deyne and Dismayde surrender, III. 294. their garisons treacherously detained by the French, 295.

Dissenters, K. William endeavours to have them admitted into civil employments, III. 45. their state at the Revolution, ibid. K. William's great indulgence to them creates jealousies of him, 105. blackened after K. William's death, 578. complaint from the Lower-House of Convocation, for their Teachers administering private Baptism, 686. Schism-bill against them, IV. 359, &c. mo- tion to allow them schools to teach their own children, 362. a design to ease them, 524. encouraged, 551. get the Schism-act re- pealed, 578. some of them make an ill use of the indulgence shewn to them, 579. a great dispute amongst their Ministers, about sub- scribing articles of peace, 607. an act for ex- empting the Protestant Dissenters in Ireland from certain penalties passed in the Parliament of that Kingdom, 606.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Daddington, George, Secretary to the English Commissioners for the Union between England and Scotland, III. 736. made one of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, IV. 143.
Dadwell, Henry, account of him, IV. 254.
Dalben, John, complains to the House of Commons of Dr Sacheverell's sermons, IV. 151. carries up his impeachment, 152.
Dorset, Charles Sackville E. of, Lord Chamberlain, made one of the Lords-Justices, III. 280. resigns his office of Chamberlain, 350. his character, ibid.
Dorset, Lionel Cranfield Sackville D. of, made Conflable of Dever, and Warden of the Cinque-Ports, IV. 105. removed, 325. made one of the Lords of the Bedchamber to K. George, 401. and Knight of the Garter, 407. made a Duke, 617.
Doway besieged and retaken, IV. 171, &c. account of that place, 174.
Drake, James, against the Partition treaty, III. 448. his history of the last Parliament, 475, 479. rescued, 551.
Dubois, Abbott, comes to London, IV. 549. helps to discover the plot against the D. of Oleant, 582.
Dumblain, battle of, IV. 459. prisoners taken there, 461, 462.
Duncomb, Charles, Receiver-General of the Excise, sent to the Tower for false indentures on Exchequer-bills, III. 373. purchased the manor of Hemley, ibid.
Dundee, Viscount, acts for K. James in Scotland, III. 64, &c. raises a Rebellion, 68, &c. defeats Mackay, but is slain, 76. his character, ibid.
Dunkirk, address for demolishing it, IV. 117. the French offer to demolish it, 125; 129, 163. is to be demolished, 221, 251, 268. the English take possession of it, 280, &c. an equivalent for the demolition of it, 314, 320. Tughe presents a petition for preserving that harbour, 327. Mr Steele's reflection on that petition, ibid. Dunkirk demolished, but a new canal made at Mardyke, 328. Steele's motion about it, 343. and Mr Walpole's, 344. De Torcy's letter about it, 379. Prior presents a memorial about the demolition of it, 408.
Dutch, their charges for K. William's expedition into England repaid, III. 54. fix hundred thousand pounds granted them, 98. treaties with them, 91, 102. are thought to be too much favoured by K. William, 189, 212. the service of their fleet at la Hogue, 201, 202. Dutch-Guards; the King's unfitness at disbanding of them, 387. his message about them, 388. motion for obliging them to leave off trading with France, 724. the bravery of their cavalry at the battle of Ramillies, 747.

E.

East-India Company, III. 190. King's message to the Commons about it, 222. proceedings of the House of Commons upon their affairs, 223, &c. obtains a new Charter, 250. their affairs examined by the House of Commons, 269, &c. a new East-India Company erected, 369. petition of the old East-India Company to the House of Commons, 390. the Old and New bribe the Members of Parliament, 439. do not like the proceedings of the House of Commons, 471, 472. these two Companies come to an agreement, 503. public debts due to them, IV. 530, 531. an union proposed between them and the South-Sea Company, 624.
East-India Company in Scotland, III. 283, 308. gives a great alarm to that in England, 283. proceedings in the Parliament of Scotland about it, 308. they lay open their grievances before the Parliament of Scotland, 380, &c.
East-India Company settled at Offend, IV. 672. guaranteed by Spain, 689, &c. suspended, 710. stopped, 711.
Eckron, battle of, III. 619. description of that place, ibid.
Edgcombe, Richard, made one of the Lords of the Treasury, IV. 499. removed from his employment, 525. made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, 617. appointed one of the Vice-Treasurers of Ireland, 679.

Edict of Nantes revoked, III. 36.
Edinburgh-Castle kept by the D. of Gordon, III. 68, &c. surrenders, 76. several suspected persons committed to the Castle there, IV. 437. plot to seize that Castle, 438. the heads of the disaffected are summoned to come thither, and surrender themselves, 445. the Rebels march towards that City, 447. some Ministers there refuse to acknowledge King George, 606.
Emperor, Leopold, resolves to be master of Transylvania, III. 188. led on by prophecies, and hates Herely and France, ibid. declares against the Partition treaty, 413, &c. alliance between him, England and Holland, 487. declares war against France and Spain, 546, 564. disorders in his Court, 622. reduced to the last extremities, implores Q. Anne's protection, 653. his ill conduct with regard to Hungary, 668. dies, 704. his character, ibid.
Emperor, Joseph, succeeds his father, his character, III. 704. 500,000*l.* lent to him upon a branch of his revenue in Silesia, 720. bent upon the reduction of Hungary, 759. recalls his troops from the Upper Rhine, ibid. makes a treaty for evacuating the Milanese, without the participation of his Allies, IV. 4. conquers Naples also without their consent, 21, &c. the King of France endeavours to unite the Princes and States of Italy in a league against him, 98. difference between him and the Pope, ibid. his troops seize Comacina, and other places possessed by the Pope, ibid. interposes by his Ambassador in favour of the D. of Marlborough, and the Ministry, 190. dies, 203.
Emperor, Charles VI., elected and crowned, IV. 214. writes a circular letter to the Electors, upon the receipt of the preliminaries of peace, 224, 225. and another letter to the States, ibid. sends Prince Eugene to England, 236. sends his Plenipotentiaries to the Congress at Utrecht, 247. makes preparations for the campaign, 254. the number of men he offered to furnish in divers places, 276. offers to contribute towards the subsistence of the auxiliary troops, 287. disposed to promote a general peace, 304, &c. his Ministers are against signing the treaty of Utrecht, 310. his Ministers had Conferences at Rastadt with the French King's, 337. resolves to conclude his treaty with France, without the intervention of the maritime powers, 338. the King of Spain pretended to have numberless complaints against him, 504. persuades the D. of Savoy to take Sardinia in exchange for Sicily, ibid. treaty between him and K. George, 508. attacked by the Spaniards, 549. the Courts of England and France try to bring about a reconciliation between him and the K. of Spain, ibid. renounces all pretensions to the Crown of Spain, ibid. quadruple alliance concluded with him, 562. peace concluded between him and the Sultan, 565. writes a gracious letter to Admiral Byng, and sends him his picture, 571. enters into a Convention with the D. of Savoy, ibid. sends to Sicily the troops designed for Sardinia, 596. rejects the mediation of the Dutch, 604. continues to take the title of K. of Spain, 615. refuses the sole mediation of K. George, 689. concludes two treaties with Spain, ibid. and a private treaty, 690. had acted with uncommon coldness towards K. George, ibid. denies him the investiture of Bremen and Verden, ibid. and 694. Complains that the Court of Great-Britain and France had endeavoured to stir up the Osman Porte against him, 705. prepares to attack the Dutch in the Netherlands, 709. concludes a peace with Great-Britain, 710. ratifies the Preliminaries, 711.
England to furnish twenty thousand men for the general war against France, III. 165. in great danger from the French for want of intelligence, 201. a great corruption throughout England, 218. England guarantee of the Neutrality of Italy, IV. 549. the Spanish squadron fails for England, 583. peace concluded between England and Sweden, 588.
English army very sickly in Ireland, III. 133. defeats the Irish. See Boyne. English fleet has an engagement with the French near Beauchy, and is worsted, 140. English Ministry act without union, 243. blamed for the ill success at sea, ibid. and 244. English fleets bombard Dieppe, Havre de Grace, &c. 254, 255. English Nation highly inflamed at the King of France's proclaiming the Pretender, 495. very eager for the war with France, 503. their success in America, 594. attack Fort St Augustin and Guadalupe, ibid. defeat the French at Ramillies, 746. defeated at Almanza, IV. 6, &c. several battalions surrender themselves, 9. the rest retire to Xativa and Alcira, 10. the English alarm the coast of Normandy, 83. the English troops not suffered to march through any of the towns garrisoned by Dutch, in their way to Dunkirk, 274, 282. those in Spain called home, 296. the English too jealous of their liberty to suffer foreign forces, 404.

Episcopacy abolished in Scotland, III. 58, 72, 124, &c. Episcopal Clergy in Scotland deprived, 105, &c. See Clergy and Scotland.
Episcopal Clergy in Scotland encouraged by Q. Anne, and present an address to her, III. 595. the Episcopal party had the majority in the Parliament there, 596.
Ernst, Bishop of Onaburg, created E. of Uylster, and Duke of York and Albany, IV. 500.
Essex, Arthur Capel E. of, Committee to inquire into his death, III. 95.
Essex, Algernon Capel E. of, sworn a Privy-Counsellor, IV. 105.
Evans, George, created Baron Carbery, IV. 404.
Eugene, Prince, of Savoy, goes to Vienna to solicit succours, III. 184. commands the Imperial troops, 330. defeats the Turks at Zenta, 363. marches into Italy, passes the Mincio, and routs the French near Carpi, 484, 485. his attempt upon Cremona, takes Marshal Villery prisoner there, 486. defeats the French at the battle of Luzzara, 567. visits the D. of Marlborough, and concert measures with him, 654. commands a separate army upon the Rhine, 655. his saying about the English forces, ibid. at the battle of Hochstet, 657. ten thousand men taken into the pay of England and Holland, to reinforce his army, 704. has a weak army in Italy, ill provided and ill paid, 705. has an engagement with the D. of Vandamme, ibid. money borrowed in England for his use, 729. marches to the relief of Turin, 758. joins the D. of Savoy, and defeats the French, ibid. commands the Imperial army at the siege of Toulon, IV. 25. he and the D. of Marlborough act with perfect unanimity, 72. his bravery at the battle of Oudenard, 74, 75. lays siege to Lisle, 80. wounded, 83. Q. Anne and the States-General desire that he may be sent to Spain to command in chief, 93. comes to Holland upon proposals of peace made by France, 124. chafes to serve in Flanders with the D. of Marlborough, 133. wounded at the battle of Malplaquet, 137. invests Doway, 171. concert at Frankfort the necessary measures with the Elector of Mentz, 209. comes to England, 236. receives an account of the D. of Marlborough's disgrace, ibid. conducted to Leicester-house, ibid. the Whigs glad, and the Jacobites displeased at his coming, 237. scandalous reflections in the Post-Boy on his mother, ibid. his compliment on the D. of Marlborough, ibid. in the note, said, the D. of Marlborough was always successful, 240. presents a memorial about the Emperor's conduct in the war, 244. loses his nephew, ibid. returns to the Hague, 245. the States give him the supreme command of their army, 255. besieges Quefnoy, 259. detaches troops to make an irruption into France, 276. refuses to give over the siege of Quefnoy, 277. resolves to attack Londrécy, 281. his memorial to the D. of Ormond, 282. his lines at Denain forced by the French, 284. marches to the relief of Doway, 286. defeats the Turks, 548.
Exchange, bills of, drawn from Genoa for Spain protested, IV. 193.
Exchequer bills, III. 336. false indentment on them inquired into by the Commons, 373. their currency, 730.
Exeter; disputes there about the Trinity, IV. 607.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Eyles, Sir John, his speech at the General Court of the South-Sea Company, IV. 646
Eyles, Francis, expelled the House of Commons, IV. 641
Eyre, Robert, made Solicitor-General, IV. 105. advises only the imprisonment Sacheverel, and burning his sermon, 150. made one of the Justices of the Queen's-Bench, and knighted, 192

F.

Faction, one in the Church and State set up, III. 51
Fagel, one of the Dutch Generals, III. 654. commands the Dutch auxiliaries in Portugal, 665. upon no good terms with the Portuguese Generals nor D. Schomberg, 666. made Velt-Marshal General of the Portuguese forces, ibid. his sleeve taken off by a cannon-ball, 706. recalled, ibid. the not taking of Badajoz ascribed to him, ibid.
Falkland, Anthony Cary Lord Viscount, sworn of the Privy-Council, III. 195. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 236. accusation against him by the Admirals, 249
Falmouth, Hugh Boscowen, Lord Viscount, made one of the Treasurers of Ireland, IV. 69
Fellows, Sir John, Sub-Governor of the South-Sea Company, IV. 624. ordered to be taken into custody, 634
Fenwick, Sir John, engaged in the Assassination-plot, III. 312. gets troops ready, 314, 315. seized, 336. his letter to his Lady, ibid. sets up a counter-plot, 337. examined by the House of Commons, 338. bill for attainting him, 339, &c. names of the Members of the House of Commons that were for and against attainting him, 343. beheaded, 344
Ferguson, Robert, enters into a plot against K. William, III. 118, 128. seized, 133. writes in defence of the Yorkshire plotters, 266. offers to make discoveries about the plot in Scotland, 630. discovers an intention of placing the Pretender on the Throne after the Queen's death, ibid. and 636. the Lords offended with his papers, 638, 639
Finch, Daniel Lord, speaks in behalf of R. Steele, IV. 343. made one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber to the Prince of Wales, 402. impeaches the E. of Carnwarth, 482. removed from the place of one of the Lords of the Treasury, 487. his speech in Parliament, 523. his speech in behalf of the L. Belingbroke, 685
Findlater, James Ogilvie E. of, against the malt-tax being extended to Scotland, IV. 317. made Chancellor of Scotland, 328. chosen one of the sixteen Peers, 334
First-Fruits and Tenths given by the Queen for the augmentation of small livings, III. 641. an account of them, ibid. Bp Burnet instrumental in that, 642. Sir John Halland and Sir Joseph Jekyll were for taking them quite away, but Sir Christopher Mulgrave, &c. were for continuing them, ibid.
Fittou — a zealous Papist, Chancellor of Ireland, III. 77, 87. his character, ibid.
Flanders; campaigns there, III. 154, 182, 255
Flanders, if lost, Holland and England in danger, III. 189. the House of Commons send forces thither, 224
Fleet; the English cannot bring the French to a general engagement, III. 182. inquiries into the conduct of our fleets, 191, &c. 222. K. James endeavours to corrupt some of the Commanders of our fleet, 199, 200. miscarriages of the fleet inquired into by Parliament, 248. the French fleet avoids an engagement with the English, and goes into the Mediterranean, 253. the miscarriages of the fleet inquired into, 349. their proceedings much censured, 355. the English fleet bombards Copenhagen, 410. destroys the French fleet and galleons at Vigo, 570. great complaints about the management of it, 613. the French fleet beaten by the English near Malaga, 664. the English fleet goes to the relief of Barcelona, 752. keeps in the Mediterranean, and blocks up the French in Toulon, 756. takes Alicant, ibid. a fleet prepared with great expedition, upon the news of the Pretender's intended descent in Scotland, IV. 58. a fleet sent into the Baltic, 525, 538. the King's message about the fleet, 561. a strong fleet fitted out by England, 562. the Spanish fleet sails to Sicily, 562. English fleet sent to the Mediterranean, 565. See Bing. they defeat the Spanish fleet, 568. the Spanish fleet sails for England, 583. but is dispersed, 584. an English fleet sent to the Baltic, 583, 618. joins the Swedish fleet, 619. the Russian fleet lands a body of men near Uma, ibid.

Fleetwood, William, Bishop of St Asaph, his Preface to his four Sermons burnt, IV. 270. his letter to Bishop Burnet, 272. the Queen called him her Bishop, ibid.
Folty, Thomas, appointed Auditor of the Imprest, IV. 328. seconds a motion made by Mr Hungerford against R. Steele, 342. another motion of his, 343
Fontenabie and Port-Passage taken by the French, IV. 603
Forces; foreign forces in England, debate about them, III. 227
Forfeited estates, IV. 547. bill for vesting them in Trustees, to be sold for the use of the public, 560 France, K. of. See Louis XIV.
France; war declared against her by the diet of Ratisbona, Holland, Spain, Brandenburg, &c. III. 88. and by England, 90. concert measures with the Jacobites to restore K. James, 139. resolution of the Congress at the Hague to employ 222,000 men against France, 165. famine in France, 244. tries to obtain a peace, ibid. and 257. makes a separate peace with the D. of Savoy, 329. endeavours to set the Prince of Conti on the throne of Poland, 353. tries in vain to retake the trade with England, 380. her intrigues to secure the Crown of Spain, 384. great rejoicings there upon the news of K. William's death, 542. reduced to ruins, 685. Court of France makes proposals for a peace, 763. their offers rejected, 764. apply to the Pope, ibid. suffers greatly by the frost in 1709, IV. 119. reduced to great extremities, particularly by the general decline of the public credit, 121, &c. renunciation of the Crown of France by the King of Spain, 263. the allies make an irruption into France, 276. peace signed between England and France, 310. the distressed condition of that Kingdom, 349, 371. the Court of France acknowledges K. George for King of Great-Britain, 398, 400. declares war against Spain, 582. four English Gentlemen murdered in France, 676. persecution there, 681. treaty between France, England, and Prussia, 690. and Sweden and Denmark, 705
Frederic IV. of Denmark, his manifesto against the Czar, IV. 539. makes preparations against Sweden, but at length agrees to a peace, 589, 616, 617
Frederic, Prince of Hesse-Cassel, elected K. of Sweden, IV. 619
Frederic, Prince, inoculated for the small-pox, ibid.
Frederickstadt, the K. of Sweden killed before that place, ibid.
Freeman, Samuel, Dean of Peterborough, protests against the irregularities of the Lower-House of Convocation, III. 73
Friends, Sir John, engaged in the Lancaster plot, III. 365. and in the Assassination-plot, 312. had a Commission from K. James, 314. tried and executed, 324. absolved by Jer. Collier, &c. 325 Friend, Dr. his account of the E. of Peterborough's conduct in Spain, III. 707, &c.
French attack the Spanish Netherlands, III. 35. surprise Courtray and Dismuyden, and besiege and take Luxemburg, 36. invade Germany, and take Philipsburg, ibid. land in Ireland, and assist K. James, 79. annoy our trade, 102. their fleet enters the Channel, and engage the English near Beauchy, 139, &c. remain masters at sea, 141. burn Tinmouth, 143. endeavour to intercept the Turkish fleet, 182. lose several officers of distinction at Steenkirk, 209. surprise the D. of Wirtemberg in his camp, but are beaten by the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, 213. gain the battle of Landen, 238. take Heidelberg, and commit great barbarities in the Palatinate, 241. endeavour to raise commotions in England on account of the coin, 303. their plot to invade England, 312. offer to make peace with England, Holland, &c. 327. resolve to make peace, 351. their preliminaries, ibid. and see Ryswick. slow in disbanding their army, 364. they bribe some of our Members of Parliament, 439. involve us in contentions at home, 447. their insolent behaviour towards the Spaniards, 484. corrupt most Courts, 486. try to engage the Turks in a new war with the Emperor, 508. encourage the troubles in Poland, 626. their lines forced by the D. of Marlborough, 699. and at Hagenau by Prince Louis of Baden, 703. take Nice, 705. defeated at the battle of Ramillies, 746, &c. before Tour, 752. defeated at the battle of Turin, 759, &c. make a descent on Nevis and St Christopher, 791. their great success on the Upper Rhine, IV. 13. lay several places under contribution, 14. retire with great precipitation before the D. of Marlborough, and cannot be brought to an engagement, 19, 21. their fisheries in North America damaged by Capt. Underwood, 30. the French design to recover by surprise and treachery, the places they had lost in the Netherlands, 70. take Ghent and Bruges, 71. defeated at the battle of Oudenarde, 74, 75. set on foot negotiations for a peace, 120, &c. their insincere offers, 125, &c. defeated at the battle of Malplaquet, 136, &c. make new overtures for a peace, 144. and 163, 219. See Peace, they insert the E. of Sunderland's removal in their Gazette, 190. their lines surprised by the D. of Marlborough, 210. their expedition to Bresil, and unsuccessful attempt on the Leeward-Islands, 214, 215. their proposals at Utrecht rejected with indignation by the Allies, 248, &c. defeat the Allies at Delaunay, and take Arras, Dunoy, Quebec, and St. John's, 284, &c. destroy the Isle of Gorbou, 293. debate in the House of Lords about their buying ships in England, 635

French Protestants encouraged to come into England, III. 89. Refugees petition the House of Commons and the King for relief, 102
Fulham, act for building a bridge between that town and Putney, IV. 666
Fund-Aid, IV. 535. aggregate, sinking, and South-Sea funds, 537

G.

Galleons; some Spanish ones destroyed, IV. 101
Galloway taken, III. 119
Galloway, — de Rosigney E. of, K. William's General, and Envoy into Savoy, III. 379. made one of the Lords-Justices in Ireland, 350. grant of lands to him there, 399. appointed Commander of the English forces in Portugal, 667. his exploits there, 705. loses his right hand, 706. his proceedings, and conquests in Spain, 752, 753. takes Alcantara, ibid. is joined by all the troops both English and Dutch, IV. 5, 6. his Narrative, ibid. is defeated at the battle of Almanza, 8, 9. wounded, 9. watches the D. of Orleans's motions, 11. that Duke makes him some proposals, in order to his being made K. of Spain, ibid. attempts the relief of Lerida, ibid. his list of the forces at the battle of Almanza, 53, 54. his conduct severely examined by the House of Commons, ibid. his bravery at the battle of Caya, where he has a horse shot under him, 141. orders forces to Catalonia, 142. returns home, 183. is removed from being Commander in Portugal, 192. blamed for the miscarriages in the war in Spain, 196, 197. was for an offensive war, ibid. examined by the House of Lords about it, ibid. blamed for the loss of the battle of Almanza, and censured for giving the precedence to the Portuguese in Spain, 199. appointed one of the Lords-Justices in Ireland, 478
Garrard, Sir Samuel, desires Dr Sacheverel to print his sermon, IV. 150. disowns it, 152
Garraway, Mr. his speech in the House of Commons, III. 97
Gayther, Francis, Bp of Chester, his speech at Bp Atterbury's trial, IV. 669
Gaulther, Abbot, makes overtures for a peace between England and France, IV. 219. employed employed to convey Count Tallard's letters between Paris and Nottingham, ibid. Mr St John and Mr Harley had private meetings with him, ibid. betrays Count Gallas, and is made an Abbot, 224. his negotiations at London, 252, &c. comes from London to Utrecht, ibid. promoted the Pretender's interests, ibid. his memorial about the renunciation, 263. goes to Paris along with the L. Bellingbrooke, 288. swears falsely, 289. returns to London, 290. employed to transact the Pretender's affairs in England, 377, 378. leaves England, 399.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

George Lewis, Prince of Hannover, afterwards K. George I., comes and makes his addresses to the Lady Anne, III. 534. a report of K. William's intending to get him declared his immediate Successor, 550, 551. reasons for inviting him over, 553. dilauns the D. of Wolfenbutel, 558. installed Knight of the Garter, 590. does not readily come into the peace of Utrecht, IV. 312. concludes a treaty with the States-General, 347. a writ demanded for him to sit in the House of Peers as D. of Cambridge, 351. a rumour of his intention to come over to England, ibid. reasons and necessity of his coming and residing in Great-Britain, 357. orders given to the Heralds, &c. to be ready to proclaim him on the Queen's demise, 369. account of him, and his character before he ascended the British Throne, 393. is proclaimed in England, Scotland, and Ireland, 394. receives the news of it with great ferocity, 401. arrives in England, ibid. makes his public entry, 402. was a powerful Prince, and had on foot a good number of troops, 404. expressed at his first coming a dislike of the Tories, and his attachment to the Whigs, ibid. absolute Master in his German Dominions, 405. his declaration in Council about Toleration, 405, 406. is crowned with great solemnity, 407. applies himself to get the article of the treaty of Utrecht, relating to Dunkirk, to be put in execution, 407, 408. and to have the faults in the treaty of Spain rectified, 408. his directions concerning Preachers, 413, &c. his proclamation for calling a new Parliament objected against in the House of Commons, 419. debates about his Civil List, 422. the Duchies of Bremen and Verden are made over to him, 424. receives more intelligence of the Rebellion, 433. the E. of Mar's letter to him, 436, &c. great intercession used with him in favour of the condemned Lords, but in vain, 485. his answer to the Lords addresses in their favour, 486. the clause in the act of Settlement against his going abroad repealed, 499. in what respect he was like the D. of Orleans, 506. the K. of Sweden plots to dethrone him, ibid. recommends to the Commons the lessening of the public debts, 526. his answer to the Czar's memorial, 540. guarantee of the neutrality in Italy, 549. tries to bring about an accommodation between the Emperor and the K. of Spain, ibid. difference between him and the Prince of Wales, 550. had, ever since his Accession to the Throne, declared for Toleration, 551, 578. consults the Judges about the dispute between him and the Prince, 555. a design upon his life by John Sheppard, ibid. publishes articles for the regulation and government of the army, 559. mediates a peace between the Emperor and the Turks, 565. his message to the Commons about declaring war against Spain, 581. and to the House of Lords, ibid. his message to the House of Lords about the Petree, 585. refuses the mediation of the States for a peace between England and Spain, 604. forms projects to take Corunna or Peru, ibid. intercedes for the Protestants in Germany, 605. his message about the Royal and London Alliances, 613. the Czar's memorial against him, 615. reconciliation between him and the Prince of Wales, 617. was well skilled in negotiations, and looked into every thing himself, 619. publishes a proclamation against the bubbles, 621. expresses sent to hasten his return to England upon the falling of the South-Sea, 628. his answer to the Commons address about the South-Sea Directors, 645. his proclamation about the Hell fire Clubs, 646. his directions about the Trinity, ibid. his message about the subsidy given to Sweden, 647. and about the debt of the Civil List, 648. his message to the House of Lords about the Pretender's manifesto, 664. founds Professorships of Modern History in the two Universities, 680. his speech to the Commissioners of the Great Seal, 683. his message to the Commons about the Masters in Chancery, ibid. and about the debts of the Civil List, 684. the sole mediation at Cambray is offered him, which he refuses, 689. alarmed at the private treaty between the Emperor and Spain, 690. his answer to the Commons address about the treaty of Hannover, 694. his message to the Commons about an extraordinary supply, 695. his letters to the Czarina, 697. sets out for his German Dominions, is taken ill, dies at Osnaabrug, and is buried at Hannover, 711, 712. his circumstances and character, 712.

George Augustus, Prince, arrives in England, IV. 401. is declared Prince of Wales, 399, 406. the Tories move to have a hundred thousand pounds per ann. settled upon him, 422. is made Guardian of the Realm, 500. takes a progress through some part of the Kingdom, 502. difference between him and the King his Father, 550. is ordered to quit St James's, ibid. not appointed Regent, and retires into the country, 588. who promoted this difference, 609. the King is reconciled to him, 617.

Gertruydenberg; negotiations for a peace there, IV. 164, 165, 169. a motion to examine them, 262.

Ghent; a description of that place, IV. 70. surprized by the French, 71. by the Confederates, 91, 92. the British troops make themselves masters of it, and of Bruges, 283. and refuse to admit any Dutch troops, 297.

Gibraltar taken by the English, III. 664. besieged in vain by the Spaniards and French, 667, &c. 705. yielded to England, IV. 339, 392. the Spaniards desire to have it restored, 600, 605. Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, report of Spain giving some places in Peru in exchange for them, 620. those places absolutely yielded by Spain to Great-Britain, 650. the restitution of them insisted upon by Spain, 674, 690, 699. the Spaniards prepare to recover them, 694, 699. they make preparations for the siege of Gibraltar, and belieg it actually, 709. whether there was a promise to restore it, 701, 703.

Gillon, Charles, publishes a letter from Sir Rowland Gwynne to the E. of Stamford, for which he is fined, III. 722, &c.

Ginckle, Lieutenant-General, at the battle of Byrne, III. 137. at the siege of Limerick, 147. left Commander of the army in Ireland, 150. Commander in chief 174. is created E. of Athlone, and has lands granted him in Ireland, 181. is thanked by the House of Commons, ibid. President of the Court-Martial to try Grandoval, 210. General of the Dutch horse 288. invests Namur, 289, 295, 296. burns the French magazine at Givet, 326. commands a Dutch army, 560. repulses the French, 561. was inclined to cautious but feeble counsels, 562.

Gironne taken by the French, III. 256. IV. 182.

Gloucester, William D. of, his Household settled, III. 380. dies, 409.

Gadolpin, Sidney Lord, made one of the Lords of the Treasury, III. 40. his character, ibid. made first Commissioner of the Treasury, 163, 253, 437. removed, 504. is made Lord High-Treasurer, 544. is for the Occasional Conformity-bill, 581. but thought it unseasonable, 628. is for striking the flags in the ports of Portugal, 624. his proceedings reconciled many to him, ibid. is for settling the Succession in Scotland, 648. reflected upon for permitting the act of security in Scotland to pass, 651, &c. attacked by the Tories, and precluded by the Whigs, 652. is against tacking the Occasional Conformity-bill to the land-tax bill, 672. his speech in answer to the E. of Rochester's, against the exportation of Coin, 674. K. Charles writes a letter to him, 710. declares himself in favour of the Whigs, 716. the Tories very angry with him, 721. is against adjoining the Parliament of Scotland, and orders the Union to be completed, 776. created Viscount Rialton, and Earl Gadolpin, 780. his speech in the debate about the Union, 781. exerts himself in the affair of the Union, 790. threatened to be impeached, ibid. appointed Lord High-Treasurer of Great-Britain, 792. Mr Harley begins to act against him, IV. 34. and to create jealousies of him in the Whigs, 36. he threatens to quit the Queen's service, if Mr Harley had too much interest with her Majesty, ibid. promises that preferments should be bestowed on men well principled, ibid. backs the motion for encouraging trade to the West-Indies, 40. refuses to serve any longer, if Mr Harley was not removed, 55. the Queen not much concerned at it, ibid. it was part of Mr Harley's scheme to remove him, ibid. offers the Bank a considerable sum of money to preserve its credit, 61. the Whigs jealous of him, 110. adheres to the Scottish Ministers, and supports them, 112. described in Sacheverell's sermon under the name of Felpeus, 150, 151. speaks to the Queen about her recommendation of Hill, 185. the Queen's letter to him about the D. of Shrewsbury being made Lord-Chamberlain, 187. his letter to her Majesty upon that point, ibid. dismissed from the office of Lord-Treasurer, 190. his death and character, 208.

Gordon, George D. of, Governor of Edinburgh-Castle, III. 64. refuses to deliver it up to K. William, 67. amuses the Convention, 69. yields up Edinburgh-Castle, 76.

Gordon, Duchess of, sends the Faculty of Advocates a medal of the Pretender, IV. 217. Gortz, Baron, IV. 507. seized, ibid. his letters, 509, &c. forms the project of making a peace between Sweden and Russia, 530. his letters published, ibid. carries the K. of Sweden the plan of peace between him and the Czar, 540. had an interview with the Czar at Loe, 616. arrested and put to death, 541.

Gower, Colonel, the Commons advise the King to remove him, III. 225, 227. continued, 233.

Grafton, Henry Fitz-Roy D. of, at the siege of Cork, III. 150. killed, 151.

Grafton, Charles Fitz-Roy D. of, appointed one of the Lords Justices of Ireland, IV. 478. made Colonel of the royal regiment of horse-guards, 503. made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 617. chosen Knight of the Garter, 651. made Lord-Chamberlain, 679. Grabam, Richard, one of the wicked Solicitors employed in the Reigns of K. Charles II. and James II. III. 96, 113. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132.

Grandaval, Mr Bartholomew de Linieres de enters into a plot to assassinate K. William, III. 209, &c. executed, 212.

Grants; bill to examine those made since the Revolution, IV. 245.

Granville, George, made Secretary at War in the room of R. Walpole, IV. 192. created Baron Langdown, 234.

Gregg, William, his treasonable correspondence with France, IV. 47. a Committee of Lords appointed to examine him, ibid. tried and condemned, 48. executed, 52. his dying speech said to have been drawn up by Mr Harley, ibid.

Griffin, Edward Lord, proceedings against him, III. 113.

Guernsey, Heneage Finch E. of, his speech in the debates about the Union, III. 786. urges to have the state of the Nation taken into consideration, IV. 40. speaks in Dr Sacheverell's behalf, 158, 159, &c.

Guernsey, Heneage Finch Lord, his speech in Parliament, IV. 227. created E. of Aylesford, 407.

Guiscard, Marquis de, account of him and his project for a descent into France, III. 761, &c. examined about it, ibid. expected to have found a great support in Mr St John, IV. 201. being disappointed he corresponds with the Court of France, ibid. apprehended, slays Mr Harley, and dies of his wounds, 202, &c.

Guy, Henry, Secretary of the Treasury, turned out of his place, and sent to the Tower for bribery, III. 268. concerned in corrupting the Members of the House of Commons, 276.

Guy, Thomas, founds an hospital for incurables, IV. 686.

Gwynne, Sir Rowland, removed from the place of Treasurer of their Majesties Chamber, III. 193. examined before the Council, 8 X for

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

for words reflecting on Lord Viscount Sidney, ibid. and 194.
Gwyn, Francis, one of the Committee for inspecting the books of the Chamberlain of London, &c. 260.
Gyllemburg, Count, the Swedish Resident, enters into a conspiracy to set the Pretender on the English Throne, IV. 506. secured, 507. author of a libel, ibid. scheme of his Conspiracy, 509. extracts of his letters, ibid. &c. released, 549.

II

Haddington, John Hamilton E. of, was for the Union, III. 771.
Hagenau, the French lines forced there, III. 703. taken by the Confederates, 704. a description of that place, ibid.
Hallifax, George Saville Marquis of, made Lord Privy-Seal, III. 38, 39. hated both by Whigs and Tories, ibid. addresses to remove him from the King's Presence and Councils, 97. quits the office of Speaker of the House of Lords, 112. resigns the Privy-Seal, 114, 115. joins with the Tories, ibid. opposes the Court, 231.
Hallifax, Charles Montague Marquis of left out of the Privy-Council, III. 545. one of the Managers against the Occasional Conformity bill, 581. his speech about the danger of the Church, 725. causes the public records and offices to be put into good order, and moves that the Queen should buy the Canaan, 731. speeches about the Union, 781, 785, &c. moves for a Committee to receive proposals for encouraging the trade to the West-Indies, IV. 40. his speech in relation to the affairs of Spain, 45. his speeches at Dr Sacheverell's trial, 158, &c. speaks against the resumption of K. William's grants, 245. moves for an address against the offers of France, 249. complains of the D. of Ormond's resolution, 250.
Hampden, Charles Montague Lord, has a burlesque chant, IV. 316. his speech about the Union, 318. represented the danger threatening the Protestant Succession, 345. his speech about the Catalans, 347. his speech about the Lorrain, 349. a consultation at his house, 351. made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, 366. created E. of Hallifax, 407. and Knight of the Garter, ibid. his character of By Burnet, 419. his death and character, 424.
Hamilton, William Douglas, or Hamilton D. of, President at the Scottish Lords meeting in London, III. 63. chosen President of the Convention in Scotland, 64. his character, 73. appointed High Commissioner, 74.
Hamilton, James Hamilton D. of, was for calling a new Parliament in Scotland, III. 556, 557. sets up for Patron of the Episcopal Clergy, 595. the Conspiracy in Scotland said to be a contrivance to ruin him, 634. his part in it, 637. keeps a correspondence with the Court at St Germain, 648. presents a resolve in Parliament for a treaty with England, 650. his motion for limitations of government, ibid. declares he should be one of the first to draw his sword against a Popish Successor, 651. is at the head of the Cavaliers, 690. presents against a resolve for a previous treaty with England, 691. moves for enforcing limitations, 692. makes a speech in his own vindication about the plot, 694. presents a clause about the Union, 695. declares the Cavaliers, 696. letters sent to him from the Pretender, 767, 768. was against the Union, 770. his debates about it, 771, &c. proposes the renewing of the motion for settling the Crown on the House of Hanover, 773, 774. encouraged the tumults against the Union, 775. does not oppose it at last, and makes his terms with the Court, 776. how far he went into the Pretender's interests, IV. 62, 63. chosen one of the sixteen Peers, 64. artfully saves himself and his friends, 66. sets himself in opposition to the D. of Queensberry's power, 110. created D. of Brandon, but a caveat is entered against his patent, 219, 229. his patent examined, 229. made Master of the Ordnance, and appointed Ambassador Extraordinary to France, 296. killed in a duel, 297.
Hamilton, Lieutenant-General, sent over to command in Ireland, III. 77. disappoints K.

William's expectations, and joins with his enemies, ibid. routs the Protestants in Ireland, 80. taken prisoner at the battle of the Boyne, 137.
Hampden, Richard, made Privy-Counsellor, III. 38. and one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, 40. moves for a further supply, 97. made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 120. his speech about the negotiation of peace, IV. 246. moves for the Allies to guarantee the Protestant Succession, 272.
Hampden, John, moves for an address for a war with France, III. 89. account of his prosecution and fine, 114. concerned in the D. of Monmouth's affair, ibid. his character and speech, ibid. his speech against the Militia, 115, 116.
Hanmer, Sir Thomas, speaks for the treaty of commerce, IV. 315. causes the bill for approving it to miscarry, 319. moves for an address of thanks for the treaties of peace and commerce, ibid. chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, 338. his speech about the danger of the Protestant Succession, 354. his speech upon presenting the Civil List and Lottery bills, 397.
Hanover, House of, put into the Succession to the Crown, III. 55. raised to the Electoral dignity, 217. designed for the Throne of England, 410. Hanover Succession. See Succession. pretended design to bring them in before the Prince of Denmark, 502.
Hanover, George Elector of, commands the Imperial army, and beats the French, IV. 14. advises the Court of England to send the D. of Marlborough to the K. of Sweden, 15. commands again in the Empire, 100. acknowledged Elector of Brunswick Lunenburg, 101. commands on the Rhine, 140. his memorial, 225. his Succession secured at the treaty of Utrecht, 267. offers to maintain at his own expence, half of the troops he had in the service of Great-Britain, 287. refuses to come into the British measures, 294.
Hanover, George Augustus Electoral Prince of, his great bravery at the battle of Quadrard, IV. 74.
Harcourt, Simon, carries up to the House of Lords an amendment against the Lords Somers, O. G. and Halifax, III. 459. reports the Lord Haverham's speech, 467.
Harcourt, Sir Simon, made a Privy-Counsellor, III. 545. and Solicitor-General, 554. draws up artfully the bill for enacting the Bill of Attainder, 792. tries to engage the Tories in the Queen's interests, 811. resigns his place, 561. is Counsel for Dr Sacheverell, 154. made Attorney-General, 191. and Lord-Chancellor, ibid. complained against by the E. of Rochester, 195. his speech to the E. of Rochester, when sworn Lord-Treasurer, 202. created Baron of Stanton-Harcourt, 219. author of the advice to the October Club, 234. declared Lord High-Chancellor, 311. rectifies a mistake concerning the Regency, 329. obtains a pardon for L. Bolingbroke, 674.
Hare, Dr Francis, his letter about the management of the war, III. 764. his pamphlet intitled, The Allies, &c. defended IV. 28. his thanksgiving-fermon, 70, 90. his book intitled, Negotiations for a treaty of peace, &c. 120. his letters to a Tory Member, 138, 144, 147, 168. vindicates the barrier-treaty, 241.
Harley, Robert, one of the Commissioners of the public accounts, III. 162. his character, 238. brings in the bill for frequent Parliaments, 260. was for the land-bank, 322. is against Sir John Fenwick's bill of Attainder, 343. chosen Speaker, 438. his character, ibid. moves for the settling of some conditions of Government, before the bill of Succession passed, 443. makes the E. of Rochester more submissive, 488. chosen Speaker again, 498. and 572. made Secretary of State, 647. in the Queen's confidence, 780. was for pacific measures, ibid. gains great credit with the Queen, and begins to set up for himself, without the Lord-Treasurer, IV. 34, 35. afflicted in that by Mrs Molham, ibid. created jealousies in the Whigs of the D. of Marlborough and L. Godolphin, 36. tries to engage the chief of the Tories in the Queen's interests, 38. was for having the Parliament to be an old one, 39. Gregg's affair does him a great prejudice, 52. resigns his place of Secretary of State, 55. the D. of Marlborough and L. Godolphin refuse to serve, if he continued any longer in that post, ibid. part of his new scheme was to remove the L. Godolphin, ibid. his intrigues with the Queen, 105, &c. his speeches at Dr Sacheverell's trial, 152, &c. cabals with Mrs Molham, 187, 188. made Commissioner, Chancellor, and Under-Treasurer of the Exchequer, 190, 191. sends Agents in the City of London to raise money, 193. his designs, ibid. the Tories are jealous of him, and form an opposition against him, 201. is stabbed by the Marquis de Gulcard, ibid. this attempt disconcerts the party formed against him, 202. becomes Prime-Minister, ibid. created Baron of Wigmore, and E. of Oxford and Mortimer, and made Lord-Treasurer, ibid. had private assurances of advantages from Spain, when he formed the South-Sea project, 219. resolves to make a peace, ibid. his speech in Parliament, 227. blamed by his friends for not displacing all the Whigs, 235. his speech about the resumption of K. William's grants, 246. his speech on the D. of Ormond's refusing to fight, 261. misunderstanding between him and the L. Bolingbroke, 295. Mr Prior's letter to him, 306. concerned in giving up the fillet of Newfoundland, ibid. &c. orders the British Plenipotentiaries to sign a peace with France, 310. his opposition to the Pretender's being removed out of Lorrain, 322. installed Kt of the Garter, 328. hated both by Whigs and Tories, and upon ill terms with L. Bolingbroke, notwithstanding which he brings his own scheme to bear, ibid. raises a million in two or three days, 329. L. Bolingbroke, Secretary Bromley, and Sir William Wyndham, gain the ascendancy over him, upon which he thinks of retiring, 335. endeavours to support the Bank, 336. moves for a bill to make it treason to bring any foreign troops into the Kingdom, 345. vindicates the peace, 349. and his paying a yearly sum to the Highlanders, 350. his letter to the Elector of Brunswick, 358. doubtful whether he was for or against the Schism-bill, which he had castrated, 360. kept to himself the principal direction of domestic affairs, and disposal of places, and advanced his children, 266, 267. endeavours to reconcile himself to the Whigs, to gain L. Couper's friendship, and to remove L. Bolingbroke, 367. his attachment to the House of Hanover the cause of his removal, ibid. goes to wait upon K. George at Greenwich, but is not taken notice of, 401. erects a Chamberlain's Court in Scotland, 403. attends at the King's Coronation, 407. his conduct very extraordinary, 418. takes his seat in the House of Lords, 421. impeached of high-treason, 427. his speech in his own defence, 431. he is carried to the Tower, 432. debate in the House of Commons on his answer, 434. presents a petition to the House of Lords, 541. his trial, ibid. he is discharged, 545. forbid the Court, ibid. excepted out of the act of Grace, 546. his speech upon the mutiny-bill, 557. and on the repeal of the Schism-bill, 579. is against the Peerage-bill, 585. he dies, 680. his character, ibid.

Haverham, John Thompson Lord, words of his at a Conference between the Lords and Commons excepted against, III. 466, 467. his answer to the Commons, 472. one of the Lords of the Admiralty, 480. his speech for inviting over the next Successor to the Crown, 719. moves that the miscarriages of the last campaign, occasioned by the Allies, might be inquired into, 723.
Haverham, Maurice Thompson E. of, his speeches in the debates about the Union, III. 783, 786. was an Occasional Conformist, 786. his speech about the state of the Nation, IV. 40. and the affairs of Spain, 45. his speeches about the Scottish Invasion, 112. his account of it, 113. his speeches at Dr Sacheverell's trial, 157, 159.
Havre de Grace bombarded, III. 255.
Heathcote, Sir Gilbert, Governor of the Bank, IV. 190. endeavours used to put off his being chosen Lord Mayor, but he is chosen notwithstanding, 192. insulted, 193. sworn in Lord Mayor, but insulted again, 194. is against addressing the Queen about the peace, 273.

AN INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Heidelberg taken and burnt by the French, III. 241
Hainfius, Pensionary, his speech against a peace, IV. 290
Herbert, Arthur, first Commissioner of the Admiralty, his character, III. 41. his engagement with the French at Bantry-Bay, 91. created E. of Torrington, 92. attempts to surprize Cork, 102
Herbert, Henry, made Baron Herbert of Chersburg, III. 252
Hiffe-Cassel, Landgrave of, beats the French before Rhinfeld, III. 213. commands part of the German army, 240
High-Church-men had a great confidence in the E. of Rocheſter, III. 481. complain of the Convocation not ſetting, 523
Highlanders in Scotland do not declare themſelves, but provide powder and ball, IV. 416. attempt to surprize Edinburgh-Caſtle, 438. cannot be perſuaded to enter England, 454. had been tutored by the E. of Wintoun, and told, that if they entered England, they would be all cut to pieces, or taken and fold for ſlaves, ibid. diſguſted at being joined with Papists in Lancashire, 456. See Rebels. Act for diſarming them, 686
High-Treason; bill for regulating trials in caſes of High-Treason, III. 191, 221, &c.
Hill, Aigail, account of her, and her father, and family, IV. 34. raiſed by the Duchess of Marlborough, ibid. married to Mr Moſham. See Moſham, ibid.
Hill, John, an account of him, IV. 34. raiſed and taken care of by the Duchess of Marlborough, ibid. the Queen writes to the D. of Marlborough to give him a regiment, 185. gives him a penſion, and makes him a General, 186. he commands the forces in the Canada expedition, 215. made Lieutenant of the Tower, 234. is Brigadier, and commands the forces that were to take poſſeſſion of Dunkirk, 280
Hilſory, Modern, Profeſſors of it founded, IV. 679, 680
Headley, Benjamin, his ſermon about reſiſtance, III. 726. his ſermon before the Lord-Mayor, IV. 150. ſeveral books written againſt him, ibid. Dr Sacheverell reflects upon him, ibid. votes of the Commons in his favour, 152. vindicates the Revolution, ibid. the mob threaten to pull down his Church and Houſe, 155. Biſhop of Bangor (now of Wincheſter) publiſhes his Prefervative and Sermon, 536. representation of the Convocation about them, with his answer, ibid. &c. his ſpeech in Parliament, 579
Hochſtet, a deſcription of that place, and of the battle near it, III. 657
Holland; account of its Government, III. 31, &c.
Holland, States of, require all that had been declared Rebels in England to depart their Dominions, III. 394. See States.
Holſtein, attacked by the Danes, III. 410
Holt, John, Lord Chief-Justice, his arguments in the Bankers caſe, III. 404. reſuſes the Great Seal, 406. ſworn of the Privy-Council, IV. 105. his death and character, 156
Hofier, Francis, ſails with a Squadron to the West-Indies, IV. 698
Howe, John, made Vice-Chamberlain to Q. Mary, III. 39. moves for an addreſs to the King to remove the Marquiſſes of Caermarthen and Hollifax from his Preface and Councils, 97
Hudſon-Bay left to the Engliſh, IV. 314, 391
Hume, E. of, letters ſent to him by the Pretender, III. 767. dies, 768
Hungary, a Conſpiracy there, III. 445. the inhabitants oppreſſed, ibid. an infurrection there, 622. malecontents there make a great progreſs, 653, 668. miſuſed by the Court of Vienna, 669. treaty with them, ibid. ſupported by France, ibid. routed, ibid. almoſt entirely ruined, 715
Huntingdon, Theophilus Hoſtings E. of, proteſts againſt the Succeſſion-bill, III. 445
Huy taken by the Confederates, III. 256. and 620. a deſcription of it, ibid. taken by the French, 698. and by the Allies, 699

I.

Jacobites concert measures with France for K. James's Reſtoration, III. 139. keep out of the way for fear of being inſulted, 143. their Leaders ſeized, ibid. their plot for reſtoring K. James, 166. an artifice of theirs in Scotland, to induce the King to diſguſt the Presbyterians, 181, 182. take the oaths, ibid. ſome reſented ſuch put into places, 190. enter into a plot for aſſaſſinating K. William, 196. grow outrageous, 218. induttrious in their plots againſt the Government, 258. make rejoicings on the pretended Prince of Wales's birth-day, 281. endeavour to diſtreſs the Government, 303. eſpecially on account of the coin, 305. and on the King's diſowning the act for the Scottiſh Eaſt-India Company, 309. elevated at the thoughts of the Aſſaſſination-plot, 313. ready to take up arms, 314. divided into Compounders and Non-Compounders, 337. enraged at the K. of France's giving up K. James's intereſt, 361. addreſs of the Commons againſt them, 389. after that K. William was a Pa-piſt, 390. endeavour to make an advantage of the affair at Darien, 393, 407. buſy in Scotland, 407. their hopes revive on the D. of Gloceſter's death, and the Partition-treaty, 421, &c. flock into Scotland, 596. employed, which brings a jealouſy, 611. in the plot in Scotland, 629. their ſurmiſes with regard to the act of Succeſſion in Scotland, 648. pretend the Church was in danger, 715. are againſt the Union, 770. ſome ſaid there was noſe in the Nation, IV. 35, 60. talk of a new Invaſion on Scotland and Ireland, 108. encouraged, 186. run to Court, ibid. impudent in Scotland, 217. their deſign in preſenting the Pretender's medal to the Faculty of Advocates, 218. buſy in England, ibid. publiſh an oath to an Invader, &c. ibid. elated at the proſpect of a peace, and congratulated by the Dauphin upon it, 225. promote addreſſes for diſſolving the Union, 412. carry on their deſigns in Scotland with ſecrecy and order, 433. impuſtune the L. Kenmare to take arms for the Pretender, 445. their number increaſes, 501

K. James II. offered to throw himſelf into the E. of Danby's hands, III. 39. the annual revenue of the Crown during his reign, 51. lands in Ireland, 53, 80. letter of the Biſhops in Scotland to him, 58. a letter from him to the Convention in Scotland, 67, 68. his violation of the fundamental laws and conſtitutions of Scotland, 71, &c. Commiſſions from him brought to Scotland, whereupon the Convention there puts out a proclamation againſt him, 73. his reception at the Court of France, 78. reaſons for his not meeting with ſo much encouragement from France as he expected, 79. the K. of France lends him, however, troops and money, ibid. makes a ſecret treaty with him, 80. comes to Cork, and thence to Dublin, and publiſhes five proclamations, ibid. uſes the Proteſtants very ill, ibid. comes before Londonderry, ibid. goes to meet his Parliament at Dublin, 81. his ſpeech, 84, 85. his declaration to the Iriſh, 85. paſſes the bill of attainder in Ireland, 87. his proceedings againſt the University of Dublin, 88. ſome letters of his intercepted, 97. ſends a ſupply to his friends in Scotland, 121. a bill brought in for abjuring him, 130. a propoſal made for ſeizing him, 133. believed that K. William durſt not leave England, nor venture over to Ireland, 134. marches from Dublin to join the reſt of his forces, ibid. advances to the Boyne, ibid. calls a Council of war, and reſolves to oppoſe the enemy's paſſing that river, 135. orders a ſhip to be got ready at Waterford to ſecure his retreat, ibid. defeated at the battle of the Boyne, 136. retreats to Dublin, and makes a ſpeech to the Magiſtrates, 138. embarks at Waterford, and returns to France, ibid. and 145. the braſs-money coined by him in Ireland is cried down, 146. plot for reſtoring him, 166. his answer to the Jacobites, who ſent to aſk his leave to take the oaths, 182. prepares for a deſcent into England, 197. his letter to ſeveral Lords and others of his late Privy-Council, upon his Queen's approaching delivery, ibid. ſends his declaration over to England, ibid. the perſons excepted therein, 199. at la Hogue, with an army ready to embark for England, 200, 201. his ſorrowful letter to K. Lewis, upon the defeat of the French fleet at la Hogue, 205. had prepared a declaration, but makes another in a different ſtrain, 246. a propoſal made to him, that he ſhould reſign his title in favour of his Son, ibid. he encourages the Aſſaſſination-plot, 313. grants the Plotters a Com-miſſion, ibid. and 315. particularly one written with his own hand to Sir George Barclay, 315, 319, 320, 324. the Earl of Portland and Marſhal Beuſſiers have a conference about the manner of diſpoſing of K. James, 360. his intereſt left unregarded at the peace of Ryſwick, ibid. whereupon he publiſhes a manifeſto, 361, &c. the K. of France reſuſes to remove him, 379. none of the Engliſh Noblemen in France will converſe with him, ibid. his letter, wherein he approved of aſſaſſinating Oliver Cromwell, 490. account of his behaviour the laſt years of his life, 489, &c. his death and character, 491. buried privately, ibid. his iſſue by Anne Hyde, 533. deſired to have the diſpoſal of his ſecond daughter Lady Anne, 533. memoirs of him voted ſeditious by the Houſe of Commons in Ireland, 611. his Queen-Dowager files a bill in Chancery for the arrears of her dowry, and has fifty thouſand pounds remitted to her, IV. 351

James. See Pretender.
Jaſſen, Sir Theodore writes againſt the treaty of commerce, IV. 315. had a hand in the Britiſh Merchant, 316. expelled the Houſe of Commons, and taken into cuſtody, 634. his information before the Committee of the Houſe of Commons, 638. Horatio Walpole and Sir Richard Steele ſpeak in his favour, 643
Jefferies, George, Lord-Chancellor, his caſe reported, III. 96
Jekyll, Sir Joſeph, was for taking away the firſt fruits and tenths, III. 642. one of the Managers of Dr Sacheverell's trial, IV. 152. ſpeaks in behalf of Bp Fleetwood's Preface, 271. ſpeaks againſt the treaty of commerce, 315. and againſt the Schiſm-bill, 360. his ſpeech in favour of the E. of Oxford, 427, 430. and of the D. of Ormond, 428. prepares a bill to attaint ſeveral of the Rebels, 483. is one of the ſelect Committee for the South-Sea affair, 632. made one of the Com-miſſioners of the Great Seal, 683
Jenningſ, Sir John, at the engagement near Malaga, III. 664. made Rear-Admiral of the Blue, 678. fails to the relief of Barcelona, 753. made Admiral, IV. 143. arrives with a fleet before Barcelona, 213. fetches the Engliſh troops from Spain, 296. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 406
Jerſy, Guernſey, &c. the Lords addreſs the King to put thoſe Iſlands into a poſture of defence, III. 96
Jerſy, Edward Villiers E. of, ſent Ambaſſador Extraordinary to France, III. 379. returns to England, 392. appointed Secretary of State, ibid. endeavours to diſpoſe K. William to change his Miniſtry, 404. ſent to demand the Great Seal from L. Sommers, 406. is one of the Plenipotentiaries at the ſecond Partition-treaty, 408. made Lord Chamberlain, 409. not queſtioned for the ſhare he had in the Partition-treaty, 457. his character, 509, 510. made Lord Chamberlain, 545. turned out, 647. his character, ibid. called upon by L. Sommers to vindicate K. William, 675. made Lord Privy-Seal, IV. 219. dies, ibid.
Jerſy, William Villiers E. of, votes with the Whig Lords, IV. 348. a warrant iſſued out to apprehend him, 439
Joy, Archibald Campbell E. of, choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, IV. 64. his ſpeeches about the malt-tax, 317. cauſes K. George to be proclaimed in Scotland, 394. ſaves Inventory from falling into the hands of the Rebels, 449. removed from all his employments, 500. made Lord Privy-Seal for Scotland, 649
Imperialiſts behave very ill, and do not join the D. of Marlborough, III. 698, &c. intrenched at Lauterburg, 703
Indemnity, act of, deſired by the King, III. 54. paſſed, 132. one proclaimed in Scotland, 596
Independents, an account of them, III. 45, 513, 514. are for a toleration, 515
Ingoldſby,

Ingoldby, Colonel, commands the forces in the Canada expedition, IV. 215. made one of the Lords-Justices of Ireland, 217

Inniskillin, the inhabitants of that place take arms, III. 77. resolve not to admit an Irish garrison, 84. proclaim K. William and Q. Mary, ibid. defeat the Irish in several encounters, ibid. join the D. of Schomberg, 100. rout the Irish, 101. their bravery at the battle of the Boyne, 136, 137

Innocent XI, Pope, dies, III. 104

Innocent XII, Pope, chosen, III. 186. the Court of France comes to an accommodation with him, 214, 215. persuades the K. of Spain to make a will in favour of the D. of Anjou, 418

Invasion; the intended French invasion, III. 212. of Scotland taken into consideration by the House of Lords, IV. 112. and by the House of Commons, 113. an invasion designed from Surden, 507, &c.

Inverness; the French propose landing there with the Pretender, IV. 61

Jones, Edward, Bp of St Asaph, prosecuted for Simony, III. 523

Joseph. See Emperor.

Ireland, K. James lands in that Kingdom, III. 53, 80. Protestants in Ireland oppressed, many of them fly into England, 77. the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland present an address to K. William, praying him to take that Kingdom into his protection, ibid. the miscarriages in Ireland inquired into by the Parliament, 96. money raised for the war there, 97. Clergy of that Kingdom, act for their relief, 98. expedition for the reduction of Ireland, 99. the miscarriages in the management of the war there examined by the House of Commons, 115. state of affairs before K. William's arrival there, 133. bill for sale of the forfeited estates there, and for attaining those who had been in the Rebellion, 161. the army there oppresses the country, and commit great outrages, 162. vacant Bishopsricks filled up, 163. continuation of the war there, 174. appeals of the Parliament in that Kingdom, 218, 219. the state of that Kingdom about forfeited estates, &c. examined by the English Parliament, 234. addresses to the King upon that head, 235. Parliament there, 247. great discontent in that Kingdom, in which the Natives were too much favoured, ibid. the Government of it put into the hands of three Lords-Justices, ibid. state of affairs there, and Parliament, 286, 287. address of the Commons in England against the woollen manufacture in Ireland, 376. linen manufacture there recommended, ibid. the forces in that Kingdom provided for by Parliament, 392. new Lords-Justices of that Kingdom appointed, ibid. forfeited estates there resumed by the Parliament, 398. proceedings of the Trustees for the sale of those estates, 487. two of them ordered to attend the House of Commons in England, 501. great oppressions committed by them, and they are complained of to the House of Commons, 504. a clause in a bill for sending the abjuration to Ireland, and obliging all to take it, 583. great discontents in that Kingdom, 605. divisions between Whig and Tory, ibid. the Trustees for the forfeited estates much censured, 606. raise a scandal upon the Irish, as if they designed to make themselves independent from England, 606, &c. uneasiness there fomented by the E. of Rochester, and connived at by the D. of Ormond, 688. bill for improving the hempen and flaxen manufactures in Ireland, ibid. some forces ordered to march towards the North of that Kingdom, IV. 60. bill to prevent the growth of Popery there, 148. Convocation there, 149. the Jacobite interest promoted there, 330. designs of new-modelling the army there, 346. the Schilm-bill extended to that Kingdom, 363. great number of Papists there to be dreaded, 403. Irish bill, see above for that Kingdom, and great uneasiness about them, 675

Judges in Scotland; debate concerning them, III. 75

John, P. of the Irish, his account of that book, III. 475

John, appointed to the King's absence, III. 280. their proceedings, 281

Justices of Peace; bill for qualifying them, III. 4

K.

Kilbilly, battle of, III. 763

Kilgobbin, — Chief Justice of Ireland, his speech, III. 78. draws up an address against repealing the act of Settlement, 87

Kilgobbin, Fort, taken by the French, III. 615. a description of it, ibid.

Kelly, Hugh and William, list in the Pretender's service, and are apprehended, IV. 24

Kelly, George, alias Johnston, taken up, IV. 660. burns his papers, ibid. employed in the Conspiracy, 667. bill to inflict pains and penalties on him, 667, 668

Kent, Thomas, Bp of Bath and Wells, refuses to take the oaths, III. 43

Kenmore, William Gordon Lord Viscount, takes up arms for the Pretender, IV. 445. his character, 448. taken prisoner at Preston, 459. brought to the bar of the House of Lords, and pleads guilty, 484. condemned, ibid. great intercession in his behalf, 485. executed, 486

Kennet, White, his advertisements about the Bp of Bangor's Sermon, IV. 539

Kent, Henry de Grey Earl of, made Lord-Chamberlain, III. 647. created Viscount Goderic, Earl of Harold, and Marquis of Kent, 780. his speech in the debates about the Union, 786. made a Duke, IV. 187. declines the employment of Ambassador to Hanover, 338. made one of the Lords of the Bedchamber, 407. Lord Steward of the Household, 504

Kentish petition, III. 472. the Petitioners imprisoned, 473. released and entertained at Mercers-Hall, 480. further votes against them, 504

Keserfwaert, put into the hands of the French, and besieged by the Allies, III. 504. besieged by the Elector Palatine, 500. a description of it, ibid.

Kidd, William, employed against the Pirates, turns Pirate himself, III. 396. seized, 397. tampered with by some of the Members of the House of Commons, 458, &c. executed, 460

Kidnapping of soldiers, III. 236

King, Sir Peter, his speeches against Dr. Sacheverell, IV. 151, &c. speaks in behalf of Bp Fleetwood, 271. speaks against the treaty of commerce, 315, 320, 341. made a congratulatory speech to K. George on his birth-day, 402. appointed Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas, 412. made Speaker of the House of Lords, Lord-Keeper, and Baron of Ockham, 684 King's Evil, Q. Anne touches for it, III. 592. a new office for it, ibid.

Kingston, Evelyn Pierpoint E. of, created Marquis of Dorchester, III. 780

Kingston, William Pierpoint D. of, appointed Keeper of the Privy-Seal, IV. 504

Kinnoul, George Hay Lord, engaged in the Rebellion, IV. 436. imprisoned, 437

Knight, Robert, Cashier of the South-Sea Company, examined by the Lords, IV. 633. withdraws out of the Kingdom, ibid. proclamation to apprehend him, 634. his books and papers secured, and the whole account relating to him, 635—637

Knosque, Fort, surprized by the Allies, IV. 286

L.

Lambert, Sir John, ordered to be taken into custody, IV. 634

Lambert, Marquis de, the D. of Lorraine's Minister forbidden the Court, and goes to Oxford, IV. 410

Landshire-Plot, III. 166, 191, 196, 265. the Plotters tried, 266. bring their affair before the Parliament, 267. votes of the Commons about it, ibid.

Land-Bank erected, III. 322. fails, 334

Land-forces; debates in the House of Commons about them, III. 224. estimates for their maintenance, 225. debates upon the bill for regulating them, IV. 423

Land-tax bill, debate about the preamble of it, IV. 488

Landau; description of that place, III. 561. taken by the French, 621. besieged and taken by the Allies, 661, 662. by the French, 13

London, battle of, III. 248

London, attacked by the Allies, IV. 270, 271

London, George Granville Lord Viscount, Treasurer of the Household, IV. 348. taken into custody, 439

Lough, Count of intended to command the troops sent by France, into Ireland, III. 79. but does not go at last, ibid. K. James makes him Knight of the Garter, 80. advises K. James, at the battle of the Boyne, to retreat, 137. retires to France, 138

Lowe; bill for regulating proceedings at law, III. 731

Lowe, John, account of him, IV. 619. kills Beauclerk, 620. author of the Mississippi scheme, and made Comptroller of the Treasury of France, ibid. comes to England, and pleads his pardon, 653

Lawson, Sir Gilfrid, his speeches in Parliament, IV. 521, 576. made Groom of the King's Bed-chamber, 617

Lay Baptism, disputes about it, IV. 254

Loyer, Christopher, apprehended, and makes his escape, IV. 660. retaken and committed to the Tower, ibid. brought to his trial, and found guilty, 666. reprieved from time to time, ibid. examined by a Committee of the House of Commons, ibid. his trial published, ibid. report of the Committee appointed to examine him, ibid. executed, ibid.

Leake, Sir John, commands a fleet, III. 665. sent to relieve Gibraltar, 668. made Vice-Admiral of the White, 678. relieves Gibraltar a second time, and destroys several of the enemy's ships, 705. fails to the relief of Barcelona, 752. disperses a fleet of Tartars near Barcelona, IV. 94. assists in the conquest of Minorca, 95, 96. made one of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, 143. carries to Dunkirk the English forces that were to take possession of that place, 280

Lechmere, Nicholas, speaks against the treaty of commerce, IV. 315. seconds a motion of General Stanhope about the Pretender, 323. had a hand in the Griffin, 335. finds fault with the lenity shewn to Mr. Bidford, 337. affirms the Protestant Succession to be in danger, 354. speaks against the Schilm-bill, 360, &c. moves to have the Toleration-bill extended to Ireland, 363. received by K. George with particular marks of favour, 402. made Solicitor General, 412. impeaches the E. of Derwentwater, 482. Chairman of the Committee to draw up articles against the seven impeached Lords, ibid. prepares a bill for attaining several of the Rebels, 483. moves for a proclamation, offering a pardon to those that were in arms in Scotland, 484. moves for a clause to exclude Pensioners from Parliament, 495. made Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, 541. made Attorney-General, 562. quarrel between him and Sir William Thompson, 610. is one of the Secret Committee, 632

Lede, Marquis de, takes Sardinia, IV. 549. lands in Sicily, 567. Admiral Byng's letter to him, 568. advances against Alexander, 572. raises some regiments in Sicily, 573. account of him, 590. retires to France, 591. is in the battle there, ibid. makes a show of attacking the Imperialists, but fortifies Castro Giovane, 598. being hard pressed by the Imperialists, he makes overtures for evacuating Sicily, 600. signs conventions for evacuating Sicily and Sardinia, 603

Leeds, Thomas Osborne Marquis of Carmarthen, and D. of, accused of taking a bribe from the East India Company, III. 270, 273, 277. speaks against the bill for obliging Sir Thomas Cooke to make a discovery, 273. motion for impeaching him, 278. his speech in the House of Lords, ibid. indicted by Mr. Lockhart with relation to the Pretender, 768. his speech at Dr. Sacheverell's trial, IV. 157

Leeds, Peregrine Osborne D. of, his protests, IV. 610

Lesdale, Frederic Alport Baron of, sent to Paris to discover the Assassination-plot, III. 210, 211

Legation,

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Leghorn, to remain a free port, IV. 563
Legion's humble address to the Lords, III. 647.
Leicester, John Sidney E. of, made Constable of Dover-Castle, IV. 548
Leinster, Meinherdt Schomburg D. of, is appointed Commander of the troops that were designed to make a descent in France, III. 205. the English forces under his command possess themselves of Dixmude and Furnes, 212
Leopold. See Emperor.
Leslie Charles, publishes a relation of the Glencoe business, III. 218. his account of the Pretender, IV. 357
Levellers in Scotland, IV. 682
Leeward-Islands ravaged by the French, IV. 293
Lewis XIV. K. of France, attacks the Spanish Netherlands, III. 35. resolves to extirpate the Reformed Religion in his Dominions, 36. dragoons the Reformed, and repeals the edict of Nantes, ibid. declares war against the Pope, ibid. invades Germany, ibid. sends troops into Ireland, for K. James's use, 79. his private treaty with him, 80. promises to send a fleet to K. James's assistance to Ireland, 134. orders Mr de Taurville to fight the English, 201, 205. his saying about the English rejoicing for the victory at la Hogue, 206. his letter of thanks to his army, for intrenching themselves near the Schild, 256. endeavours to restore K. James, 303. abandons him at the peace of Ryswick, 360. will not remove him at a greater distance than St Germain's, 379. forms the project of securing the Crown of Spain to his grandson the D. of Anjou, 382—384. his behaviour about the Partition-treaty, and the Spanish Succession, 418, &c. accepts the K. of Spain's will, though he feigned at the same time to be ready to observe the Partition-treaty, 427. notifies to the States of Holland his resolution of accepting that will, 429. proposals made to him by the Court of England, for securing the Netherlands, 446. his answer to those proposals, 447. reflected upon in the House of Lords, 451. his letter and memorial to the States, 481, &c. visits K. James, 490. owns the Pretender for K. of England, and causes him to be proclaimed, 491, 492, &c. presses all other Princes to own him, 491. his manifesto for proclaiming him, 492, &c. rejoices at the news of K. William's death, 542. expresses great resentment upon the Dutch declaring war against him, 548, 549. declares war against the Confederates, 560. arms part of the Empire against the Empire itself, 614. countenances a design of an insurrection in Scotland, ibid. his letter to the D. of Savoy, 623. declares war against him, ibid. had Pensioners at the Courts of Denmark and Prussia, 743. sends orders to Villeroy to fight the Alles, 744. had for his motto Nec pluribus impar, 752. makes advantageous offers to the D. of Savoy, 753. and to the Allies, 763. his letter to the Pope, 766. and to Scotland, 767. his enquiry carried off, IV. 32. resolves to send the Pretender to make a descent in Scotland, 56. goes to take leave of him, and presents him with a fine sword, ibid. writes a letter to the Pope upon that expedition, ibid. and a circular letter to his Ministers in Rome, Switzerland, Geneva, &c. about the same, and boasts of success too soon, 62. endeavours to unite the Princes and States of Italy in a league against the Emperor, 98. offers to come to a treaty of partition, by allowing Spain and the West-Indies to K. Charles, 121, 125, 126. rejects the preliminaries of peace, 129. writes to the K. of Spain that he would never abandon him, 147. sets on foot negotiations for a peace, 121, 144, 161. resolves to support his grandson Philip K. of Spain, notwithstanding he pretends the contrary, and sends him reinforcements, 179. aims at making a separate peace exclusive of Spain, 195. entertains L. Bellingbrooke with great magnificence, 287. demands great reparations for an insult offered to Monfieur Mejnager's servants, 290. a declaration of his Minister at the Hague concerning the Pretender, 346. his treachery, 370. forced to abandon the Pretender, 394. promises to maintain the Hanover Succession, 398. his answer about the Catalans, ibid. and about the demolition of Dunkirk, 408. his distinction upon the spirit and the letter of treaties, ibid. his death, 437, 476

Lewis XV. K. of France, IV. 477. a marriage concluded between him and the Infanta of Spain, 674. he sends her back, 688, 689. takes the Government into his own hands, 690. marries Mary daughter of K. Stanislaus, 691
Lewis, Prince of Asturias, a marriage agreed on between him and the D. of Orleans's daughter, IV. 674. his Father the K. of Spain resigns his Dominions to him, 681. he dies, 688
Libellers; proclamation against them, III. 218
Liege, a description of it, III. 563. taken by the Allies, ibid. the French contrive to besiege it, 618. besieged by the French, and relieved by the D. of Marlborough, 698 Limburg taken by the Allies, III. 620. described, ibid.
Limerick besieged, III. 147. the siege raised, 149. besieged a second time, 179. surrenders, 181
Limerick, Bishop of, forms a Committee, to take care of things at Dublin, III. 139
Lines of the French forced, III. 618. by the D. of Marlborough, 699. those of Buhl forced by the French, IV. 13
Linnen Manufacture in Ireland encouraged, III. 376, 610
Lints taken by the French, III. 566
Lisle; description of that place, IV. 80. besieged by the Allies, ibid. a French officer wonderfully gets into that place during the siege, 82. the town surrenders, 87. the siege of the Citadel prosecuted, ibid. it capitulates, 90
Liturgy; a review of it, III. 106, &c. whence the Liturgy of the Church of England was taken, 513
Livonia taken by the Czar, IV. 183
Lloyd, William, Bp of St Asaph, answers K. James's declaration, III. 109. Bp of Litchfield and Cowenry, advises Q. Mary to establish a fund for Preachers and Schoolmasters among the Yaulois, 217. his discourses of God's ways, &c. complained of in Parliament, 231
Lloyd, William, Bp of Worcester, complaint in the House of Commons, and address to Q. Anne against him, III. 575. removed, ibid.
London, Lord-Mayor, &c. of, present an address to Q. Mary, III. 141. and to K. William, 219. entertain K. William and Q. Mary, ibid. Lieutenant of London, debates in the House of Commons about it, 233. changed, 252. the City condemns the violence and sloveness of the House of Commons, 471. inclined to draw up an address against the Parliament's proceedings, 478. their instructions to their Members, 497. Lieutenant there changed, IV. 192. the Tories get the election of Members there, 193. fifty new Churches ordered to be built in and about London, 208. their instructions to their Representatives, 415. riots and disorders committed there on the Anniversary of the Queen's Coronation, and on the D. of Ormond's birth-day, 421. on the King's birthday, and on the 29th of May, 424. and on the E. of Oxford's Commitment, 432
London Assurance, IV. 613
Londonderry takes arms, III. 77. besieged, 80. a little boy brings two letters to the besieged, 82. relieved, 83
Lonfdale, Lord Viscount. See Louthier.
Lords, House of, sign an Association, III. 321. the names of such as refused to sign it, 322. debates in that House about John Fenwick's Attainder, 341. their address of thanks to K. William upon disbanding the army, 388. their address on the King's speech about the Succession, 441. find fault with the partition treaty, 447. advise the King to enter into leagues offensive and defensive with the Emperor, 453. several messages between them and the House of Commons about the trial of the Lords Sommers, Orford, &c. 464. their resolutions previous to those trials, 465. dispute between them and the Commons about some words of the L. Haversham, 466, &c. their representation on the case of the Aylesbury-men, 684. address the Queen to settle the D. of Marlborough's honours on his posterity, 766. examine the Merchants complaint, IV. 41. lay the whole matter before the Queen in an address, 42. debates in that House about the affairs in Spain, and the management of the war there, 45, &c. resolve, that no peace could be safe, if Spain and the Spanish West-Indies were suffered to continue in the House of Bourbon, 46. debates about the elections of the sixteen Peers of Scotland, 109. their votes against the Ministry with relation to the war in Spain, 197, 198. proceedings in this House upon the Queen's laying the plan of peace before the Parliament, 269. debates about the Catalans, the Protestant Succession, removal of the Pretender out of Lorraine, and the late treaties, 347. vote an address against Jesuits, Priests, and against all such as bore arms against the late K. William, 350. move for a second address about the Pretender, 352. take into consideration the trade to Spain and the West-Indies, 365. debate about the Conspirators against K. William, 426. petitions to them in behalf of the condemned Lords, 485. make some exceptions to the preamble of the land-tax bill, 488. debates about the Oxford riot, 516, &c. differences between them and the Commons about the E. of Oxford's trial, 541, &c. debates about the Mutiny-bill, 557, &c. and about the repeal of the Schism and Occasional acts, 578. their resolutions concerning the imprisonment of the Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland, 609, 610. debates about the South-Sea scheme, 611. their proceedings in the South-Sea affair, and South-Sea Directors, 632, &c. complaint in their House about Law's coming over, 653. take into consideration the treaty with Spain, 654. debates about the army, ibid. take into consideration the treaties of Hanover, and address the King thereupon, 694, &c. great debates on the King's speech, 701

Lorrain, Duke of, declares war against France, III. 157. poisoned by means of that perfidious Court, ibid. his character, ibid.
Lorrain restored to the Duke of that name, III. 328, 364
Lorrain, D. of, marries the D. of Orleans's daughter, III. 383
Lothian, William Ker Marquis of, presents the draught of an act for a treaty between England and Scotland, III. 692. chosen one of the sixteen Peers, IV. 64
Lotteries; bill against them, III. 235. encouraged, and money raised upon them, 251
Louvain taken by the Allies, III. 750. description of that town, ibid.
Lowat, Simon Frazer Lord, surprises Inverness for K. George, IV. 464, 472
Lowis dies, III. 209. had entered into the plot for assassinating K. William, 210
Low-Countries, a sudden Revolution there, III. 751
Lowndes, William, presents to the House of Commons several papers relating to the coins, IV. 553
Louthier, Sir John, resigns his place of Commissioner of the Treasury, III. 105. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 236. created Baron Louthier, and Viscount Lonfdale, 326. made Lord Privy-Seal, 392. raises the post of Cumberland, 455
Ludlow, Edmund, comes to England, and is forced to return back, III. 120
Lumley, Richard, created E. of Scarborough, III. 132
Lumley, Richard Lord, makes a motion about removing the Pretender out of Lorraine, IV. 343. speaks in favour of Richard Steele, 344. his speech about the reward for apprehending the Pretender, 397. made one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber to the Prince of Wales, 402
Lumley, Charles Lord, Gentleman of the Bed-chamber to the Prince of Wales, IV. 617
Lunt — discovers the Lancashire plot, III. 265. his depositions, ibid. indicted for perjury, 267
Luteffring Company settled, III. 219, 371
Luxemburg, D. of, General of the French, III. 154. tries to surprise Bruffels, 182. attacks
8 Y tacks

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

had the direction of the plot for assassinating K. William, 210. commands in Flanders at the battle of London, 238. dies, 288
Lydall — has speech about the Septennial bill, IV. 495

Maclefield, Charles Gerrard E. of, assisted by the Jacobites, III. 267. divorced from his Countess, 375

Maclefield, Thomas Parker, E. of, complaints against him, IV. 683. impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, 684. his trial, ibid. committed to the Tower, and released upon paying his fine of 30,000*l.* ibid.

Maclean, Glencoe, III. 283
Macintosh, Brigadier, Laird of Borlum, crosses the Firth of Forth with a body of Highlanders, IV. 445, &c. his character, 449, &c. taken prisoner at Preston, 459. brought up to London, and sent to Newgate, 465. bill of high-treason found against him, 489. he makes his escape, 496

Macnair, Sir Humphry, the supposed Author of the memorial of the Church of England, III. 729. vote of the House of Commons against him, IV. 162

Madagascar, Pirates there suppressed, III. 791

Madrid possessed by the Allies, III. 754. they abandon it again, and K. Philip possesses himself of it, ibid.

Madame, Madam de, in a plot to assassinate K. William, III. 210. causes the K. of Spain's will to be accepted by the French Court, 427. her influence, 440. persuades K. Lewis XIV. to acknowledge the Pretender for K. of England, 491. the K. of France's counsels towards her, IV. 132

Malaga, engagement near it between the English and the French, III. 664

Malta, St. bombarded by the English, III. 323, 320

Malheur, battle of, IV. 136
Mal-tax extended to Scotland, of which the Scots highly complain, IV. 316. riots in Scotland about it, 687. petitions against it from several Shires, 695

Manchester, Charles Montague, E. of, attends K. William to Ireland, III. 133. sent Ambassador to Venice, 350. and to France, 392. ordered to leave the Court of France, 401. his letters to Tory, ibid. made Secretary of State, 504

Manchester, Robert Montague E. of, sent Ambassador to Venice, III. 792. takes Vienna in his way, IV. 21. letters to and from him about the reduction of Naples, ibid. &c. directed thence to him at Venice, 65, 66

Manifesto of the Pretender's adherents, IV. 430

Manresa; a description of that place, I. 11

Manst, Sir Thomas, made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, IV. 190. created Baron Manst, 234

Mars, John Erskine E. of, presents a resolve to Parliament, III. 690. and a draught of an act for a treaty with England, 692. made Secretary of State, 697. his speech at Sacheverell's trial, IV. 160. tries to get the place of Secretary of State for Scotland, 219. against extending the malt-tax to Scotland, 317. made third Secretary for that Kingdom, 328. removed from his place of Secretary of State, 404. had made many professions of loyalty to K. George in a letter, 436. heads the Rebellion in Scotland, ibid. sets up the Pretender's standard at Brae-Mar, 437. assumes the title of Lieutenant-General of the Pretender's forces, and publishes a declaration to exhort the people to take arms, ibid. publishes a manifesto, 438, &c. his men commit great disorders, 449. receives three letters, which had been intercepted by Mr Ford, 451. &c. two letters of his intercepted, 451. sends a Commission to T. Forsler to act as General in England, 455. resolves to pass the Forth, and to march into England, 459. engages the D. of Argyll near Dumblain, 459, 460, &c. waits upon the Pretender at Leipsic, 465. his letter about the Pretender's proceedings, 467, &c.

March, William Douglas E. of, made Governor of Edinburgh-Castle, III. 595

Marchmont, Alexander Hume E. of, Commissioner in the Parliament of Scotland, III. 380. Chancellor of Scotland, 555. proposes the settling the Crown of that Kingdom on the House of Hanover, 557. turned out, 595

Marbury, IV. 408. to be demolished, 505, 508

Maria Teresa's renunciation, III. 418

Marion, Elias, one of the Prophets, IV. 47

Marischal, Earl, letters sent to him from the Pretender, III. 767, &c. was against the Union, 770, 772

Marischal, George Keith E. of, summoned to surrender himself at Edinburgh, IV. 445. joins the rest of the Rebels, 446. waits upon the Pretender at Feteroffe, 465. forms the rear of the Rebels in their retreat, 472

Marlborough, John Churchill E. and afterwards D. of, takes Cork and Kingale, III. 150, 151. sent by K. William into Flanders to prepare things against his arrival, 182. discontented, 189. disgraced and turned out of all his posts, 195. committed to the Tower, 200, 218. bailed, 218. a plot against him, ibid. complains of his commitment to the House of Lords, 221. the E. of Shrewsbury thought he was ungratefully and unjustly persecuted, 231. reformed to favour, made Privy-Counsellor, and Governor to the D. of Gloucester, 380. made General of the army abroad, 480. account of him, 536, &c. 537, &c. K. James's great resentment against him, ibid. writes a letter in the Queen's name to the States-General, 540, 541. made Knight of the Garter, Captain-General of the English forces both at home and abroad, and sent Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Holland, 541. his speech to the States, ibid. confirms the Dutch in their former resolution, and settles some points with them, 543. agrees with the States and the Imperial Minister, that war should be proclaimed against France, on the same day at Vienna, London, and the Hague, ibid. is reckoned a Tory, 544. made Master of the Ordnance, 554. declared Generalissimo of the Confederate army, 562. takes several places, particularly Verlo, Raremond, and Liege, 563. is taken by a French party, but gets out of their hands, ibid. comes to London, and a Committee of the Commons, wait upon him with the thanks of that House, 576. the Queen creates him a Duke, and intends to grant him a pension of 5000*l.* but it being disagreeable to the Commons, she drops it for the present, 577. he is for the Occasional Conformity bill, 581. loses his only son, and goes to Flanders, 615. takes Bonne, 617. forces the French lines, 618, 619. takes Huy and Limburg, 620. endeavours in vain to bring the French to an engagement, ibid. meets Charles K. of Spain at Dusselaer, who presents him with a sword, 624. returns to England, 626. sets out again for Germany, 654. defeats the enemy at Schellenberg, 655. defeats the French and Imperialists at Hochstet, 657, &c. returns to England, 663. his victories levelled by the Commons with those of Sir George Rooke, 671. some Lords take it ill that Prince Eugene should be named before him, 674. is complimented by the Lord-Keeper upon his coming to the House of Lords, 676. a Committee of the House of Commons gives him also the thanks of that House, 677. his friends offended at the Oxford address, ibid. the manor of Woodstock and the hundred of Wooton settled upon him and his heirs, 677. concludes a treaty with Prussia, 678. concert measures for carrying on the war upon the Moselle, 697. goes to Holland, and has Conferences with several Members of the States, ibid. his progress into Germany, where he is in danger of being killed, 700. designs to attack the French, but is opposed by the Dutch Generals, of which he complains to the States, 701, 702. goes to the Hague, and confers with the States upon the orders he had received to go to Vienna, 702. goes to Vienna, and confers with the Emperor, 704. comes back to England, ibid. his conduct arraigned by the L. Haverham, 719. is thanked by the Commons for his great services, 729. defeats the French at Romilles, 746, &c. is in danger of being killed or taken prisoner, 748. K. Charles writes to him, 754. the D. of Bavaria lends proposals to him, for opening conferences for a peace, 763. his answer to them, 764. a report spread that he found his account in continuing the war, and therefore would not be for peace, ibid. returns to England, 765. invested with the Principality of Mildenheim, 766. receives the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, ibid. the Lords address the Queen to settle his honours on his posterity, which is done, ibid. Woodstock manor and Blenheim house ordered to go with the titles, ibid. 500*l.* per annum out of the Post Office settled on him and his posterity, ibid. the Lord-Keeper's speech to him and his answer, 767, 768. the Commons refuse to confirm the grant made to him of the Royal Moselle, 770. goes to the Hague, and has a conference with the Deputies of the States, IV. 14. goes to All-Ranfadt to the K. of Sweden, 15. follows the French army, but cannot bring them to an engagement, 19, &c. goes to Germany, and confers with the Electors of Hanover and Alentz, 21. returns to England, ibid. his letter to his Duches about Mrs Majham, 35. complaints of his too great power, ibid. his speech to shew the necessity of augmenting the forces in Flanders, 45. refuses to serve the Queen any longer, unless Mr Harley was removed, 55. offers the Bank a considerable sum of money to preserve its credit, 61. appointed again Commander in Chief of the Confederate forces in the N. ibid. 66. with great unanimity with Prince Eugene, 72. his bravery at the battle of Quadrarde, 74, 75. his letter to the E. of Manchester about it, 78. covers the siege of Lisle, 80. prepares to give the enemy battle, but they retire, 81. storms Lisle, 83. stops the Elector of Bavaria's design against Brussels, for which purpose he passes the Scheld, and comes to that City, 83, &c. retakes Ghent, 91, &c. the Queen's letter to him after the battle of Quadrarde, and his answer, 104. his interest with her begins to decline, ibid. two pieces published against him, 116. thanked by the Commons, with his answer to it from Brussels, ibid. comes to England, and is also thanked by the Lords, 117. sent to the Hague upon proposals of peace made by France, 121. convinces the States of the treacherous designs of France in that offer, ibid. besieges and takes Tournay, 133, 134. resolves to besiege Mons, 135. defeats the French at the battle of Malplaquet, 136, &c. passes the Scarp and forces the French lines, 170, &c. the Queen writes to him, to give the E. of Essex's regiment to J. Hill, 185. he desires to be excused, and not being able to prevail retires to Windsor, ibid. great uneasiness in the Nation on that account, ibid. he writes an expostulatory letter to the Queen, ibid. the Queen's answer, 186. the Parliament addresses the Queen to send the Duke into Holland, ibid. he lives in friendship with the D. of Shrewsbury, 187. writes a moving letter to the Queen upon the E. of Sunderland's removal, 189. had not promoted the address against Mr Majham, ibid. motion in the House of Lords to thank him ibid. 195. some Officers turned out for drinking his health, ibid. he returns from Holland to England, and is received with acclamations, 196. is visited by the new Ministry, but does not receive the thanks of both Houses as usual, ibid. desired by the Queen to live well with the new Ministry; resolves to be patient, in order to carry on the war; carries a surrender of all the Duches's places to the Queen, and retires to Blenheim-House on the Queen's birthday, ibid. his account in the House of Lords of the Ministry's proceedings with regard to Spain, 197, &c. is continued in the command of the British forces in Flanders, 208. no confidence between him and the new Ministry, ibid. the Queen's letter to the States of Holland about him, 209. he takes the field, ibid. amuses the French and surprises their lines, 210. besieges and takes Bechain, 211, 212. returns to England, ibid.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

ibid. his speech in the House of Lords, 228. is turned out of all his employments, 232. his letter to the Commissioners about the present from Sir Solomon de Medina, ibid. the Queen sends him word of her intentions to resume all his employments, 233. his letter thereupon to her, ibid. he waits upon Prince Eugene, 236. that Prince's compliment on him, 237. censured for having taken large sums of money, 239. ordered to be prosecuted by the Attorney-General, 240. many libels published against him, ibid. inquiries made into his conduct, but nothing material is found against him, ibid. Prince Eugene said he was always successful, ibid. bears all insults with patience, and prepares a vindication of himself, ibid. his speech on account of the D. of Ormond's being ordered not to fight, 261. sends E. Paulet a challenge for his reflecting speech on him, ibid. his speech about the plan of peace, 269. two suits commenced against him, 300. leaves England, and goes to Six la Chapelle, ibid. refuses to sign an association, 347. invited by the E. of Oxford to come over to England, 367. comes to Ostend, ibid. embarks for England, 368. had vowed never to be reconciled with the E. of Oxford, ibid. invited over by L. Bolingbroke, 402. lands at Dover, ibid. makes a public entry into London, but his coach breaks down, ibid. kindly received by K. George, ibid. made Captain-General, Master of the Ordnance, &c. ibid. his speech about regulating the land-forces, 423. reflected upon on account of the coarfeness of the soldiers' shirts, and his advertisement and speech thereupon, 425. has the nomination of the Officers of the new-raised regiments, with the D. of Argyle, and the Generals Stanhope and Cadogan, 433. is ill, and never perfectly recovers, 503. his death and character, 657, &c.

Marlborough, Sarah Jennings Countess and Duchesse of, made one of the Ladies of the Bed-chamber to the Princess Anne, and becomes her great favourite, III. 534. her character, ibid. and 535. persuades the Princess against consenting to have the Crown settled on K. William for life, 536. appointed Groom of the Stole, and Keeper of the Privy-Purse, 544. endeavours to moderate Q. Anne's zeal for the Tories, ibid. occasions the removal of Sir Nathan Wright, 717. reconciles the Whigs to the Queen, 719. compared to Alice Piers, ibid. her account of J. Hill, and Mrs. Masham, IV. 34. her great uneasiness at that Lady's great credit with the Queen, and her letters thereupon, ibid. &c. her letter to the Queen, 105, &c. charged with being the cause of some disagreeable votes passing in the House of Commons against Mrs. Masham, 185. is told that the Queen believed the often spoke disrespectfully of her, 186. the endeavours to vindicate herself in an audience she had of the Queen, ibid. &c. writes to the Queen upon the E. or Sunderland's removal, 189. the Duke her husband carries a surrender of all her places to the Queen, 196.

Marriners; act against marriages without licence or banns, III. 323.

Marlagie, battle of, III. 241.

Marfelles; a project to destroy that place, IV. 21. a plague there, 652.

Martin, Henry and David, had a hand in the British Merchant, IV. 316.

Q. MARY proclaimed, III. 25. her household settled, 39. uneasy at the settlement required for her sister the Princess of Denmark, 52, 120. an act passed to invest her with the administration of affairs during the King's absence, 132. shows great tenderness for her father's person, 133. her behaviour was very exemplary, and the read much, but did not meddle with public affairs, 139. was very charitable, ibid. takes upon her the administration of affairs, and has the right way of pleasing England, ibid. becomes universally beloved and admired, ibid. puts out two proclamations against the Papists, ibid. tho' much afraid of a descent from France, she conceals her own apprehensions, and inspires her subjects with resolution, 141. puts out a proclamation for the encouragement of seamen, 142. gives Commissions for putting the standing forces and the militia in the West in a posture of defence, ibid. publishes a proclamation for apprehending the E. of Litchfield, &c. ibid. falls out with her sister the Princess of Denmark, because she would not dismiss the Countess of Marlborough, 196. prepares to defend England against the threatened invasion of K. James, 200. orders several discontented persons to be taken up, ibid. commands all Papists to depart from London and Westminster, ibid. causes the militia of Westminster, and the trainbands of London to be drawn up in Hyde-Park, ibid. establishes a fund for maintaining Preachers and Schoolmasters among the Vaudois, 217. issues out a proclamation against the exporting of corn to France, and orders the laws to be put in execution, 247. governs the Nation with great prudence, 258. had a particular esteem for Archbp. Tillotson, 260. seized with the small-pox, of which she dies, ibid. her character, 261. never guilty of an indiscretion, 262. remarks on her unusual gaiety at her coming to the Throne, 262. and on her quarrel with her sister the Princess Anne, ibid. addresses to the King upon her death, 264. she was a friend to the Dissenters, and for a Comprehension, ibid. the Jacobites exalted at the news of her death, 312. her great care in disposing of Church preferments, 523.

Masham, Mr Samuel, preferred by the Duchesse of Marlborough's means, IV. 34. marries Abigail Hill, ibid. made a General, 186. created Baron Masham, 234.

Masham, Mrs comes to be in great credit with Q. Anne, IV. 34. the Duchesse of Marlborough's great uneasiness at it, ibid. &c. was related to Mr Harley, 34. her intrigues with the Queen, 105, &c. she undermines the D. of Marlborough's interest, 185. motion intended in Parliament against her, 186. made Privy-Purse, 196. had part of the benefit of the Assiento trade, 366. reconciles the Favourites, 367. the Lord-Treasurer demurs about a grant made to her by the Queen, 368. severe reproaches between her and the Treasurer, when he was dismissed, ibid.

Master in Chancery; proceedings against them, IV. 683.

Maximilian Prince of Hanover joins Prince Eugene, III. 656.

Mazarin, Duchesse of, motion in the House of Commons against her, III. 44.

Mead, Dr Richard, attends Q. Anne in her last illness, IV. 369.

Meath, Henry Jones Bp. of, endeavours to stop the execution of some cruel acts against the Protestants in Ireland, III. 83. argues against the repealing of the act of Settlement, 86.

Mechlin submits to the Allies, III. 751.

Mechlenburg, D. of, marries the Czarina's niece, IV. 538.

Meeting-Houses; some pulled down, IV. 155.

Melfort, John Drummond E. of, King James's Secretary of State, III. 57, 68. odious to the Presbyterians in Scotland, ibid. letters brought from him to Scotland, 73. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132. his letter to the E. of Perth, 440. Tallard's saying about him, 442.

Melvil, — Lord, made Secretary of State for Scotland, III. 75. promises to moderate the violence of the Presbyterians in that Kingdom, but is not so good as his word, 105. his proceedings for settling Presbytery, ibid. a great zeal for Presbytery, 181, 182. made Privy-Seal, and most of his creatures laid aside, 194. President of the Council in Scotland, 555. turned out, 595.

Memorial of the Dutch communicated to the House of Lords and Commons, III. 440. of the French Ambassador to the States, 454. memorial by Daniel de Foe, 476. of the Church of England, 715, 716. presented as a libel, 717. the Publisher of it ordered to be prosecuted, 729. of the Elector of Hanover, IV. 225, &c. of the Dutch against the representation of the House of Commons, 242. of Prince Eugene and the Deputies of the States to the D. of Ormond, 282. of the Czar, 539, 615, &c. of Colonel Stanhope, 698. of the Marquis de Pozzobuono, 702. of Mr Pointz, 703. of Mr de Palmis, 704. of the British and French Ministers at the diet of Ratisbon, 705.

Menin taken by the Allies, III. 751.

Montu, Elector of, confers with the D. of Marlborough, IV. 21.

Merchants design a fraud with regard to the goods imported into Scotland, III. 789. their petition, ibid. another petition of theirs, complaining of their great losses, IV. 40. and of the want of cruisers, ibid. &c. petition of the Scotch Merchants for relief, 43. French, Dutch, and Jewish Merchants, instead of calling in the money they had in the Bank, they carried in more, 61, 62.

Mercy, Count de, arrives at Naples, an account of him, IV. 589, 590. lands in Sicily, 591. his bravery at the battle of Franco-Filla, 591, &c. wounded there, 592. struck blind, 595. has a conference with Admiral Byng, 599.

Messenger, Monsieur, his negotiations at the Court of England, IV. 212, 221. delivers the French King's answer to the demands last sent over from England, ibid. signs the preliminaries of peace, 222. has a private conversation with the Queen, and speaks to her in favour of the Pretender, 223. one of the Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, 247. his servants insult Count de Rechtern, which stops for a while the negotiations at Utrecht, 290, 306, &c.

Messina taken by the Spaniards, IV. 567. the English fleet come thither, 568. the citadel surrenders, 570. besieged by the Imperialists, the city surrenders, 595, &c. the citadel also surrenders, 598.

Methuen, Paul, Envoy to Portugal, III. 554. concludes a neutrality, 559. and a treaty, 624. procures the K. of Portugal to carry on his conquests in Spain, 753. Envoy Extraordinary to the D. of Savoy, 758. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, IV. 143. made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, 406. one of the Principal Secretaries of State, 499. resigns his places, 523, 525. made Comptroller of the Household, 617. made Treasurer of the Household, 687.

Middleton, E. of, starts up a difficulty when the Pretender was going to be proclaimed, III. 491. exhorted by K. James to embrace Popery, 492.

Middleton, Alan Broderick Lord, Lord-Chancellor of Ireland, dissent from some resolutions of the House of Lords, IV. 609.

Milanese; treaty for evacuating it, III. 765. IV. 3, 4. evacuated, 4.

Minas, Marquis des, assists at a Council of war, IV. 6. at the battle of Almanza, 8.

Ministers, distinction between the King and his Ministers, IV. 578.

Minorea, description of that Island, which is taken by the English, IV. 95, &c.

Mint suppressed, IV. 672.

Miremont, Armand de Bourbon Marquis de, goes to Utrecht, to take care of the interest of the French Refugees, IV. 245. intercedes for the Protestants in the galleys in France, 329.

Misson, Maximilian, one of the Prophets, IV. 47.

Modern History; Professors of it founded in our Universities, by K. George I. IV. 679, &c.

Mohun, Charles Lord, tried for the murder of William Mounfort, III. 232. and for the murder of Captain Richard Coote, 391. is against the Occasional Conformity bill, 628. carries E. Paulet a challenge from the D. of Marlborough, IV. 261. killed in a duel with D. Hamilton, 297.

Molesworth, William, reflects on the Convocation Houses in Ireland, for which he is removed from the Privy-Council, IV. 331.

Molesworth, Robert Lord, his account of Denmark quoted, IV. 557. Envoy to Turin, 617.

Molineux, William, his case of Ireland's being bound by acts of Parliament in England censured, III. 376.

Money of brass, coined by K. James in Ireland, cried down, III. 146.

Monmouth, Charles Mordaunt E. of, goes with K. William to Holland, III. 164.

Mons taken by the French, III. 166. K. William endeavours to surprize it, 208.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

tracks the rear of the Confederate army, 183 had the L.
rejection of the plot for assassinating K. William, 210. commands in Flanders at the battle of La Mar, 211.
Liddel — his speech about the Septen-nial bill, IV. 495

M.

Middlefield, Charles Gerrard E. of, affected by the Jacobites, III. 267. divorced from his Countess, 375
Macclesfield, Thomas Parker, E. of, complaints against him, IV. 683. impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, 684. his trial, ibid. committed to the Tower, and released upon paying his fine of 30,000*l.*
ibid.

Macdonald of Glencoe, III. 283
Macintosh, Brigadier, Laird of Borlum, crosses the Firth of Forth with a body of Highlanders, IV. 445, &c. his character, 449, &c. taken prisoner at Prosen, 459.
brought up to London, and sent to Newgate,
465. bill of high-treason found against him,
480. he makes his escape, 496

Macworth, Sir Humphry, the supposed Author of the memorial of the Church of England, III. 729. vote of the House of Commons, IV. 162

Madagascar, Pirates there suppressed, III.
791

Madrid possessed by the Allies, III. 754.
they abandon it again, and K. Philip possesses himself of it, ibid.

Maintenon, Madam de, in a plot to assassinate K. William, III. 210. causes the K.
of Spain's will to be accepted by the French Court, 427. her influence, 440. persuades
K. Lewis XIV. to acknowledge the Pretender as King of England, 441. the K. of France's coolness towards her, IV. 132

Malaga, engagement near it between the English and the French, III. 664

Mala, St. bombarded by the English, III.
252, 300

Malplaquet, battle of, IV. 136
Anti-tax extended to Scotland, of which the Scots highly complain, IV. 316. riots in Scotland about it, 687. petitions against it from several Shires, 695

Manchester, Charles Montague, E. of, attends K. William to Ireland, III. 133. sent Ambassador to Venice, 350. and to France,
392. ordered to leave the Court of France, ibid. his letters to Tory, ibid. made Secretary of State, 504

Manchester, Robert Montague E. of, sent Ambassador to Venice, III. 792. takes Venna in his way, IV. 21. letters to and from him about the reduction of Naples, 654, &c.
disrespect shewn to him at Venice, 65, 66

Manifesto of the Pretender's adherents,
IV. 430

Manressa; a description of that place,
I. 11

Mansel, Sir Thomas, made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, IV. 190. created Baron Mansel, 234

Mar, John Erskine E. of, presents a resolve to Parliament, III. 690. and a draught of an act for a treaty with England, 692.
made Secretary of State, 697. his speech at Sackville's trial, IV. 160. tries to get the place of Secretary of State for Scotland, 219.
is against extending the malt-tax to Scotland,
317. made third Secretary for that Kingdom,
328. removed from his place of Secretary of State, 404. had made many professions of loyalty to K. George in a letter, 436. heads the Rebellion in Scotland, ibid. sets up the Pretender's standard at Brae-Mar, 437. assumes the title of Lieutenant-General of the Pretender's forces, and publishes a declaration to exhort the people to take arms, ibid. publishes a manifesto, 438, &c. his men commit great disorders, 449. receives three letters, which had been intercepted by Mr Forster, ibid. &c. two letters of his intercepted, 451. sends a Commission to T. Forster to act as General in England, 455. resolves to pass the Forth, and to march into England, 459. engages the D. of Argyle near Dumblain, 459, 460, &c. waits upon the Pretender at Peterhead, 465. his letter about the Pretender's proceedings, 467, &c.

March, William Douglas E. of, made Governor of Edinburgh-Castle, III. 595

Marchmont, Alexander Hume E. of, Commissioner in the Parliament of Scotland, III.
380. Chancellor of Scotland, 555. proposes the settling the Crown of that Kingdom on the House of Hanover, 557. turned out, 595

Mardyke, IV. 408. to be demolished,
555, 558

Maria Teresa's renunciation, III. 418

Mariam, Elias, one of the Prophets, IV.
47

Marischal, Earl, letters sent to him from the Pretender, III. 767, &c. was against the Union, 770, 772

Marischal, George Keith E. of, summoned to surrender himself at Edinburgh, IV. 445.
joins the rest of the Rebels, 446. waits upon the Pretender at Peterhead, 465. forms the rear of the Rebels in their retreat, 472

Marlborough, John Churchill E. and afterwards D. of, takes Cork and Kingale, III.
150, 151. sent by K. William into Flanders to prepare things against his arrival, 182.
discontented, 189. disgraced and turned out of all his posts, 195. committed to the Tower, 200, 218. bailed, 218. a plot against him, ibid. complaints of his commitment to the House of Lords, 221. the E. of Shrewsbury thought he was ungratefully and unjustly persecuted, 231. restored to favour, made Privy-Counsellor, and Governor to the D. of Gloucester, 380. made General of the army abroad, 480. account of him, 536, &c. 537, &c. K. James's great resentment against him, ibid. writes a letter in the Queen's name to the States-General, 540,
541. made Knight of the Garter, Captain-General of the English forces both at home and abroad, and sent Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Holland, 541.

his speech to the States, ibid. confirms the Dutch in their former resolution, and settles some points with them, 543. agrees with the States and the Imperial Minister, that war should be proclaimed against France, on the same day at Vienna, London, and the Hague, ibid. is reckoned a Tory, 544. made Master of the Ordnance, 554. declared Generalissimo of the Confederate army, 562. takes several places, particularly Yenlo, Raremond, and Lige, 563. is taken by a French party, but gets out of their hands, ibid. comes to London, and a Committee of the Commons, wait upon him with the thanks of that House, 576. the Queen creates him a Duke, and intends to grant him a pension of 5000*l.*
but it being disagreeable to the Commons, she drops it for the present, 577. he is for the Occasional Conformity bill, 581. loses his only son, and goes to Flanders, 615.
takes Bonne, 617. forces the French lines, 618, 619. takes Huy and Limburg, 620. endeavours in vain to bring the French to an engagement, ibid. meets Charles K. of Spain at Dusseldorp, who presents him with a sword, 624. returns to England, 626. sets out again for Germany, 654. defeats the enemy at Schellenberg, 655. defeats the French and Bavarians at Hochstet, 657, &c. returns to England, 663. his victories levelled by the Commons with those of Sir George Roke, 671. some Lords take it ill that Prince Eugene should be named before him, 674. is complimented by the Lord-Keeper upon his coming to the House of Lords, 676. a Committee of the House of Commons gives him also the thanks of that House, 677. his friends offended at the Oxford address, ibid.
the manor of Woodstock and the hundred of Wooton settled upon him and his heirs, 677.
concludes a treaty with Prussia, 678. considers measures for carrying on the war upon the Myfelle, 697. goes to Holland, and has Conferences with several Members of the States, ibid. his progress into Germany, where he is not joined by the Allies, 698. raises the siege of Lige, and forces the French lines, 699. in danger of being killed, 700. designs to attack the French, but is opposed by the Dutch Generals, of which he complains to the States, 701, 702. goes to the Hague, and confers with the States upon the orders he had received to go to Vienna, 702.
goes to Vienna, and confers with the Emperor, 704. comes back to England, ibid. his conduct arraigned by the L. Haverham, 719.

is thanked by the Commons for his great services, 729. defeats the French at Ramilles, 746, &c. is in danger of being killed or taken prisoner, 748. K. Charles writes to him, 754. the D. of Bavaria sends proposals to him, for opening conferences for a peace, 763. his answer to them, 764. a report spread that he found his account in continuing the war, and therefore would not be for peace, ibid. returns to England, 765.
invested with the Principality of Mildenheim, 766. receives the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, ibid. the Lords address the Queen to settle his honours on his posterity, which is done, ibid. Woodstock manor and Blenheim house ordered to go with the titles, ibid.
5000*l.* per annum out of the Post Office settled on him and his posterity, ibid. the Lord-Keeper's speech to him and his answer, 767, 768. the Commons refuse to confirm the grant made to him of the Royal Messy, 770. goes to the Hague, and has a conference with the Deputies of the States, IV.
14. goes to Alt-Randstadt to the K. of Swed- den, 15. follows the French army, but cannot bring them to an engagement, 19, &c.
goes to Germany, and confers with the Electors of Hanover and Mintz, 21. returns to England, ibid. his letter to his Duchesse about Mrs Albany, 35. complaints of Lis too great power, ibid. his speech to shew the necessity of augmenting the forces in Flanders, 45. refuses to serve the Queen any longer, unless Mr Harley was removed, 55.
offers the Bank a considerable sum of money to preserve its credit, 61. appointed again
Commander in Chief of the Confederate forces in the Netherlands, 69. acts with great unanimity with Prince Eugene, 72. his bravery at the battle of Oudenarde, 74, 75.
his letter to the E. of Manchester about it, 78. covers the siege of Lisle, 80. prepares to give the enemy battle, but they retire, 81. forms Lisle, 83. stops the Elector of Bavaria's design against Brussels, for which purpose he passes the Scheldt, and comes to that City, 83, &c. retakes Ghent, 91, &c.
the Queen's letter to him after the battle of Oudenarde, and his answer, 104. his interest with her begins to decline, ibid. two pieces published against him, 116. thanked by the Commons, with his answer to it from Brussels, ibid. comes to England, and is also thanked by the Lords, 117. sent to the Hague upon proposals of peace made by France, 121. convinces the States of the treacherous designs of France in that offer, ibid. besieges and takes Tournay, 133, 134.
resolves to besiege Mons, 135. defeats the French at the battle of Malplaquet, 136, &c.
passes the Scarp and forces the French lines, 170, &c. the Queen writes to him, to give the E. of Essex's regiment to J. Hill, 185.
he desires to be excused, and not being able to prevail retires to Windsor, ibid. great uneasiness in the Nation on that account, ibid. he writes an expostulatory letter to the Queen, ibid. the Queen's answer, 186. the Parliament addresses the Queen to send the Duke into Holland, ibid. he lives in friendship with the D. of Shrewsbury, 187. writes a moving letter to the Queen upon the E. of Sunderland's removal, 189. had not promoted the address against Mr Albany, ibid. motion in the House of Lords to thank him dropped, 195. some Officers turned out for drinking his health, ibid. he returns from Holland to England, and is received with acclamations, 196. is visited by the new Ministry, but does not receive the thanks of both Houses as usual, ibid. desired by the Queen to live well with the new Ministry; resolves to be patient, in order to carry on the war; carries a surrender of all the Duchess's places to the Queen, and retires to Blenheim-House on the Queen's birthday, ibid. his account in the House of Lords of the Ministry's proceedings with regard to Spain, 197, &c. is continued in the command of the British forces in Flanders, 208. no confidence between him and the new Ministry, ibid. the Queen's letter to the States of Holland about him, 209. he takes the field, ibid. amuses the French and surprizes their lines, 210. besieges and takes Bechain, 211, 212. returns to England,
ibid.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

the Commons in his favour, 635. his account of the Conspiracy in Scotland, 637, &c. presses the Queen to dismiss the D. of Somerset and Devonshire from the Cabinet Council, 647. resigns his place of Secretary of State, ibid. reflects on K. William with regard to the Partition-treaty, 675. thoughts of fending him to the Tower, ibid. urges the ill consequences of the act of security in Scotland, ibid. was for inviting over the Princess Sophia, 719. seconds the E. of Rochester in the debates about the affairs of Spain, IV. 45. the Court endeavours to gain him on their side, 226. offers a clause to be inserted in the address of thanks to the Queen, 227. brings in the Occasional Conformity-bill, 230. moves for an address to the Queen to desire her to consult with the Ministers of the Allies in Holland, before the opening of the Congress, 231. advertisement in the Post-Boy reflecting on him, 240. speaks against the resumptions of K. William's grants, 246. his speech on occasion of the D. of Ormond's being ordered not to fight, 261. and about the peace, 269. his speech about the Union, 318. supports the motion for addressing the Queen to press the Duke of Lorraine to remove the Pretender out of his Dominions, 323. reflected upon in the public spirit of the Whigs, 340. represents the danger that threatened the Protestant Succession, 345. his speech upon the Lord Treasurer's motion, for bringing in a bill to make it treason to bring any foreign troops into the Kingdom, ibid. his speech about the peace with Spain, 352. speaks against the Schism-bill, 362. moves for an address of thanks for the Queen's proclamation against the Pretender, 365. his speech about the Spanish trade, ibid. receives particular marks of favour from K. George, 402. made President of the Council, 404. a letter of his to the D. of Roxburgh intercepted, 449, 450. is for receiving and reading the petitions of the condemned Lords, 486. the removal from his place of President of the Council, 487. speaks against the bill for Septennial Parliaments, 490, 494. the pension of 2500*l.* per annum taken from him, 504. makes a complaint in the House against the growth of profaneness and immorality, 646. thanked by both Universities and the Clergy, for his answer to Mr Whiston, ibid.

O.

OATES, Titus, debates about the judgment against him, III. 94. a conference thereupon, ibid.
Oath; Coronation-oath fettered, III. 44.
Oaths of Allegiance ordered to be taken, but refused by several, III. 43. oaths fettered, 45. debates about them, ibid.
Occasional Conformity; bill against it, III. 578. brought in again, 627, &c. 671. endeavours used to tack it to the land-tax bill, 672. thrown out by the Lords, 673. brought in again by the E. of Nottingham, IV. 230. the act repealed, 578, &c.
Orange, account of that illustrious Family, III. 30, &c.
Orange William III., Prince of, born, III. 33. comes into the world under great disadvantages, ibid. was of an infirm constitution, 34. the French King seizes his Principality of Orange, ibid. the Prince is chosen chief Nobleman in Zealand, and introduced into the Council, ibid. comes to visit K. Charles II. ibid. is declared Admiral and Captain-General, ibid. and Stadtholder, ibid. makes a stand against the French, ibid. retakes Narden and seizes Boene, ibid. beats the French at the battle of Seaflott, ibid. offers the K. of France battle when before Bouchain, 35. marries Princess Mary, ibid. looked upon as the head of the Protestant Interest in Europe, and the greatest check to the power of France, ibid. forms the league of Austria against France, 36. his character, 37, 38. See K. William III.
Ordinations of Dissenters, III. 107, 108
Orford, Edward Russell E. of, concerned in Kidd's affair, III. 396. impeached by the Commons, 459. their address against him, 460. articles against him, 461. his answer, ibid. acquitted, 470. his accounts examined, 643. received with great favour by K. George,

IV. 402. made First Commissioner of the Admiralty, 406. resigns that place, 525
Orkney, Elizabeth Villiers Countess of, grants to her in Ireland, III. 399. K. William regards her, 509. the cause of L. Sommers and E. of Portland's disgrace, ibid.
Orkney, George Hamilton E. of, made Governor of Edinburgh-Castle, IV. 346
Orleans, D. of, is wounded at the battle of Turin, where he behaves bravely, III. 760. wanted to be made K. of Spain, and offers some proposals to the Lord Galway for that purpose, IV. 11. suspected of having poisoned the two Dauphins, 246. had formed a project to make himself K. of Spain, 247. made Regent of France, 476. restores a just privilege to the Parliament of Paris, 477. reasons of his acting towards England as he did, ibid. and 499. ready to contend for the Crown of France, 504. concludes a treaty with K. George and Holland, 505. murmurs in France against this treaty, ibid. guarantee of the Neutrality of Italy, 549. enters into the Quadruple-alliance, 562. Alberoni's plot against him, 582. declares war against Spain, ibid. offers K. George numerous forces, 584. offers his mediation to Sweden, 588. gives Admiral Byng leave to confiscate all French ships in the service of Spain, 589. refuses the Marquis de Sotti a passport, 604. gives K. George I. notice of the plot against him, 659. projects a marriage between his daughters and the Princes of Spain, 674. dies, 676
Ormond, James Butler D. of, sent to secure the quiet of Dublin, III. 145. wounded at the battle of Landen, 240. attends K. William in his last moments, 506. named Commander of a land army, 545. Commander in Chief of the forces at Cadiz and Vigo, 568. lands at Vigo, 570. rides to St Paul's on the thanksgiving-day, amidst loud acclamations, 574. thanked by the Lords for his services at Vigo, ibid. they address the Queen to order him to lay before them an account of his proceedings, ibid. he complains of Sir George Rooke's conduct at Cadiz, 575. is made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, ibid. and 584. directed by the E. of Rochester, 605. his speech to the Parliament of Ireland, ibid. &c. uneasy at the inspection of the public accounts, 609. foment the divisions raised by the E. of Rochester, 688. desires the Parliament of Ireland to adjourn, ibid. addresses presented to him by the Dissenters, ibid. favours the Pretender's friends, IV. 216. his speech in the Parliament of England about the necessity of a peace, 228. made Commander in Chief of all the forces at home and abroad, 234. had orders not to engage neither in siege nor battle, 253. his instructions, 255. assures the Dutch of his intention to carry on the war vigorously, ibid. receives orders from the Queen not to venture a battle, 256. his letters thereupon, 256, 257—259. refuses to fight, 258. receives a letter from Villars, 257. corresponds with him, 274, 279. declares his orders about the cessation of arms, 274. desires Prince Eugene to give over the siege of Quefnoy, 277. conference between him and one of the Dutch Deputies, 296. returns to England, 297. promotes Dr Swift to the Deanery of St Patrick's, 325. made Governor of Douer, and Warden of the Cinque-Ports, ibid. a pension of 5000*l.* per annum settled upon him, ibid. L. Halifax's compliment on him, 352. sends for Dr Ratcliffe to attend the Queen, 396. not admitted into the King's bed-chamber, 401. dismissed from his office of Captain-General, but the King sends him word, he should be glad to see him at Court, 404. made one of the Privy-Council in Ireland, ibid. riots in London on his birth-day, 421. cry of High-Church and Ormond, 425. his popular behaviour, 427, &c. attempt upon his Duchies, 428. impeached of high-treason, ibid. flies out of England, ibid. the articles against him, 434. his name and coat of arms razed, and inventories taken of his personal estate, 436. resigns the place of Chancellor of the University of Oxford, 442. comes towards England, 450, 453. returns from the coast of England, 473, 475, 478. bill for attainting him in Ireland, 478. his letter to Baron Gortz, 511. comes to Spain, and falls with the Spanish squadron for England, 583. a proclamation against him, ibid. concerned in Loyer's plot, 666. some designs formed by his instigation in favour of the Pretender, 698

Orphans of the City of London; their affairs examined by Parliament, III. 269
Orrey, Charles Boyle E. of, created Baron Boyle of Marlton, IV. 219. sent to the Hague to redress some disorders, 302. committed to the Tower, 660. admitted to bail, 674
Osborne, Thomas, E. of Danby, impeached, III. 14, 15. instrumental in the marriage of the Princess Mary with the Prince of Orange, 35. created Marquis of Caermarthen, and made President of the Council, 38. K. James had offered to put himself into his hands before he went away, 39. cool with regard to the Settlement, ibid. brings a storm on the Marquis of Halifax, 39. an address proposed in the House of Commons, to desire the King to remove him from his Prefecture and Councils, 97. chief author of the change made in the Lieutenantcy of London, 125. in great credit with the King, 131. a design to impeach him, 162. blamed for the ill success of our fleet, 244. created D. of Leeds, 253
Osborne, Pezrevigne, Marquis of Caermarthen, at the attempt upon Breff, III. 254. his discovery to the House of Lords about a letter of the E. of Nottingham, 192
Ossulton, Charles Bennet Lord, created E. of Tankerville, IV. 407
Ostend and Newport; proposal to put them into the hands of the English, III. 446
Ostend, taken by the Allies, III. 751. description of it, ibid. yielded by the Dutch, IV. 337. not to be alienated from the Netherlands, ibid. See East-India Company.
Oudenard; description of that town, IV. 72. invested by the French, ibid. the French quit the siege, 73. battle near Oudenard, 74
Overall, Bishop, his book published, III. 521
Oxford; that University unhappily successful in propagating anti-revolutional principles, III. 646. its decree burnt, IV. 161. the Mayor receives a letter ordering him to proclaim the Pretender, 394. riots there, 433. a letter from a Gentleman there to his friend at London, about drinking the Pretender's health, 442. debate about the riot there, 519
Oxford, Robert Harley E. of, See Harley.
Lord-Treasurer, his opposition to the Pretender's being removed out of Lorraine, IV. 322. intalled Knight of the Garter, 328. hated both by the Whigs and Tories, ibid. upon ill terms with the L. Bolingbroke, ibid. notwithstanding which he brings his own scheme to bear, ibid. raises a million in two days time, 329. L. Bolingbroke, Secretary Bromley, and Sir William Wyndham, gain the ascendancy over him, upon which he thinks of retiring, 335. endeavours to support the Bank, 336. moves for a bill to make it treason to bring any foreign troops into the Kingdom, 345. vindicates the peace, 349. and his paying a yearly sum to the Highlanders, 350. his letter to the Elector of Brunswick, 358. was for inviting him over, 359. doubtful whether he was for or against the Schism-bill, 360. bred among Schismatics, ibid. had caltreated the Schism-bill, ibid. is for examining into the Spanish trade, 365. kept to himself the principal direction of domestic affairs, and the disposal of places, 366. has great quarrels with L. Bolingbroke, 367. endeavours to reconcile himself to the Whigs, and to remove L. Bolingbroke, ibid. sends the Queen an account of public affairs, ibid. and 385. causes of his disgrace, 367. his attachment to the House of Hanover, ibid. removed, ibid. goes to wait upon K. George at Greemwich, but is not taken notice of, 401. attends at the King's Coronation, 407. his conduct very extraordinary, 418. appears unconcerned, and boasts of the great things he had done for securing the Hanover Succession, ibid. takes his seat in the House of Lords, 421. his letter to Queen Anne, 426. impeached of High-treason, &c. 427. comes to the House of Peers, and soon after retires, ibid. articles of impeachment against him, 429, &c. ordered to be committed to safe custody, 431. his speech in his own defence, 8 Z

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England:

- fense, ibid. attended by a mob, ibid. brought to the bar of the House, and receives a copy of the articles against him, ibid. put a few days in the custody of the Black-Rod, ibid. carried to the Tower, 432. additional articles against him, 434. debate in the House of Commons on his answer, ibid. presents a petition to the House of Lords, 541. his trial, ibid. discharged, 545. forbid the Court, ibid. excepted out of the Act of Grace, 546. his speech upon the Mutiny-bill, 557. and on the repeal of the Schism-bill, 578. is against the Peerage-bill, 585. dies, 680. account of him and his family, ibid. &c.
- P.
- P. A. Kington, Sir John, exhibits petitions against the Bp of Worcester, and his son, for endeavouring to prevent his election, III. 575. his speech in the debate about the danger of the Church, 728. speaks against the Union, 784. makes a complaint in the House of Commons against Dr Ratcliffe, IV. 396. taken into custody, 439. honourably discharged, ibid.
- Paget, William Lord, sent to Constantinople, to mediate a peace between the Turks and the Imperialists, III. 214. mediator of the peace of Carlowitz, 385. appointed Envoy Extraordinary to Hanover, but declines it, IV. 352. created E. of Uxbridge, 407.
- Paget, Henry, made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, IV. 190. created Baron of Burton, 234.
- Palatine, Elector, the Upper Palatinate restored to him, IV. 69, 101. furnishes the Emperor with troops, 69.
- Palatines come over to England, IV. 148. a brief for them, ibid. sent over to Ireland and New-York, ibid. votes of the Parliament of Ireland about them, 149. the relief granted them causes great uneasiness, 152. inquiry of the House of Commons about them, 200.
- Paleotti, Marquis of, executed for murder, IV. 556.
- Palms, Mr ae, his memorial, IV. 704. censured in Parliament, ibid. ordered to depart the Kingdom, 701.
- Paper-Credit in Scotland rejected, III. 691.
- Papists excluded from the Crown, III. 55. gainers in some respect by the Revolution, 90. address for disarming them, 96. and for securing them, 97. ordered to repair to their places of abode, 133. fly out of Dublin, 138. two proclamations against them in England, 139, 200. resort to London, an address of the Commons against them, 389. act against them, 401, &c. their scheme of Religion, 511. excluded from being Members of the Estates of Scotland, 601. bill against them in Ireland, 610. and in England, 685. pretend that the Church was in danger, 715. proclamation for putting the laws in execution against them, IV. 202. a proclamation for disarming them in Ireland, 394. and in England, 398. espouse the abdicated Family, 402. a tax upon them, 665.
- Parker, Sir Thomas, his behaviour at Dr Sacheverell's trial, IV. 154. made Lord Chief Justice, 156. causes a mistake relating to the Regency to be rectified, 329, &c. one of the Lords Justices, 394. his speech at the E. of Oxford's trial, 543. made Lord Chancellor, 562. See Macclefield.
- Parliament, bill for Triennial Parliaments, III. 6. of K. William, reverse attainders of them, 132, &c. passed, 160. Members taken off by places and pensions, 190. bill for the frequent meeting of them, 265. act against treating at elections of parliament-men, and for regulating those elections, 323. the business of the Lancashire plot laid before them, 267. their proceedings against bribery, 267. and about the Orphans and East-India Company's affairs, 269, &c. take into consideration the reckoning of the money, 305. restores the public credit, 334. prosecutes the French smugglers, 371. order of the House of Commons against written protections from Parliament-men, 434. a party for France in the Parliament, 439. both Houses meet upon K. William's death, 539. go to St Paul's on the thanksgiving-day for the victory at Vi-
- go, 574. both Houses give the D. of Marlborough thanks for his eminent services, 766. first Session of the Parliament of Great-Britain, IV. 39. address the Queen not to make Peace without the restitution of all Spain, 46. proceeds with great unanimity in their resolutions for the support of the Government against the Pretender, 58. a faction among the Scots in the second Parliament of Great-Britain, 110. both Houses address the Queen to order the D. of Marlborough over into Holland, 186. the Queen's message to them of her resolution to support the House of Austria, 203, &c. act for Septennial Parliaments, 490, &c.
- Parliament in Scotland inquires into the Glencoe affair, III. 283. sign the Association, and grant K. William a Supply, 332. the East-India Company lay their grievances before it, 380, &c. their address and petition to the King thereupon, 380, &c. passes an act for keeping a land-force, and another for a land-tax, 425. great disputes whether the Parliament should be continued, or a new one called, 556, &c. the Queen's letter to them, 649. debates about the bill of Succession, 650, &c. and the Supply, 651. desire to have all the examinations, relating to the plot, laid before them, 652. grants a cess for the pay of the army, ibid. address the Queen that the evidence and papers relating to the plot might be laid before them against the next Session, 653. their proceedings about the treaty with England, 690, &c.
- Parliament in Ireland raises a maintenance for the army in that Kingdom, III. 392. votes a Supply, 688. uneasiness between them and the Convocation, ibid. their votes in favour of the Protestant Succession, ibid. and 689.
- Parma, D. of, his memorial at the Congress of Cambray, IV. 650.
- Parma and Placentia to be settled on the Q. of Spain's son, IV. 549, 563, 605. the investiture of them granted to him by the Emperor, 711.
- Parties at the Revolution, III. 25. three parties formed in Scotland, 70. a party formed against K. William, 189, 237.
- Partition-Treaty; negotiations about it, III. 383, &c. second Partition-treaty, 407. greatly disliked by the Spaniards and Emperor, 411, &c. and by the English, 420. censured in the House of Lords and Commons, 447, &c. papers relating to it laid before the House of Commons, 457.
- Pastrowitz; treaty signed there, IV. 565.
- Pateson, William, forms the project of the West-India and African Companies in Scotland, and the Darien Settlement, III. 283, 308, &c.
- Patkul, Count, III. 792.
- Patrick, Simon, made Bp of Chichester, III. 103. reviews the Liturgy, 106, &c. translated to the See of Ely, 173. dies, IV. 37.
- Patronages restored in Scotland, IV. 244.
- Patten, Robert, his account of the Rebellion, and of the heads of it, IV. 448.
- Paul, William, tried and condemned, IV. 498. executed, ibid. his dying speech makes a great impression on many persons, 501.
- Paullet, John Earl, made First Commissioner of the Treasury, IV. 190. visits the D. of Marlborough, 196. made Steward of the Household, 219. his reflecting speech on the D. of Marlborough, for which he is challenged, 261. installed Knight of the Garter, 328. was for admitting the Presbyterians to be heard against the Occasional Conformity-bill, 362. removed from his place of Steward of the Household, 404.
- Peace, proposed by France, III. 327. a separate one between France and the D. of Savoy, 328. the preliminaries of a peace, 351. conferences at Ryswick about it, 352, 357. signed by England, Spain, and Holland, 360. and by the Emperor and the Empire, 365. peace of Carlowitz, 385. overtures made by the French for a peace, 763. rejected, 764. Dr Hare's thoughts upon it, ibid. &c. negotiations for one, IV. 120, &c. the preliminaries of it, 128, rejected by France, 129. but ratified by Great-Britain, 130. and by Holland, 131. they were contrived only to divide the Allies, 132. new overtures for a - peace, 144. negotiations for one begun by Gaulier, 219. new ones made by ibid. the preliminaries of peace signed, 223. made public, and severely reflected upon, 224. communicated to the States, who are alarmed at them, ibid. conferences for a peace opened at Utrecht, ibid. and 247. conclusion of several Peers against a peace, 226. the French proposals for a peace, 248. the demands of the Allies, 251. the French Plenipotentiaries give a plan for a general peace, 252. not communicated to the States, 253. negotiations are carried on directly between England and France, 263. the plan of it communicated by the Queen to the Parliament, 267, &c. a new scheme proposed by the Dutch, 295. another proposed to the States by the E. of Stafford, 300. the French try to elude the preliminaries they had entered into with Great-Britain, 303. the English Ministry sign a separate peace with France, 304, 308, 310. they scruple to do it a while, 309. peace signed, 310. the treaty brought to London, 311. addresses about it, 312, &c. proclaimed, 313. thanksgiving for the peace, 324. debates about it, 352. between England and Spain the chief articles of it, 339. faults of it, 401. peace between Enguena and Sarden, 588.
- Peace-bill, debates about it, IV. 580. dropped, 587. brought in again, 608. debates about it, ibid. dropped a second time, ibid.
- Peers, sixteen, for Scotland to be elected, and the manner of it settled, III. 777. twelve new ones made at once in England, IV. 234. left of them, 235.
- Pelham, Thomas, one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, III. 163. resigns that place, 195.
- Pelham, Sir Thomas, created a Baron, III. 781. made E. of Clare, IV. 407.
- Pelham, Thomas, made one of the Commissioners of trade, IV. 548. made Secretary of War, 679. his speech in the debate about the treaties of Hanover and Vienna, 693, &c.
- Pembroke, Thomas Herbert E. of, made Privy-Seal, III. 103. made one of the Lords Justices, 280. Plenipotentiary at the treaty of Ryswick, 350. made Knight of the Garter, 409. Lord President, and Lord High-Admiral, 504. dismissed, and refuses pension, 545. is for declaring war against France, ibid. Master of the Horse and President of the Council, 572. against the Occasional Conformity-bill, 628. Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, his speech to the Parliament of that Kingdom, IV. 33. made Lord High-Admiral, 104. resigns, 143. put up for Chancellor of the University of Oxford, 444.
- Penn, William, enters into a plot to restore K. James, III. 166. proclamation for apprehending him, 171.
- Perth, James Drummond E. of, comes to Scotland with the Pretender, IV. 62, 63. comes to Spain with the Pretender, 583.
- Peru; the English project to take it, IV. 605.
- Peterborough, Henry Mordaunt E. of, impeached, III. 113. advises Sir John Fenwick to set up a counter-plot, 337. encourages Smith, 348. his odd behaviour in that affair, ibid. sent to the Tower, and turned out of all his places, 349.
- Peterborough, Charles Mordaunt E. of, his speech on the Occasional Conformity-bill, III. 673. sworn of the Privy-Council, 683. goes to Catalonia, 706. publishes a manifesto, 707. lays siege to Barcelona, ibid. &c. highly commended by K. Charles, 710. jealous of Count Cifuentes, 711. marches into Valencia and Aragon, 711, 712. raises the siege of St Mattheo, 712. makes a shew of pursuing the enemy, ibid. his letter from Alcala to K. Charles, 713. possesses himself of Nules, and forms his cavalry, which preserves Valencia, ibid. recruits the diminished English and Spanish dragoons, and forms a new regiment of dragoons, 714. raises jealousies of Brigadier Magoni in the Spanish officers, ibid. makes himself master of Mahiedo, ibid. marches thence without disturbance to Valencia, ibid. goes to the relief of Barcelona, 752. comes with a small body to assist K. Charles, 755. uneasy at not having

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

- having the chief command, ibid. &c. appointed Ambassador Extraordinary, but is unacceptable to K. Charles, 756. withdraws to Genoa, ibid. assists at a General Council, 763. recalled, ibid. gives his opinion against an offensive war, IV. 4. his answers to the question of the Committee of the House of Lords, 6. debates in the House of Lords about his conduct in Spain, 45, 53. his speech, 45. his conduct in Spain examined into by the Parliament, 53, &c. he is made Knight of the Garter, 328. sent Ambassador to the K. of Sicily, 335. made Governor of Minorca, 346. his proceedings about the Catalans, 379, and 380. returns to England, 398. the French King alleges him that he would acknowledge K. George, ibid. returns to England, appears at St James's, and is forbid the Court, 421. is seized at Bologna, 549, &c. his speech about the bill against blasphemy, 647.
- Petition*, it is voted in the House of Commons, that it is the undoubted right of the People of England to petition or address the King, III. 503. against the Septennial bill, IV. 495. of the London Clergy against the Quakers bill, 655.
- Petit*, Brigadier, assists at the conquest of Minorca, IV. 95. made governor of fort St Philip, 97.
- Philip V.*, K. of Spain, declared Spanish, III. 425, 427, 428. sets out for Spain, 428. notifies his accession to all the Courts, except that of England, 431. a delinquency for an address from the House of Commons to own him for K. of Spain, 439. gives K. William notice of his accession to the Crown, who owns him for K. of Spain, 453, 454. marries the D. of Savoy's second daughter, 486. falls into an ill habit of body, ibid. has disputes with the States of Catalonia, ibid. acknowledges the Pretender for K. of England, 491. goes into Italy, 554. to Naples, and is at the battle of Luzzara, 566, 567. seizes the Merchants plate at Vigo, 572. proclaims war against, and invades Portugal, 667. takes several towns, ibid. forms a large body near Madrid, 713. goes from Madrid to besiege Valencia and Girona, 752. besieges Barcelona, ibid. comes to Madrid, but soon leaves it again, 753. returns thither, 755. marches up to the E. of Galway, ibid. See Spain. a project made by the Ministry to yield to him Spain and the West Indies, IV. 204. uneasy at the D. of Berry's marrying the D. of Orleans's daughter, 247. negotiations about his renunciation of the Crown of Spain, 263, &c. his Ministers not admitted at the congress of Utrecht, 287, 290, 304. his renunciation of the Crown of France, 295. extorts a donative from the English Merchants, 399. pretends to have numberless complaints against the Emperor, 504. ready to contend for the Crown of France, ibid. offended at the alliance between England and the D. of Orleans, 505. falls upon the Emperor's Dominions, 549. the Courts of England and France endeavour to bring about an accommodation between him and the Emperor, ibid. rejects all proposals, and continues his warlike preparations, 562. his declaration in favour of the Pretender, 583. attempts to relieve Fontarabia, 604. abdicates the Crown, 681. resumes it upon his Son's decease, 688. concludes two treaties with the Emperor, 689, &c. remits great sums to Vienna, 690.
- Phipps*, Sir William, made Governor of New-England, III. 195.
- Phipps*, Constantine, Council for Dr Schachervill, IV. 154. knighted and made Lord Chancellor of Ireland, 195, 196. thanked by the Clergy, 216, 217. made one of the Lords Justices, ibid. promotes the Jacobite interest in Ireland, 330. the Commons there resolve upon an address to the Queen for removing him from the Chancellorship, 331. the Bishops vote a contrary address in his favour, ibid. reflected upon in the Conduct of the Purse, 332. appointed one of the Lords Justices of Ireland, 333. causes K. George to be proclaimed in Ireland, 394. removed from being Lord Justice and Lord Chancellor, 404. created Doctor of the Civil Law at Oxford, 407. presents a petition to the Court at the Old Bailey in favour of Bp Atterbury, 661.
- Picardy*, plundered by the Confederates, IV. 79.
- Pickard*, Captain, destroys several French ships in Bertram-Bay, III. 253.
- Pierrepont*, Jervaise, created Baron Pierrepont of Ardglass, in Ireland, III. 590.
- Pignerol*, besieged by the D. of Savoy, III. 241.
- Piper*, Count, the D. of Marlborough waits upon him, IV. 15, 16.
- Pittis*, William, prosecuted for the sale of the Church of England's memorial, III. 792.
- Placemen*; a question in the House of Commons about their being Members of that House, III. 116. bill for excluding them from the House of Commons, 226, 227. the King refuses to pass it, 250. motion for disabling Placemen and Pensioners from serving in Parliament, 722. Place-bill lost, IV. 244.
- Placentia* attacked by the English, III. 611.
- Plague* in Poland, IV. 101. at Dantzick, 142. at Copenhagen, 214. at Marfaillen, a proclamation upon that occasion, 652. bill to prevent the spreading of the plague, 654.
- Plate*; bill for encouraging the bringing of it to the Mint, III. 307, 334.
- Plays* and Play-houses, scandalous, an order against them, III. 391.
- Pluckian*, the, a pamphlet against the Peerage-bill, answered by Mr Addison in the Old Whig, IV. 586, 587.
- Plot*; Lancashire plot, III. 265. Assassination-plot, 312. a plot in Scotland, 629. not duly inquired into, 647. all the examinations relating to it not sent down to the Parliament as desired, 652. taken again into consideration, and the examinations sent down, 694. a plot discovered, IV. 659. addresses thereupon, 659, &c.
- Plunket*, John, apprehended, IV. 660. had travelled to Rome, 667. votes of the House of Commons against him, ibid. bill to inflict pains and penalties upon him, 667, &c.
- Points*, Mr de, takes Carthagena, III. 354. escapes the English fleet, ibid. and 355. comes with a squadron before Gibraltar, 668. some of the ships destroyed by the English, 705. returns with a stronger squadron, but is forced to fly, and several of his ships are destroyed, ibid.
- Points*, or Poyntz, Stephen, his memorial to the K. of Sweden, IV. 703.
- Poland*, Augustus K. of, invades Pomerania, III. 410. defeated by the K. of Sweden, 486. See Augustus K. of Poland. the Protestants oppressed in that Kingdom, IV. 605.
- Poland*, John Sabieski K. of, dies, III. 331. France endeavours to place the Prince of Conti on that Throne, 355. but the Elector of Saxony is chosen, 356. See Augustus, K. of. A war there, 559, 568, 626. continuation of the troubles there, IV. 101.
- Pelignac*, Abbot de, one of the French Plenipotentiaries, IV. 164, &c. his speeches there, 248. Mr Vanderduffen's smart saying to him about the French Protestants, 251. made a Cardinal, 307.
- Polish*, David, imprisoned for the Kentish petition, III. 474.
- Poll-Tax* in Scotland, III. 282, &c. in England, 334, 368.
- Pouley*, John, Bp of Raphoe, protests against the meeting of the Parliament on a holy-day, for which he is taken into custody, IV. 148.
- Pope*; the French King's letter to him, III. 766. his mediation for a peace desired, 764. the French King writes a letter to him, upon the Pretender's expedition into Scotland, IV. 56, 57. Clement IX. sides with the House of Bourbon against that of Austria, 98. countenances the Pretender's expedition into Scotland, ibid. difference between the Emperor and him, ibid. he raises an army, 99. at length he agrees with the Emperor, 100. delays acknowledging K. Charles, 140. Clement XI. causes the E. of Peterborough to be seized, 549.
- Popey*; petition from several in Lancashire against it, III. 730. bill to prevent the growth of it, ibid.
- Popple*, Mr, Secretary of the Commissioners of Trade, III. 327.
- Porter*, Captain, concerned in the Assassination-plot, III. 312, 320. his character, 320. an evidence, 325, 337, &c.
- Porter*, Sir Charles, Chancellor of Ireland, motion to impeach him, III. 287. made one of the Lords Justices, 332. dies, ibid.
- Portland*, William Bentick E. of; a great favourite of K. William, made Groom of the Stole, and Privy-Purse, III. 39. created Baron of Crenkester, Viscount Woodstock, and Earl of Portland, 45. refuses to take money from the East-India Company, 275, 277. begs of the King the Lordships of Denbigh, &c. in Wales, 310. it is opposed by several Gentlemen, and an address presented to the King by the Commons about it, ibid. and 311, &c. the Assassination-plot is discovered to him, 317. entertains Smith as a spy, 348. has an interview with Marshal Bouffiers, 359. his solemn embassy to France, 378. can obtain nothing in favour of the Protestants in France, 379. supplanted by the E. of Albemarle, and at his return, resigns all his places, ibid. grant of lands to him in Ireland, 399. one of the Plenipotentiaries at the second Partition-treaty, 408. communicates to the House of Lords his share in that affair, 451, &c. commits a mistake in his accounts, 457. impeached by the Commons, ibid. but no articles are drawn against him, 462. attends K. William in his last moments, 507. who was the cause of his disgrace, 509. stops by his diligence the redemption of K. William's grants, IV. 246. ordered to part with his place of Colonel of the first troop of Horse-guards, 325. receives particular marks of favour from K. George, 402. created Marquis of Titchfield, and D. of Portland, 500. made one of the Lords of the Bed-chamber, 548. his speech at a Court of the South-Sea Directors, 624.
- Port-Mahon*, the Spaniards desire to have it retored, IV. 605.
- Portmore*, Daniel Collyer Earl of, made Commander in Chief of the Queen's forces in Portugal, IV. 912. Guiscard corresponds with France, under cover to him, 201.
- Portocarrero*, Cardinal, thought to have forged the K. of Spain's will, III. 425.
- Port St Mary* plundered by the English, III. 569.
- Portugal*, Don Pedro K. of, accedes to the Partition-treaty, III. 412. enters into an alliance with France, 487. afraid of the naval preparations in England, 554. concludes a neutrality with England, 559. enters into a treaty with Q. Anne and the States-General, 623, &c. insists upon the honours of the flag from the English Admiral, when in his ports, 624. the auxiliary forces of England and Holland land there, 665. their ill success, ibid. not furnished with horse by the King, ibid. the King governed by French Counsels, 666. his Kingdom invaded by the Spaniards, ibid. the King comes to the army with a design to invade Castile, 667. lived privately in a little house at Alcantara, 762. has an intrigue with a beautiful English Lady, ibid. dies, ibid.
- Portugal*, Don John, K. of, signs a treaty of alliance, III. 762. marries the Emperor's sister, IV. 31, 32.
- Portugal*; bill for encouraging the trade there, IV. 43. the trade of that Kingdom prejudiced by the treaty of commerce, 315.
- Powis*, William Herbert Marquis of, falls from Ireland into France with King James, III. 138, 145.
- Powis-house* burnt, IV. 326.
- Pozzobono*, Marquis de, quits England, leaving a memorial behind him, IV. 702. his letter to the D. of Newcastle, 703.
- Premunientes* clause, III. 525.
- Pragmatick Sanctions*, IV. 689. guaranteed by England, 711.
- Preachers* at Whitehall, IV. 680.
- Presbyterians*; a bill of toleration and comprehension in their favour, III. 44, 49. account of them, 45. their haughty carriage in Scotland, 75. demand to have the King's Supremacy, and the Right of Patronage taken away, ibid. use the Episcopal Clergy in Scotland with great severity, 105, 124. their violent proceedings, 181. their character, 182. offend K. William, 194. jealous of him, 195. desirous of recovering his favour, they manage with more temper, 245, &c. join with the Jacobites, 286. the origin of the Presbyterians, 513. many embarked for New-England are stopp'd, 515. are against against a Toleration, ibid. would not allow K. Charles to have the Common-Prayer read in his family, 516. their propoals at the Restoration, ibid. were ready for an Union, 520. those in Scotland, jealous of the Union, 770. act for securing their government, 772.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Prefton, Richard Graham Lord, proclamation for apprehending him, III. 142. enters into a plot for restoring K. James, 166. taken, ibid. tried and condemned, 169. pardoned, 170.

Pretender, acknowledged K. of England by the K. of France, III. 491. and by the K. of Spain, the Pope, and the D. of Savoy, ibid. but the Kings of Portugal and Denmark refuse to own him, 491, 492. the English Nation highly angry at his being proclaimed King, 495. act for attaining him, and for abjuring him, 501. a design to place him on the Throne after the Queen's death, 630. his interest protected in Scotland, 767. letters of his sent to several Noblemen in that Kingdom, ibid. tells Captain Stratton that he longs to be among his Scots friends, 768. his birth-day kept publicly in Scotland, IV. 34. account of his intended descent on Scotland, 56, &c. the French King gives him a sword, and takes leave of him, ibid. his motto upon his colours and standards, ibid. he and his adherents are proclaimed traitors, 57. serves in the French army, 68, 69. his cowardly behaviour at the battle of Oudenard, 75. the Pope favoured his expedition into Scotland, 98. the French offer to abandon him, 125, 129. Bp Burnet warns the Queen about her espousing his interest, 163. his friends openly show themselves in Scotland, 217. his medal, ibid. Leslie was to convert him, 218. transactions relating to him, 252, &c. ill of the small-pox, 254. his Sister dies of it, ibid. various reports about him, 289. his protestation, 313. declaration of the French Minister at the Hague, about him, 346. account of him by C. Leslie, 357. question whether Q. Anne knew any thing of the design of bringing him in, 372. pofts to Versailles upon the news of the Queen's death, but Lewis XIV. desires him to quit his dominions, 400. his manifesto sent to several of the English Nobility, 409. is in Lorrain, 416, 417. a reward of a 100,000 l. to such as should seize him, 433. rebellion in Scotland in his favour, 436. proclaimed at Castle-toun, and his standard set up at Brae-Mar, 437. his adherents publish a manifesto, 438, 439, &c. his health drank at Oxford, 442. proclaimed in Cornwall, 443. his declaration, 453. lands at Peterhead in Scotland, 455. is proclaimed, and receives the homage of the Episcopal people at Aberdeen, ibid. attacked with an ague, 466. forms a Council, and publishes six proclamations, ibid. issues out an order for burning some villages, 467. imarks at Montreuil, and lands at Gravelin, 471. complains of disappointment, 472. his paper to General Gordon, ibid. the E. of Stair presents two memorials to the Court of France relating to him, 474, 475. removes the L. Bolingbroke from being his Secretary of State, 475, 476. bill in the Irish Parliament for attaining him, and giving a reward for his head, 478. sends a letter to the Lord-Mayor of London, with orders to proclaim him King of Great-Britain, 485. the Jacobites wear white robes on his birthday, 500. removes into Italy, 505, &c. conspiracy to set him on the Throne by means of Sweden, 506. K. of Sweden's project in his favour, 539. a marriage proposed between him and the Czar's daughter, 540. Cardinal Alveroni projects something in his favour, 575, 582. enters into that Cardinal's scheme, 583. comes to Spain, ibid. the K. of Spain's declaration in his favour, ibid. marries Prince Sibirski's daughter, 584, 585. Sweden engages not to give him any assistance, 614. Pope Clement XI, very kind to him, 651. the Pretender's declaration, 664. burnt, 665. treaty in his favour between the Emperor and Spain, 690. designs formed in his behalf, 699, &c. mentioned in Palm's memorial, 705.

Prior, Matthew, his witty repartee to one of the French King's officers, III. 379. Secretary to the embassy in France, 415. removed from the board of Trade and Plantations, 792. sent Ambassador into France, IV. 220. writes the Examiner, 221. comes back to England, ibid. Matt's peace, 125. named a Plenipotentiary at the treaty of Utrecht, but set aside, 247. goes to Paris along with L. Bolingbroke, 288. left there to take care of some private affairs, 290. L. Bolingbroke's letter to him, 292, &c. left Plenipotentiary at Paris, 293. has a private audience of the K. of France, ibid. comes over to England, and returns to France, 293. L. Bolingbroke's letters to him, 303, 305, 306. his letters to L. Bolingbroke and the E. of Oxford, 306, 307. his negotiations about the Pretender, 378, &c. the Lords Dartmouth and Bolingbroke's letters to him, 381. notifies the Queen's death to Lewis XIV., who assures him that he would maintain the Hanover Succession, 398. that King's answer to him concerning the Catalans, ibid. his memorial to him about the demolition of Dunkirk, 408. ordered home from Paris, 415. lands at Dover, and promises to reveal all he knew, 418. is introduced to the King, and entertained at dinner by the L. Townshend, ibid. taken into custody, 426. examined and closely confined, 427. prevaricates, ibid. and 435. report of the Committee of Secrecy concerning him, 435. excepted out of the act of Grace, 546. dies, 651.

Privilege Places disfranchised, III. 349.

Privileges of Members of Parliament, III. 479.

Privy-Council, but one ordered in Great-Britain, IV. 54. settled, and who the Members of it were, 67.

Prizes; proclamation for the distribution of them, IV. 68.

Protestant Succession; measures taken to secure it, IV. 347. acknowledged at the treaty of Utrecht, 390. debates about the security of it, 348. voted to be out of danger, ibid. and 354.

Protestants in Ireland oppressed, III. 77. a massacre of them designed, ibid. many Protestants against the present Settlements, 303. French Protestants, 15,000 l. granted for them by Parliament, 305. Protestants adhering to K. James, 314. the case of the French Protestants not taken into consideration at the treaty of Ryswick, 362. nor the Lutherans, 363. in Silesia have their Churches restored to them, IV. 18. act for naturalizing foreign Protestants, 110. repealed, 200, 243. they present a petition about the Occasional Conformity-bill, 231. their interest but faintly insisted upon at the treaty of Utrecht, 250, 305. recommended to Q. Anne by the K. of Prussia, 302. in the French galleys released by the mediation of the Queen, 329. a clause inserted in favour of the French Protestants in the Schiff-bill, 362. Protestants in Germany oppressed, 605.

Prussia; the D. of Marlborough negotiates with that Court for sending forces into Italy, III. 662, 678. Sophia Charlotte Q. of Prussia dies, ibid.

Prussia, Frederic K. of, the Principality of Neuchâtel adjudged to him, IV. 36. the Royal dignity acknowledged in him, 130. demands of arrears due to his troops, and the Succession of the late K. William, 209, 214. comes to the Hague for that purpose, 214. offers to maintain his own troops, 287. refuses to come into the peace, 294. his death and character, 302.

Prussia, Frederic K. of, the French propose to set him on the British Throne immediately after the Queen's death, IV. 400. included in the treaty between France and the Czar, 540. see p. 589. very rich, 615.

Pulteney, William, his speech in the House of Commons about the peace, IV. 263. about the reward for apprehending the Pretender, 397. made Secretary at War, 404. impeaches L. Widdrington, 482. is against offering a pardon to those that were in arms in Scotland, 484. resigns his places, 523. his speech on the supply against Sweden, ibid. about the army, 526. about the proposal of the South-Sea Company, 534. kisses the King's hand, 617. his speech at a Court of the South-Sea Company, 625. moves for an address, 629. is Chairman of the Committee to examine Loyer, 666. made Coffer of the Household, 673. begins to be dissatisfied, 684. turned out of his places, 687. is against addressing the King upon his speech, 701.

Pulteney, Daniel, made one of the Commissioners of Trade, IV. 548. his speech in Parliament, 693.

Puritans; origin of that name, III. 2. State and Church Puritans, 3. increase, 4. abandoned in the Parliament of 1640, 5. doctrinal and discipline Puritans, ibid. account of the Puritans, 513, &c.

Q

Quadruple Alliance; IV. 549, 562. Spain signs it, 600, 605.

Quakers; account of them, III. 45, 516.

Keith forsakes them, 520. do not join in the address to the Queen, 540. bill for taking some words out of their affirmation, IV. 655. petition against it, ibid. some pretend they were no Christians, ibid. bill for accepting their affirmation, instead of an oath, passed in Ireland, 676.

Quebec; expedition there, IV. 215.

Queensbury, James Douglas D. of, III. 69. Commissioner to the Parliament of Scotland, 406, 424. made Knight of the Garter, 425. Lord Privy-Seal of Scotland, 555. made High-Commissioner, 556. Secretary of State, 595. and High-Commissioner again, 596. deserts the Cavaliers, 598, 600. ingroffles every thing, 605. draws out the Session of Parliament to a great length, ibid. Frazer discovers a plot to him, 629. some thought it a contrivance of the Duke's, 634. he is dismissed from the management of affairs in Scotland, 648. some of his friends move, that the Queen should be desired to communicate a letter of that Duke's to her, ibid. exposed thereby to the Parliament's resentment, ibid. serves the D. of Argyle, and promotes the act of Succession in Scotland, 689. arrives at Edinburgh, where he makes a public entry, 692. nominates the Scottish Commissioners for the Union between England and Scotland, 737. High-Commissioner to the Parliament of Scotland, 768. the tumults there about the Union make him despair of succeeding, and he apprehends his life to be in danger, 776. goes in great State to the Parliament, after the conclusion of the Union, 779. his speech at the end of the Session, ibid. goes to London, and is met by great numbers, ibid. made Baron of Rippon, Marquis of Beverley, and Duke of Dover, III. 68. sworn of the Privy-Council, 105. introduced into the House of Peers as D. of Dover, ibid. thought he had still a right to vote as a Peer of Scotland, 109. but at length not admitted to have a vote in Scotland, after he was created D. of Dover, ibid. had a party in the Parliaments, 110. made third Secretary of State, ibid. and 119. dies, 218, 219.

Queensbury, Charles Douglas D. of, made one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber, IV. 617.

Quefney; resolution to besiege it, IV. 256. description of it, 259. besieged, ibid. and 274. surrenders, 277. retaken by the French, 286.

Quietists; III. 529.

Quo-Warranto's, III. 96, 114. the Marquis of Hallifax concerned in them, 114. against the City of London reversed, 132.

R

Ratcliffe, Charles, arraigned, IV. 497. tried and found guilty, 498. escapes, 501.

Radnor, Charles Roberts E. of, sworn of the Privy-Council, III. 504.

Radstadt taken by the French, IV. 13. conferences there, 337.

Ragotski, Prince, at the head of the disaffected Hungarians, III. 622. aims at the Principality of Transylvania, 669, 715. possesses himself of that Principality, IV. 4. encourages the Hungarians to stand out, 184.

Rain surrenders to the Allies, III. 656. a description of it, ibid.

Ramilles; description of that place, III. 746. battle there, ibid. the standards taken there carried to Guild-hall, 780.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Ranelagh, — Jones, E. of, made a Privy-Counsellor, III. 190. his character, ibid. made Receiver and Paymaster-General of the forces, 572. his accounts examined by the Commons, 584, 643. quits his place, and is expelled the House of Commons, 584. the Commons address the Queen that she would order him to be prosecuted, 643.

Ranelagh, Richard Jones, E. of, sworn of the Privy-Council, IV. 105.

Ranter, III. 516.

Ratcliffe, Dr John, complained of in the House of Commons for not attending Q. Anne, IV. 396.

Rates, book of, reviewed by the Commons, III. 228, 232.

Ratisbone; a description of it, III. 616. the Elector of Bavaria takes possession of it, ibid. and 617. a declaration delivered to the diet there by Mr Le Heup, IV. 705.

Rawlinson, Sir William, made one of the Commissioners of the Great-Seal, III. 40.

Raymond, Robert, made Solicitor-General, IV. 192. made a Judge of the King's-Bench, 679. and one of the Commissioners of the Great-Seal, 683.

Rebellion in 1715, IV. 433. breaks out in Scotland, 436. progress of it in England, 443, &c.

Rebels, English and Scotch joined, IV. 455, &c. defeated at Preston, 456. some executed there, and at Wigan and Manchester, 485. about a thousand submit to the King's mercy, and petition to be transported, ibid. some more arraigned 497, &c. several of them discharged, 501. some executed, 503.

Recheren, Count de, one of the Dutch Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, IV. 247. his servants insulted by Monsieur Mesnager's, 290, 306.

Recognition, act of, III. 597, 598.

Records in the Tower, &c. examined and put in order at the instance of the E. of Halifax, III. 731.

Reformation, III. 511, &c.

Reformers, made St Augustin's notions the standard of Religion, III. 511.

Refugees, French, petition the House of Commons for relief, III. 182. apply to the King, ibid. their address to Q. Anne in favour of their persecuted brethren in France, 791, &c. petition for a bill to preclude the subjects of the French King from claiming any estates here, IV. 162. present a petition to Q. Anne for her interposing at the treaty of Utrecht in favour of their persecuted brethren in France, 245.

Regale; what it is, III. 36.

Regency; act for it, III. 720. a dangerous mistake relating to it rectified, IV. 329.

Regent of France. See Orleans, D. of.

Rehearsal; a paper by Lefley against the lawfulness of resistance, IV. 150.

Remonstrance of the state of the Kingdom, III. 6, &c.

Remonstrants, III. 511, &c.

Renou, Hilary, causes the French smugglers to be prosecuted, III. 371, 372. naturalized gratis, 373.

Renunciation of the Crown of France by the K. of Spain, IV. 263. memorial about it, ibid. and 295. of the Crown of Spain by the Princes of France, 308.

Reports of the Committee of Secrecy, IV. 636, &c. of that appointed to examine Lager, 666.

Representation of the Lords to Q. Anne, III. 632. of the Lower-House of Convocation, 645. of the Lords about the Aylesbury affair, 683, &c. of the Lower-House of Convocation, 686. of the Commons about the debts of the Navy, IV. 205. and about the Dutch, 242. of the Convocation to Q. Anne, 207.

Republicans, III. 10. Republican Quigs, 27.

Reresby, Sir John, his memoirs quoted, III. 38, &c.

Retrieved; debate about that word in an address to the Commons, III. 574.

Revenue of the Crown, III. 51. the several branches of it, ibid. &c. appropriation of it, 129, &c.

Revolution principles, far from being universally embraced, IV. 402. the Revolution talked and preached against, 405.

Reynolds, Edward, made Bp of Norwich, III. 519.

Rhinburg taken, III. 617.

Rich, Sir Robert, made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, III. 236.

Richardson, — one of the accomplices in the Assassination-plot, III. 318.

Richelieu, D. of, the French Ambassador at Vienna brings about a peace between Great-Britain and the Emperor, IV. 710.

Richmond, Charles Lenox D. of, his estate in France secured, IV. 391. made one of the Lords of the Bed-chamber, 407. presents a petition in behalf of the condemned Lords, 486.

Ridge, Thomas, censured by the House of Commons for his management about victualling the Navy, IV. 199.

Riga besieged by the Poles, III. 410. relieved by the K. of Sweden, 438.

Rights and Liberties of the Subjects; bill for settling them, III. 55.

Riots at Bristol, Chippenham, Norwich, Reading, &c. IV. 407, 408. proclamation for suppressing riots, 409. riots in London, 424, 425, 500, &c. act against riots, 432.

Ripperda, Baron and Duke de, negotiates two treaties between the Emperor and Spain, IV. 689. dismissed, 698. flies to the Dutch Ambassador, who carries him to Colonel Stanhope's house, ibid. taken away from there by force, and confined in the Castle of Segovia, ibid. some expressions he dropped, 690, 694.

Rivers, Richard Savage Earl, commands the land-forces that were to make a descent in France, III. 761. strictly examines Guiscard, ibid. has manifestly ready, 762. waits on the K. of Portugal, who receives him with his hat off, ibid. refuses the command of the forces in Spain, 763. made General of the Horse, IV. 67. sworn of the Privy-Council, 105. sent to the Court of Hanover, 195. sent to that Court again to assure the Elector that care would be taken of the Succession in his Family, 225. made General of the Ordinance, and Colonel of the Royal Regiment of Horse-guards, 234.

Robertson, Monsieur de, attends K. George to England, IV. 401. infuses jealousies into His Majesty of the L. Townshend, 503.

Robinson, John, head of the Independents, III. 513.

Robinson, John, made Bp of Bristol, IV. 192. and Lord Privy-Seal, 219. designed for Plenipotentiary at the treaty of peace, ibid. appointed one of the Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, 222. comes there and appears in a black velvet gown, 247. his speech at the opening of the Congress, ibid. his letters to Secretary St John, 253. fresh orders sent to him, ibid. his answer to the expostulation of the States about the D. of Ormona's refusing to act, 260. threatens them with the English making a separate peace, ibid. proposes to the Allies a suspension of arms for two months, in order to treat with the French, 275, &c. he and the E. of Strafford scruple to sign a separate peace, 309. they sign it at last, 310, &c. translated to the See of London, 328. votes against the Court, 352. his speech about the peace, 353. says that the Schiffm-bill was necessary, 362. made one of the Privy-Council, 404. his speech about an address to the King, 417. his behaviour at the Congress of Utrecht, 429. votes for the E. of Oxford, 431. his speech about the Septennial Parliament, 493. his answer to a reflecting speech of L. Coningsby about the peace, 512, &c. his speech in the debate about the repeal of the Schiffm-bill, 580. is for the bill against blasphemy and profaneness, 647.

Rochequade, Marquis de, speaks to Q. Anne in behalf of the French Protestants in the galleys, IV. 329.

Rocheater, Lawrence Hyde, E. of, made a Privy-Counsellor, III. 190. his character, ibid. his great credit with Q. Mary, 244. moves a doubt about the legality of the Parliament's continuance, 264. protests against the vote for acknowledging the reality of the Lancashire plot, 267. represents the bad state of the coin to the House of Lords, 275. is set at the head of affairs, and engages to bring the Tories into the King's service, 436, 437.

Rocheater, Lawrence Hyde, E. of, made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 437. animadverts upon some in the House of Lords, who had reflected on the K. of France, 451. the King's distrust of him, at which he is offended, 454. the King is uneasy with him, 471. thought to be the promoter of all violent motions, 488. several books published against him, ibid. delays his going to Ireland, ibid. perceives the King's heart was not with him, ibid. the King complains of his imperious temper, ibid. expostulates with him, ibid. goes to Ireland, ibid. his behaviour there, ibid. asks leave to come to England, 504. brings over complaints against the Trustees for forfeited estates, ibid. declared again Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 544. was for an intire change in the Administration, 545. a rivalry between him and the D. of Marlborough, ibid. was against declaring war against France, ibid. quits his place of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 583, &c. set up as the only man that deserved to be Prime-Minister, 628. seconds the L. Hauersham's speech, and complains of the exportation of the coin, 674. urges the ill consequences of the act of Security in Scotland, 675. moves the bringing the Electress Dowager of Hanover to live in England, 679, 719. moves for a clause in the act of Regency, that the Regents should not repeal any part of the act of Uniformity, 721. opens the debate about the danger of the Church, 724, &c. his speech in the debate about the Union, 781, 783, 786. on the state of the Nation, IV. 40. was for laying the blame of the miscarriages of the Admiralty on the Ministry, 42. his speech in relation to the affairs of Spain, 45. speaks in Dr Sacheverel's behalf, 158, 160. made President of the Council, 191. complains of the Lord-Keeper Harcourt, for introducing the Scots Lords to Q. Anne, 195. visits the D. of Marlborough, 196. dies suddenly, 202.

Rochester, Lawrence Hyde E. of, his speech on the debate on the Navy-debt, IV. 653.

Rochester, Thomas Sprat Bp of, taken into custody, III. 200. Young's plot against him, 218. See Sprat. is against Lay-Baptism, IV. 255.

Rochester, Bishop of. See Atherbury.

Rochford, William Henry de Zuylenstein E. of, a grant made to him in Ireland, III. 399.

Rockingham, Lewis Watson Lord, created E. of Rockingham, IV. 406.

Romney, Henry Sidney E. of, concerned in Kidd's affair, III. 396. grants of lands to him in Ireland, 399. made Groom of the Stole, 409.

Rooke, George, Rear-Admiral, III. 174. subscribes an address to Q. Mary, 200, 201. knighted, and made Vice-Admiral of the Red, 237. his engagement with the French, 242, &c. examined by the Commons, 248. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 253. with a squadron at Cadix, 313, 331. resigns the command to L. Berkley, ibid. examined by the House of Commons, 349. bombards Copenhagen, 411. commands the English fleet, 486. one of the Council to Prince George, 545. sent to attack Cadix, 568. averse to that undertaking, ibid. burns the galleons and French fleet at Vigo, 570. the Commons vote him thanks, 575. and address the Queen to order him to lay before them an account of his proceedings, 574. his conduct examined and approved, 575. sworn of the Privy-Council, ibid. sent with a fleet, to alarm the coast of France, 611. convays Charles K. of Spain to Lisbon, 626. comes in sight of the French fleet, but does not engage them, 664. takes Gibraltar, ibid. his victories paralleled by the Commons with the D. of Marlborough, 671. he is laid aside, 678.

Ross, taken by the French, III. 241.

Ross, Robert Lord, presents an address from Scotland, III. 407.

Ross, William Lord, offers a resolve in Parliament, III. 651.

Ross, General, his speeches in Parliament, IV. 427, 428. ordered to sell his regiment, 433. is one of the Secret Committee, 632. his speech about the South-Sea affair, 634.

Rother, John Lefley E. of, presents a resolve to the Parliament of Scotland, III. 650. is made Privy-Seal, 653. removed 689. was for the Union, 771. chosen one of the sixteen Peers, IV. 64. High-Admiral of Scotland, and the King's Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, 421. zealous against the Rebellion, 438. tries to secure Perth, 446. marches to Seaton-house, 447. the Rebels break into the burial place of his family, 449. attempts in vain to make himself master of Falkland palace, 449.

Rouille, Monsieur de, comes to Holland, under pretence of negotiating a peace, IV. 120, &c. 125. departs from Holland, 131. Roux, Nicholas, Under-Secretary of State, IV. 120.

Roxburgh, John Ker E. of, desires that the act of Security should be read, III. 651. made Secretary of State, 653. removed 689. was for the Union, 771. chosen one of the sixteen Peers, IV. 64. sets himself up in opposition to the D. of Queensberry's power, 110. his speech in Parliament, 431. acts against the Rebels in Scotland, 438. made Secretary of State, and Keeper of the Signet in Scotland, 504. is for the Petreage bill, 586.

Royal Assurance Company erected, IV. 613.

Rügen, Isle of, restored by Denmark, IV. 615.

Ruremond taken, III. 563.

Rufhout, Sir John, sent Ambassador to Turkey, III. 350.

Ruffel, William Lord, his attainder reversed, III. 92. Committee appointed to examine who had been his prosecutors, 114.

Ruffel, Admiral Edward, conveys the Q. of Spain, III. 139. appointed Commander of the English fleet, 172. conveys the Turkey fleet safe into England, 182. examined in the House of Commons about the conduct of the fleet, 192. sends up an address to Q. Mary from the fleet, 200. defeats the French at la Hogue, 201, &c. fails very opportunely out of the Thames, 205. being provoked at some awkward orders, he does not pursue his victory, ibid. thanks voted him by the House of Commons, 221. examined by them about the conduct of the fleet, 222. letters of his, 224. his answer in the House of Lords to the E. of Nottingham's papers, wherein his orders and neglects were aggravated, 227. 228. vote of the House of Commons in his favour, ibid. dismissed, 237. put again at the head of the fleet, 252. and made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, ibid. and 253. falls into the Mediterranean, 253. 256. goes towards the coast of France, upon the discovery of the plot, 319. desires the House of Commons to read the papers relating to Pemwick, 338. made E. of Orford, 350. had the management both of the Admiralty and the fleet, 355, 378, 390. resigns all his places, 390. very popular, 391. See Orford, Edward Ruffel E. of.

Ruffians, advance against Vishnar, IV. 538. and against Schonen, ibid. See Czar.

Ruth, Monsieur de St, commander of the Irish forces, III. 151. reduces Savoy, 154. Rutland, John Manners E. of, made Marquis of Granby and Duke of Rutland, III. 590. waits upon K. George at his first coming, and is graciously received, IV. 402. made Knight of the Garter, 407.

Ruvigny, Marquis of, his conduct in Ireland, III. 174. created E. of Galway, and sent to command the English forces in Piedmont, 252. See Galway.

Rye; K. George lands there, IV. 691. Ryfwick, Congress of, III. 350. negotiations there about a peace, 352, &c. peace signed there, 360.

S.

SACHEVEREL (William) refuses the place of one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, III. 41.

Sacheverel, Henry; account and character of him, IV. 149. preaches his famous sermon, 150. 40,000 of it sold, ibid. reflects on Bishop Burnet and Benjamin Hadley, ibid. impeached by the Commons, 151. his trial, 153, &c. it causes great uneasiness, 152. the managers at his trial, 153, 154. the Peers who voted for and against him, 159. the censure passed upon him, 161. his sermons burnt, 160. addresses on account of his trial, 185. his progress, 191. ferment raised among the Clergy by his trial, 193. rejoicings upon the expiration of his suspension, 325. he is made Rector of St Andrew's Halibourne, ibid. preaches at Sutton, 407. the cry about him, 408. he dies, 681. leaves Dr Atterbury a legacy, ibid.

Sacramental-Toll; attempts to repeal it, III. 512. a letter against it ordered by the Commons to be burnt, IV. 120.

Saint Albans, Charles Beauclerk, D. of, made Captain of the Band of Pensioners, IV. 474.

St Germain; the Court there encourages the Plot in Scotland, III. 629.

St Januarius's blood, IV. 590.

St John, Henry, appointed Secretary at war, III. 647. Guiscard becomes intimate with him, 761. tries to engage the leaders of the Tories in Q. Anne's interest, IV. 38.

St John resigns his place of Secretary at war, 50. made Secretary of State, 191. delivers a message to the Commons about the affairs of Spain, 196. Marquis de Guiscard's intimacy with him, 201. has private meetings with Gaultier, 219. transmits the proposals of France to Lord Raby, ibid. his letter to the Earl of Strafford, 224, &c. 253, 291. his answer to the Dutch memorial, 243. his speech when the negotiation of peace was reflected on, 246. his letters about the peace, 249. and to Torcy, 252. to the Duke of Ormond about not venturing a battle, 256.

his speech in the House of Commons about a peace, 263. his letter to Torcy about the renunciation, ibid. &c. created Viscount Bolingbroke, 282. goes incognito to France, 288. impowered to conclude a separate peace between England, France, Spain, and Savoy, ibid. goes to Fontainebleau, where he is magnificently entertained by the King of France, who makes him a present of a fine diamond ring, 289. returns to England, 290. his letter to the British Plenipotentiaries, 291. about the ravaging of the Sugar-Islands, 293. misunderstanding between him and the Earl of Oxford, 295. his letters to the Duke of Shrewsbury, 304, &c. sends the British Ministers orders to sign the peace, 309. arrives at Whitehall with the treaties of peace and commerce, 311. forms a scheme to put himself and Lord Harcourt at the head of the High-Church party, 328. he, and Secretary Bramley, and Sir William Wyndham, gain the ascendant over the Lord Treasurer, 335, 346.

his design of new modelling the army, 346. pushes on his design of bringing in the Pretender, ibid. his speech about the Catalans, 347. made a private agreement in France about the dower of King James's Queen, 351. lays before the Commons an account of the treaties of peace and commerce, 353. causes the publisher of the Queen's letter to the Elector of Hanover to be apprehended, 358. is against inviting that Prince over, 359. promotes the Schism-bill, 361. is against allowing the Dissenters schools to teach their own children, 362. was bred among Schismatics, 360. brings in a bill to make it High-Treason to lift or be enlisted in the Pretender's service, 365. is against examining into the Spanish trade, ibid. had the conduct of foreign affairs, 367. was bold, a man of pleasures, and had the public odium, ibid. falls out with the Treasurer and is supported by the Queen, ibid. causes the Treasurer to be removed and is likely to succeed him, ibid. resolves to strike in with the Whigs, 368. his proceedings about the Pretender, the Catalans, &c. 377—386. his schemes baffled by the Duke of Shrewsbury being made Treasurer, 369. obliged to stand at the door of the Council Chamber, 395. removed from his office, 399, 404. attends at the King's Coronation, 407. his speech about the addresses to the King, 417. his conduct very extraordinary, 418. appears every where and speaks in Parliament with great freedom, but his heart beginning to fail him he goes over to France in disguise, ibid. his letter, ibid. impeached of Treason, 427. the articles against him carried up to the House of Lords, 434. his name and coat of arms are razed, 436. is Secretary to the Pretender, 475. removed, 476. his letters upon that occasion, ibid. &c. he is pardoned, and returns to England, 674. his attainder reversed, 685, &c. St John, Henry, created Viscount St John, IV. 499.

St Quintin, Sir William, made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, IV. 406. displaced, IV. 525.

St Sebastian taken, IV. 604.

Salisbury, — Cecil, Earl of, sent to the Tower, III. 44. admitted to bail, ibid. impeached, 113.

—, James Cecil, E. of, Young's plot against him, III. 218.

Salustri, battle of, III. 153.

Sample, John, taken up for High-Treason, and escapes, IV. 660.

Saneroff, William, Archbishop of Canterbury, tried and acquitted, III. 20. meets the Lords at Guild-Hall, and invites the Prince of Orange, 22. made one of the Privy Council, 38. refuses to consecrate Bishop Burnet, 41. absents himself from Parliament, and refuses to take the oaths, 43. his character, ibid. suspended ab Officio, 105. was for a comprehension, 106. dies, 513. published Bishop Overall's book, 521.

Saragoza; description of that place, IV. 179. battle near it, 178. King Charles comes thither, ibid. the Duke of Vendôme takes possession of it, 182.

Sardinia, reduced, IV. 64. secured by Sir John Norris, 176. conquered by the Spaniards, 549. given to the D. of Savoy, ibid. and 563. his Minister claims the ships in the harbour of Messina, 566. the troops designed for the expedition to Saranina are sent to Sicily, ibid. Sardinia evacuated, 600. and given to the D. of Savoy, 603.

Savoy, Amadeus II. D. of, accedes to the Grand Alliance, III. 152. defeated at the battle of Salustri, 153. applies to K. William and the States-General, 154. most of his towns taken, 184. K. William and the States of Holland allowed him 100,000*l.* a year, ibid. his affairs restored by D. Schomberg's assistance, 183. makes a great progress in Dauphiny, takes Ambrun, &c. 215. falls ill of the small-pox, 216. beleges Pignerol, 241. defeated at the battle of Marfaglia, ibid. &c. makes a separate peace with France, 328, &c. his daughter given in marriage to the D. of Burgundy, 331.

Savoy, Victor Amadeus II. D. of, refuses to have one of his sons brought to England, and educated in the Protestant Religion, III. 445. his Dukes profess against the bill of Succession, ibid. that Duke commands the French army, 485. grows cold and backward, 486. his second daughter married to the K. of Spain, ibid. owns the Pretender, 491. the Allies jealous of him, 566. comes into the Grand Alliance, 622. the French discover it, ibid. their unreasonable demands of him, 623. the K. of France's letter to him, ibid. gives notice of his proceedings to Q. Anne and the Dutch, ib. Count Starnberg brings him forces, ibid. the French King declares war against him, ibid. loses his towns, and continues firm, though not duly assisted by the Emperor, 668, 703. has but a very small army, and resolves notwithstanding to adhere to the Grand Alliance, 703. admits none of the Clergy into his Councils, ibid. fortifies Turin, 758. refuses the French King's offers, ibid. raises the siege of Turin, and defeats the French, 759. undertakes to march an army into France, and Q. Anne makes a treaty with him, IV. 4, 21. forms a project of invading Provence, 21. enters Provence, and advances towards Toulon, 26. comes before that place, ibid. is obliged to retire, which he does in very good order, ibid. recovers Suza, ibid. the Lords address Q. Anne to strengthen his army, he having suffered so well, 46. takes Exilles, fort la Peralu, the valley of St Martin, and Fensarella, 93. makes also a diversion in favour of K. Charles, ibid. receives the investiture of the Mantuan and Monferrat, 101. France offers to restore Savoy to him, 120. and endeavours to draw him off from the Grand Alliance, 132. he refuses to take the field, 140. indisposed as well as his son and brother, 175. has an interview with the Emperor Charles, who grants him the investiture of the fiefs in Monferrat, 214. penetrates as far as the Rhine, ibid. his Ministers angry at the report of their

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Master's agreeing to a suspension of arms, 276. one of his Plenipotentiaries insulted, 290. account of the difference between him and the Court of Vienna, 293. Sicily offered to him, 294. the arrears of his subsidies paid, ibid. how nearly his House is allied to the English Crown, 393. is persuaded to change Sicily for Sardinia, 504. enters into a Convention with the Emperor about Sardinia, 571. put in possession of that Island, 603

Sawbridge, Jacob, expelled the House of Commons, IV. 634. bill to make his estate answerable for 250,000*l.* to the South-Sea Company, 640

Saxe-Gutha; some of their troops in the pay of Great-Britain, IV. 521

Sayer, — taken into custody, IV. 660

Scarborough, Richard Lumley E. of, attends K. William to Ireland, III. 133. sworn of the Privy-Council, IV. 105. his speech at Dr Sachverd's trial, 157. is against the bill for limiting the number of officers, 162. moves for the thanks of the House of Lords to be given to the D. of Marlborough, 195. Lord Lieutenant of Northumberland, repairs to Newcastle to secure that place, 445. his speech in Parliament, 696

Seafdale, — Leake E. of, proclamation for apprehending him, III. 200. complains of his commitment to the House of Lords, 221

Schellenberg, battle of, III. 655
Schism formed by Nonjuring Clergy, III. 512, &c.

Schism-bill; proceedings and debates upon it, IV. 360. extended to Ireland, 363. a design to repeal it, 524. it is repealed, 578
Schlick, Count, enters Bavaria, III. 616. makes himself master of several places, ibid. defeated, ibid. takes Wiltzboven, ibid.

Schomberg, Frederic, Duke and Marshal of, relieves Maestricht, III. 35. comes over with K. William, and is Master of the Ordnance, 39. elected Knight of the Garter, 45. the Parliament gives him 100,000*l.* which is converted into 5000*l.* a year, 52, 99. has the command of that army in Ireland, 99. his campaign there, 100. a plot in his army, 100, 101. his conduct in Ireland, 115. his army reinforced, 121. takes a fatherly care of the English army, 133. takes Charlemont Castle, 134. opposes the passing of the Boyne, and advises the sending part of the army towards Slainbridge, which not being done, he is discontented, 135. his bravery at the battle of the Boyne, 136. is slain there, ibid. his character, 137. his saying about attacking the French in the Netherlands, IV. 45

Schomberg, Charles D. of, commands the horse at the battle of the Boyne, III. 136. at the siege of Limerick, 148. goes to Turin, 185. and retrieves the D. of Savoy's affairs, that were in a desperate condition, ibid. publishes a declaration, 215. is wounded at the battle of Marjoglio, and dies, 242

Schomberg, Maynard D. of, made Privy-Councillor, III. 281. commands the land-forces sent to Spain, 626. Velt-Marshall General of the Portuguese forces, 666. some disputes between him and the Portuguese Generals and Ministers, 665. insists that the auxiliaries may keep in a body, 666. Captain-General of the Queen of Great-Britain's forces in Portugal, ibid. publishes a proclamation about the Irish, ibid. refuses his command, 667. made a Privy-Councillor, IV. 68

Schut, Baron, in the House of Lords, IV. 349. demands a writ for the Elector of Hanover, as D. of Cambridge, 351. forbid the Court, ibid.

Schulenberg, a Protestant, General of the Venetian army, IV. 502, 503

Scot, Dr John, his account of Lord Chancellor Tyffert, III. 96

Scotland's the English Common-Prayer and Discipline attempted to be introduced there, III. 4. a Convention meets there, 64. the Throne declared vacant, 70. K. William and Q. Mary proclaimed there, 72. a faction springs up in the Parliament, 75. an insurrection headed by Dundee, 76. the establishing Presbyterianism there casts a great load on K. William, 105. the Rebels there under

Colonel Cannon retire to the Isle of Mull, and the Highlanders renew their incursions, 121. many that had been concerned in the plot there take out pardons, 181. and are put into the chief posts in the Government, 194. many in the Ministry there enemies to the King and Government, 245. letters intercepted between Scotland and France, ibid. proceedings of the Parliament of that Kingdom, ibid. and 281. disgusted about recalling the act for their East-India Company, 308 and 380. great discontent there upon the loss of the Settlement at Darien, 393, 406, 407. petition drawn up there for a Parliament, 406. a Session of Parliament there, ibid. bill for uniting England and Scotland, ibid. K. William's letter concerning that Union, 504, 505. bill for the Union, 550. Q. Anne's letter to the Privy-Council there, 554. affairs begin to be imbroiled in that Kingdom, ibid. Q. Anne takes the Coronation-oath for that Kingdom, ibid. at her accession, the Government was in the hands of persons entirely of Revolution principles, 555. struggle there about the fitting of the Parliament, ibid. alterations in the Ministry there, 595. a new Parliament chosen, ibid. its proceedings, 596. an indemnity proclaimed, ibid. act for the security of that Kingdom, 600. another for the Succession, 603. the disorders in that Kingdom rise to a great height, 604. a plot there discovered, 629, 648. Settlement made there by K. Charles I. 648. treaty between that Kingdom and England demanded, 650. a new Commission there made up entirely of Scots Revolutioners, 653. the L. Haversham's speech about the proceedings in that Kingdom, 673, &c. debate in the House of Lords thereupon, 674, &c. bill for a Union, 676. the Commons bring in a bill for preventing the dangers that might arise from some acts passed in Scotland, ibid. &c. change in the Ministry of that Kingdom, 689. three parties there, 690. proceedings for the Union with England, ibid. &c. Commissioners appointed for it, 736. the Pretender's interest promoted there, 766. the Cavaliers resolve to oppose the ratification of the Union, 768. debates in the Parliament there about it, 771. tumults there to defeat the Union, 774. completed at last, 777. land-tax there, 785. frauds designed by the Merchants with regard to goods imported into Scotland, 789. a Commission for a new Council sent into Scotland, 791. two different parties formed in that Kingdom, ibid. the affairs relating to it neglected, IV. 33, &c. the act for the security of that Kingdom, and about peace and war, repealed, 43. debates in the Committee of the House of Lords, about the bill for rendering the Union of that Kingdom with England more entire, 54, &c. Justices of Peace and an Exchequer settled in that Kingdom, 55. account of the Pretender's descent into Scotland, 56. Privy-Council of Scotland dissolved, 67. the Peers of Scotland's eldest sons incapacitated to sit in Parliament, 108. debates about the election of the sixteen Peers, 109. bill concerning trials for treason there, 114, &c. bill for a toleration of the English Clergy there, 243. the Kirk presents a remonstrance against it, ibid. act for discharging the Tule Vacance, and for restoring patronages, 244. the interest of the Pretender promoted there, 329. three or four thousand pounds a year remitted to the Highland Clans, 345, 349, 350. disaffected with the Union, and considered itself as degraded to a province of England, 402, 403. addresses set on foot there for dissolving the Union, 412. endeavours used there for a remonstrance against it, 416. some Members of the General Assembly of the Church there had instructions to move for an address against the Toleration of the Episcopal Preachers, and against Lay-patronages, 422. the designs of the Jacobites carried on there with secrecy and order, 433. act for encouraging loyalty there, 436. some ships land there from France, with officers, arms, &c. 437. several Peers there shew their loyalty to K. George, 438. some villages burnt by the Pretender's order, 467. motion for offering a general pardon to those that were still in arms in Scotland, 484. a few Spaniards land there, 584. some suspected persons secured there, 660. commotions there occasioned by some Levellers, 682. riots there about the malt-tax, 687

Scots; resolutions for declaring them Aliens, III. 676. proceedings against that, 695, &c. the act which declared them aliens, repealed, 723, &c. oppose the malt-tax, and are very uneasy, IV. 316. move for an act for dissolving the Union, ibid. motion for investing the revenues of the Bishops in the Queen, 360. begin to shew their discontent, 403. See Scotland and Rebels.

Scots Highlanders appear in arms, IV. 403
Scottish East-India Company, III. 283, 308, 380. account of its settlement at Darien, 392, &c.

Scottish Lords in London, K. William's speech to them, III. 62. their proceedings thereupon, 63. desire his Majesty to take upon him the administration of affairs in Scotland, ibid. another speech of K. William to them, 63, 64

Scottish Peers serviceable to the Ministry, IV. 226. very uneasy at D. Hamilton's patent being disallowed, 229. their representation thereupon, 230. the Queen's message to the House of Lords about it, 238. debates upon that point, ibid. they are promised and obtain satisfaction, 239. resolutions about them, in the intended Peerage-bill, 586

Screw-Plot, IV. 194

Seabright murdered in France, IV. 676

Seaford, — Lord, Secretary of State for Scotland, III. 382

Seaford, James Ogilvie E. of, made Chancellor of Scotland, III. 595. made Secretary of State, 653. reinstalled Chancellor, 689. was for the Union, 771. chosen one of the sixteen Peers, IV. 64

Seaford, James Finlater E. of, sworn a Privy-Councillor, IV. 105

Seal, the Great, thrown by K. James II. into the Thames, III. 22. put in Commission, IV. 191

Scamen; regulations about them, III. 732. more employed than provided for by Parliament, IV. 654

Seckendorf, Count, reduces the Island of Lipara, IV. 591. and Sacca, 600. wounded, 603

Security, act of, in Scotland, III. 651, 652

Septennial Parliament; act for them, IV. 490. petitions against it, 495. passed, ibid.

Serpa taken by the Spaniards, IV. 12

Settlement, act of, in Ireland repealed, III. 86

Seville, treaty of, IV. 711

Seymour, Sir Edward, proposes an association, III. 22. is against the validity of the Convention, 42. presents an address against Ludlow, 120. made a Privy-Councillor and Commissioner of the Treasury, 190. his character, ibid. at the head of the opposition to the Court, 237. bribed by the East-India Company, 270, 276. dissuades the King from putting out a proclamation for coin to be received by weight and not by tale, 274. opposes the Association, 321. is against the bill for attaining Sir John Fenwick, 343. discovers to the Parliament the practices of the new East-India Company, 439. reflects severely on the Partition-treaty, 451, 452. tampers with Kidd, 458. his opinion of Melfort's letter, 474. his character, 509. made a Privy-Councillor, and Comptroller of the Household, 545. lays Q. Anne's Convention for declaring war against France before the Commons, ibid. treats the Scots with great scorn, 550. his account as Treasurer of the Navy, 585. moves for leave to bring in a bill to resume all the grants made in K. William's Reign, 587. his youngest son, Francis Seymour Conway, made Baron Conway, 588. Sir Edward is against the Place-bill, 587, 588. dismissed from his place of Comptroller, 647. his death and character, IV. 66

Shadwell, Dr, gives the D. of Sbrewsbury an account of Q. Anne's ill state of health, IV. 332, 336, 346. attends her in her last illness, 368, &c.

Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper, Earl of, author of the Characteristics, his speech for allowing Council to State Prisoners, III. 304

Shaits,

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Shales, John, Purveyor of the army in Ireland, III. 99. his misconduct, is ordered to be removed, and had been Purveyor to King James's army, 115.

Sharp, John, appointed to review the Liturgy, III. 106. made Archbishop of York, 173. preaches Q. Anne's Coronation-Sermon, and is her chief Counsellor, 544. made a Privy-Counsellor, 590. his speech about the Occasional Conformity-Bill, 673. and about the increase of Dissenters, 726. speak to Q. Anne in behalf of the French Protestants, IV. 329. dies, 338.

Shepherd, James, forms a design upon K. George's life, IV. 555. executed, 556.

Sheriffs of London; dispute at the election of them, IV. 67.

Sherlock, Dr William, takes the oaths, III. 172. made Dean of St Paul's, 173. writes about the Trinity, 520. one of the Committee to examine Bishop Hoadley's books, IV. 536. writes against him, 538, &c. removed from being the King's Chaplain, 539.

Sherard, Bennet, Lord, created Baron of Harborough, IV. 407.

Ship-Money, III. 4. abolished, 6.

Shippin, William, one of the Commissioners for examining public accounts, IV. 232. moves to examine the debts of the army, 313. his speech about the arrears due to the Hanover troops, and about the reward for apprehending the Pretender, 397. about the bill for regulating the forces, 425. in favour of the Earl of Oxford, 435. about the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, 482. in behalf of the condemned Lords, 486. upon the Septennial bill, 494. about supply, 521. about an address, 526. upon the Earl of Oxford's impeachment, 542. about the King's speech, for which he is sent to the Tower, 553. about the repeal of the Schilm-Bill, 581. moves for an addition in an address, 629. a speech of his gravels Secretary Craggs, 632. Mr Pulteney calls him a traitor, 671.

Shovel, Cloudiffe, knighted, III. 92. takes the only frigate K. James had left, 134. subscribes an address to Q. Mary, 201. made one of the Commanders of the fleet, 237. bombards Calais, 326. ordered to lay the copies of his papers before the House of Commons, 349. has a regiment of Marines given him, 359. sent to assist in destroying the fleet at Figo, 570, &c. his letter about the engagement near Malaga, 665. made Rear-Admiral of England, and Commander in chief of the fleet, 678. some letters from the Prince of Hesse to him, 709, &c. commands the fleet that was to invade France, 761. and at the attempt upon Toulon, IV. 25. chagrined at the miscarriage of that expedition, upon which he had set his heart, 28. cast away on the Bishop and Clerk, 29. account of him, and his character, ibid. a letter of his, 27.

Sbretbury, Charles Talbot, E. of, made Secretary of State, III. 40. his character, ibid. prefiles the Abjuration Bill, 131. retires from Court, ibid. designs to impeach the Marquis of Caermarthen, 162. brings in the bill for the frequent calling and meeting of Parliaments, 231. opposes the Court, ibid. made again Secretary of State, 252. created a Duke, ibid. made one of the Lords-Justices, 280. practices of Mr Smith against him, 347. his letter about it, 348. Secretary Fernon communicates to him the King's letter, 383. hurt by a fall from his horse, and resigns the place of Secretary of State, but is made Lord Chamberlain, and goes to Italy, 392. concerned in Kidd's affair, 396. refuses the place of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 402. resigns the place of Chamberlain, 409. taken again into the Ministry, IV. 163. votes in favour of Dr Sacheverell, 187. made Lord-Chamberlain, ibid. a secret management between him and Mr Harley, ibid. sent Ambassador to France, though Lord Bolingbroke was against it, 300. part of his instructions, 303. Lord Bolingbroke's letters to him, 304. made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 328. encourages the Protestant Interest there, 330. his speech to the Parliament there, ibid. returns to England, 333. is against extending the Schilm-Bill to Ireland, 363. does not join either of the contending parties, 364, 367. made Lord-Treasurer, 369. received with great favour by K. George, 402. his speech about the address to K. George, 417. against the Septennial Bill, 493.

Shute, Barrington, his speech in vindication of K. George's Government, IV. 524.

Sicily; the Imperialists design the conquest of that Island, IV. 25. offer of giving it to the D. of Savoy, 294, 301. yielded to him, 339, 392. project for exchanging it for Sardinia, 504. given to the Emperor, 549, 563. the K. of Spain makes great preparations for the recovery of it, 562. retaken by the English and Imperialists, 590. the Emperor sends more troops thither, 596. evacuated by the Spaniards, 600, 603.

Sidney, Henry, afterwards Earl of Romney, made Gentleman of the Bedchamber, III. 39. his character, ibid.

Sidney, Henry, Lord Viscount, made one of the Lords-Justices of Ireland, III. 150. one of the Secretaries of State, and Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 193. was thought partial, 247. recalled, and made Master of the Ordnance, ibid. and Colonel of the first Regiment of foot-guards, 252.

Silesia; the Protestants in that country have their Churches restored to them, IV. 18. but they receive no benefit from Q. Anne's Interposition in their favour, 101. the Imperial Court refuses to grant the inhabitants the exercise of the Protestant Religion, 184, &c. Loan to the Emperor of the revenues of that Province, 237.

Silk-Weavers petition against the bill for wearing woollen manufactures, III. 98.

Silk Trade, very advantageous to England, IV. 315.

Sinking-Fund constituted, IV. 535, &c. 707, 708.

Smalridge, George, made Dean of Christ-Church, IV. 325. refuses the Bishoprick of Bristol, 335. accepts of it, and is made Lord Almoner, 338. votes against the Court, 352. votes in favour of the Earl of Oxford, 431. refuses to sign a declaration testifying an abhorrence of the rebellion, 452. removed from the office of Lord Almoner, ibid. is a against the Universities addressing K. George, 516, 517. his speech in the debate about repealing the Schilm-Bill, 580.

Small-Pox inoculated, IV. 680.

Smith, John, Chancellor of the Exchequer, III. 394. chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, 717, and IV. 39. made Under-Treasurer, Chancellor of the Exchequer and a Privy-Counsellor, 68. his speeches at Sacheverell's trial, 153. is one of the managers, ibid. made a Teller of the Exchequer, 191. his speech about the peace, 319. in behalf of the Whig Ministry, 321.

Smyrna fleets comes in safe, III. 182. another damaged, 242, 249.

Snape, Dr, debate in the House of Commons, about his preaching on the 29th of May, IV. 536. publishes an answer to Bishop Hoadley's sermon, ibid. and a second letter to him, 358. removed from being the King's Chaplain, 359.

Sobieski, John, King of Poland dies, III. 331. his character, 355.

Society for Reformation of Manners, III. 374. for propagating the Gospel in foreign parts, 375.

Scandinavians publish books, III. 238.

Soldiers; exactions of their Colonels and Agents upon them, III. 268, &c.

Solmes, Count, at the siege of Limerick, III. 148, 149. the command of the army in Ireland left with him, 150. his ill conduct at the battle of Steenkirk, 208. taken notice of for the same in the House of Commons, 223. killed at the battle of Landen, 240.

Somerset, Charles Seymour, Duke of, refuses to attend on the Pope's Nuncio, III. 19. is for declaring war against France, 545. made Master of the Horse, 572. has a meeting with some of the eminent Members of the House of Commons, IV. 37. refuses to proceed to business in the Privy-Council, after the D. of Marlborough was gone, 56. offers the Bank a sum of money, 61. alienates Q. Anne's mind from her old ministry, 192. Master of the Horse, and refuses to fit any more in Council, ibid. his Duchesse made Groom of the Stole, and Mistress of the Robes, 296. a consultation about removing him, 234. removed, ibid. Pamphlets against him, 235. made Master of the Horse, and one of the Privy-Council, 404. offers to be Sir William Windham's bail, and is removed from his place of Master of the Horse, 440. moves for the Peerage-Bill, 585.

Sommers, John, made Solicitor-General, III. 41. draws up the proclamation of war against France, 90. distinguishes himself in the House of Commons, 130. made Attorney-General, 193. and Lord-Keeper, 237. his character, ibid. his proposal for preventing clipping, 277. made one of the Lords Justices, 280. made Lord Chancellor, and Baron of Eversham, 350. writes for a standing army, 365. his good conduct, 377, &c. K. William communicates to him the Partition-Treaty, 383. two letters of his, ibid. and 387. concerned in Kidd's affair, 396. attempts to displace him, 401. the Tories endeavour to remove him, 403. his argument in the bankers case, ibid. &c. the King demands the Great-Seal of him, 404. he delivers it up, 406. his character, ibid. he is blackened about Kidd's affair, 458. debate concerning him in the House of Commons, 458, &c. gives that House a particular account of the Partition-Treaty, 459. impeached by the Commons, ibid. their address against him, 460. articles against him, with his answers, 462. acquitted, 469. his advice about the conquests in the West-Indies, 487. a tract of his, 488. had a hand in K. William's last speech, 498. who was the author of his disgrace, 509. left out of the Privy-Council, 545. is against the Occasional Conformity Bill, 581. draws up the Lords address, 639. his answer to the Earl of Nottingham about the Partition-Treaty, 675. his speech in the debate about the danger of the Church, 727. moves for a bill to correct some of the proceedings in the Common-Law and Chancery, 731. and for discouraging the great number of private acts, ibid. had the chief hand in promoting the Union between England and Scotland, 740. speaks in behalf of the Union, 781, 786. his speech about the state of the nation, IV. 40. made President of the Council, 105. supports the Dukes of Hamilton, Montrose, and Roxburgh, 110. moves for an amendment of the act of Treasons, 116. moves for an address for demolishing Dunkirk, 117. removed from the place of President of the Council, 191. received with great favour by K. George, 402. dies, 496.

Sophia, Princess, put into the Succession of the Crown, III. 55. See Succession. her name ordered to be put into the public Prayers, 550. a motion for bringing her over to live in England, 679, &c. 719. writes a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury intimating her readiness to come over, 722. acts for naturalizing her, 724. called an unbaptized Lutheran, 725. Q. Anne's letter to her, IV. 357. her death and character, 358, &c.

Sophia, Dorothy, wife of King George I. dies, IV. 712.

South-Sea Trade and Company, IV. 204, 205. Stock, 329. Company, 339, 366. debts due to them from the Government, 531. K. George chosen Governor, 557. present their scheme to the Government, 610.

South-Sea Scheme, ibid. acts for increasing their capital stock, 612. whence that scheme took its rise, 619, &c. the stock falls, 620. account of the proceedings of the Directors, 620, &c. they make some secret advances towards an union with the East-India Company, 624. a Committee of them, meet a Committee of the Bank, and draw up the Bank Contract, 625. Proceedings of the Commons in the South-Sea affair, 630. Mr Walpole's scheme for ingrafting one million of South-Sea Stock, into the Bank of England, 631. Bill to restrain the Sub-Governor, &c. from going out of the Kingdom, 632. the Directors removed from all places in the Government, 633. reports of the Committee of Secrecy about them, 636, &c. allowance to the Directors out of their own estates, 641, &c. resolutions of the Commons in favour of the sufferers by the South-Sea Scheme, 642. what the Capital Stock of the Company was at the year 1720, 645. Petitions and Pamphlets against the Directors, ibid. &c. General Court of

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

of the Company, 646, 672. acts to enable the South-Sea Company to dispose of the effects in their hands, 656. and for hearing claims upon the estates of the South-Sea Directors, ibid. two millions of their stock transferred to the Bank, and two millions of their stock revived, 672.
Southwell, Thomas, created Viscount Southwell, IV. 548.
Sout-Lewis attacked and taken by the Allies, III. 702. a description of that place, ibid.

Spain accepts the neutrality of Italy, III. 331. K. of Spain dangerously ill, 382, 384. intrigues of the Court of France, to secure the Crown of Spain, 384. sends a memorial against the Settlement at Darien, 393. the Succession to that Kingdom secured by the French, 407, 408. that Court offended at the Partition-Treaty, 413, 416. great want of money there, 484. K. Charles II. of Spain makes a will in favour of the Emperor's second son, 416. and another in favour of the D. of Anjou, 418. dies, 425. his will is accepted by the Court of France, 427. war declared against Spain, 546. their Settlements in America plundered by the English, 594. Spain invaded by the Portuguese and their Allies, 705. the Spaniards invade Portugal, and take several towns, 667. besiege Gibraltar in vain, ibid. &c. 705. debate in the House of Lords about the affairs of Spain, IV. 45. they address the Queen for the restitution of it to the House of Austria, 46. an inquiry begun in both Houses about the affairs of Spain, 53. the service of the English there is denied, 54. campaigns there, 93, & 141. the French offer to give Spain to K. Charles, 121, 163, &c. K. Philip gets his son, the Prince of Asturias, acknowledged heir of that Monarchy, 129. publishes a manifesto against all that should be done at the Hague to his prejudice, 145. heads his army, 176. the Spaniards defeated at the battle of Almaraz, ibid. &c. and at Saragosa, 178. and at Villaviciosa, 181. the prosecution of the war there a favourite project, 195. conduct of affairs there taken into consideration by the Parliament, 196. campaign there, 212. the Emperor demands Spain, 250. English forces there called home, 296. peace between that Kingdom and England signed, 337. proclaimed, 339. debates about it, 352. the Spanish trade examined by the Lords, 365. the K. of Spain pretends to have numberless complaints against the Emperor, 504. ready to contend for the Crown of France, ibid. offended at the alliance between England and the Duke of Orleans, 505. great preparations made in Spain, 548. a great fleet fitted out to recover Sicily, 562. that fleet destroyed by the English, 568. the English Merchants in Spain secure their best effects, 567. are ill used, 570. several grievances upon them, 574. war declared by England against Spain, 581. and by France, 582. the Spanish Squadron fails from Cadiz for England, 583. Spain accedes to the Quadruple-alliance, 600, 605. makes overtures for a peace, 605. peace and alliance between Great-Britain and Spain, 649. taken into consideration in the House of Lords, 654. two treaties between Spain and the Emperor, 689. private treaty between them, 690. makes great preparations for war, 698, &c. the Spaniards cavil about the preliminaries, 710.

Spanheim, Baron, Ambassador from the K. of Prussia, III. 678. demands a reparation for the arrest of the Russian Ambassador, IV. 103. See also p. 117.
Sparta, Baron, in a plot to set the Pretender on the English Throne, IV. 506. extracts of his letters, 509, &c.
Spirbach, battle of, III. 622.
Spires burnt by the French, III. 103.
Sprat, Thomas, Bishop of Rochester, refuses to sign the Association, III. 322. did not think a Bishop could be deprived by the Archbishop, 523. his character, 529. his death and character, IV. 325.
Squadrons, or flying Squadrons in Scotland, III. 690. promoted the Union, 771. few of them are chosen Representatives in Parliament, 778. were against allowing some unreasonable debts, ibid.

Squadrons, three fitted out, IV. 697.
Stage; liberty of it scandalous, III. 391.
Stair, Lord, Secretary for Scotland, his letter about the Glencoe affair, III. 284. dismissed from his office, 285.
Stair, John Dalrymple Viscount, created an Earl, III. 604. heartily concurs in the Union, 737. was for the Union, 771. dies, 777.

Stair, John Dalrymple E. of, detached to provide corn for the army, IV. 87. ordered to sell his regiment, 346. sent Ambassador to France, 407. made one of the Lords of the Bed-chamber, ibid. sent Ambassador to Paris, 415. has several Conferences with Marquis de Torcy about Mardyke, ibid. chosen one of the sixteen Peers of Scotland, ibid. presents two memorials to the Court of France concerning the Pretender, 474.

Stamford, Thomas Grey E. of, made Commissioner of Trade, III. 792. his speech about the State of the Nation, IV. 40.

Standards taken at Ramillies carried to Guild-Hall, III. 780.

Standing Army; papers for and against it, III. 365. debates about one, IV. 552.

Stanhope Alexander, his proceedings at the Court of Madrid, III. 411, &c. 413. and at the Hague, 419, &c. 427, 433. his proposals to the Court of France for securing the Netherlands, 446. Ambassador to Holland, 541. his memorial to the States, 578.

Stanhope, James, made Secretary of State, IV. 404. lays before the House of Commons the papers relating to the late negotiations of peace and commerce, 420. supplies R. Walpole's place as Chairman of the Committee of Secrecy, 421. impeaches the D. of Ormond of treason, 428. his letter to the Vice-Chancellor and Mayor of Oxford, 442. communicates to the Privy-Council the informations the King had received of a Conspiracy, 506. he and Mr Melbuen write a circular letter upon the seizing of Count Gyllenborg, 507. made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 525. a quarrel had like to arise between him and R. Walpole, 534. created Baron Elvaston, and Viscount Mahon, 548. sent Ambassador to Spain, 549. made one of the Secretaries of State, and created an Earl, 562. delivers articles to the Court of Madrid, 574. gives the House of Lords an account of the treaties lately concluded, 576. moves for the repeal of the Test-act, 578. his answer to the Czar's memorial, 616. dies, 635.

Stanhope, Brigadier and afterwards General, taken prisoner with his regiment, III. 667. at the siege of Barcelona, 768. and at the taking of Montjuic fort, 709, &c. offers to furnish K. Charles with what he wanted, 754. Envoy Extraordinary to the K. of Spain, 763. had orders to go and seek the enemy, IV. 4. concludes a treaty of commerce with K. Charles, XII. frames a bill about the vassalage of the Clans in Scotland, 58. Commander in Chief of the Queen's forces in Spain, 94. forms the design of conquering Minorca, which he accomplishes, 95, &c. is for the bill for limiting the number of officers, 162. is surprized at Brihuega, 181. endeavours an exchange of prisoners, but continues confined to the end of the war, 213. writes against the treaty of commerce, 315. had a hand in the British Merchant, 316. moves for an address to the Queen, to press the D. of Lorraine to remove the Pretender out of his Dominions, 323. speaks in R. Steele's behalf, 343. endeavours to secure the Protestant Succession, 347. maintains that it was in danger, 354. speaks against the Schism-bill, 360, 363. dines with L. Bolingbroke, 368. receives particular marks of favour from K. George, 402. one of the Cabinet-Council, 404.

Stanhope, Colonel, the present E. of Harlington, Envoy Extraordinary to Madrid, IV. 566. causes several fires in the ports of Biscay to be destroyed, 570. presents several memorials to the Court of Spain, 581. Ambassador at Madrid, 691. the D. of Ripperda flies to his house for shelter, 698. his memorial upon that Duke's being taken by force out of his house, 699. leaves Madrid, 709.

Stanhope, Charles, great quantities of South-Sea stock given him, IV. 637. his name erased in the book, ibid. and 640. his case taken into consideration by the House of Commons, 639. made Treasurer of the Chamber, 649.

Stanian, Abraham, Envoy Extraordinary to the Protestant Cantons, promotes the K. of Prussia's interest to the Principality of Nimshchotel, IV. 31.

Stanislaus Leszinski chosen K. of Poland, III. 669. crowned, 715. acknowledged K. of Poland, 763. forced to fly into Saxony, IV. 15. introduced to the D. of Mariborough, 16.

Staremburg, Guido de, commands the infantry at the battle of Luzzara, III. 567. his remarkable march, 623.

Staremburg, Count, sent to Spain, IV. 46. appointed Commander in Chief there, 93. the best General of the age for the defensive, 97. commands in Spain, 213. Torcy desires that Q. Anne should put a stop to his projects, 287.

States of Holland, their charges for K. William's expedition into England repaid, III. 54. 600,000 l. granted them, 98. treaties with them, 91, 102. their memorial upon Lewis the XIV's accepting of the K. of Spain's will, 429. pressed hard by him to declare themselves, 431. their memorial laid before the Parliament, 440. the French King's answer to them, 453. they refuse to treat but in conjunction with England, 454. their answer to K. William's speech, 481. and to the French King's memorial, 482. augment their army, and regard their fortifications, 484. alliance between them, Great-Britain, and Denmark, ibid. and between them, Great-Britain, and the Emperor, 487. in great conformation upon K. William's death, 540. Q. Anne's letter to them, 541. publish an answer to de Barre's memorial, 542. declare war against France, 546. conclude a treaty with Portugal, 624. some of the States were against sending an army to the Mojelle, 654. their Deputies do not consent, that the D. of Mariborough should attack the enemy in their posts, 702. the D. of Bavaria makes proposals to them for holding Conferences for a peace, 763. their Deputies have a Conference thereupon with the Ministers of the Allies, ibid. treaty between England and K. Charles how communicated to them, IV. 13. their memorial against the conquest of Naples, 22. give Q. Anne intelligence of the preparations made at Dunkirk for the Pretender, and concert measures for assisting her, 56. the Court of France makes proposals of peace to them, but the D. of Mariborough convinces them of the treacherous designs of that Court, 121. resolve to enter into no separate treaty, 122, &c. their resolution about Petkum's journey to France, and the paper he brought from thence, 147. do not approve of the offers of peace made by France, 164, &c. desire to have the D. of Mariborough sent over, 164. interpose in favour of that Duke, 190. their Deputies propose to hazard a battle with the French, 211. were against the siege of Bouchain, ibid. will not agree that Queigny should be besieged, 212. alarmed at the preliminaries of peace signed by the English, 224. the Emperor's letter to them, 225. the Imperial Plenipotentiaries present a memorial to them, ibid. were against opening a Congress, 226. barrier-treaty concluded with them, 240. the Commons pass several votes injurious to them, 242. write a letter to the Queen about the Barrier-Treaty, ibid. publish a memorial against the Commons representation, ibid. &c. their Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, 247. Q. Anne consents that they should have Dendermond and Ghent, 253. give Prince Eugene the supreme command of their army, 254. jealous of the English, 255. memorial of their Deputies upon the D. of Ormond's refusing to fight, 258. expostulate with Bishop Robinson upon it, 260. write a letter to the Queen upon that subject, ibid. and 269. the resolutions of the Commons about that letter, 272. resolve to entertain the auxiliaries in British pay, 274. assemble on the D. of Ormond's declaration about a cessation, 275. have a Conference with the E. of Stratford and Bp Robinson, but will not agree to a cessation, 277, 287, 290. take upon themselves the payment of most of the auxiliaries in British pay, 287. propose a new scheme of a peace, 295. the E. of Stafford proposes to them a new plan, which they except of, 300, &c. they write a letter to Q. Anne, 302. her answer to it, 305, 306. their Plenipotentiaries sign the treaty of Utrecht, 311. the answer of the States to the E. of Stafford, concerning the conferences at Radstadt, 337. conclude a treaty with the Elector of Hanover, 347. called upon to be ready to perform the guarantee of the Protestant Succession, 370. their letter to Q. Anne, June 5, 1712, 387. their answer to Klingrafe's memorial, 399. K. George thanks them for it, 400. a treaty concluded between them, K. George, and the D. of Orleans, 505. suspend their consent to the Quadruple Alliance, 564. accede to it, 565. K. George demands of them two thousand men upon the rumour of an invasion, which they fend, 583, 584. mediators of peace between Spain, &c. but K. George and the Emperor will not accept their mediation, 604. the Spanish Ambassador delivers to them a plan of peace, 605. accede to the treaty of Hanover, 699.

Steele, Richard, his reflections about Dunkirk, IV. 327. is chosen a Burgess for Stockbridge, and resigns his place of one of the Commissioners of the Stamp-duty, 335. publishes the Crisis, ibid. reflected upon in the Public Spirit of the Whigs, 340, &c. obnoxious to the Ministry, and complained of in the House of Commons, 342. his motion about Dunkirk, 343. his trial in the House of Commons, ibid. expelled, 345. offers a petition in behalf of the condemned Lords, 486.

Steenkirk, battle of, III. 208

Stetin given up to Prussia, IV. 615

Stevens, William, prosecuted for a pamphlet, III. 793

Stillingfleet, Edward, made Bp of Worcester, III. 105. talked of for the See of Canterbury, 260

Strum, Count, defeats the Bavarians, and takes Newmark and Amberg, III. 616. attacks and defeats the Marquis d'Offon, 621. mortally wounded at the battle of Schellenberg, 655

Storm; the dreadful one in 1703, III. 625

Stromont, Lord Viscount, letters sent to him by the Pretender, III. 768. brought prisoner to London, IV. 65

Strafford, Thomas Wentworth Lord Raby, created Viscount and E. of Stafford, and sent Ambassador to Holland, IV. 219. Mr St John communicates to him France's proposals of peace, ibid. his instructions communicated to the French Minister by Mr St John, 223. communicates the preliminaries of peace to the States, 224. is appointed Plenipotentiary for the peace of Utrecht, ibid. his letter to Captain Desborough relating to Prince Eugene, 236. comes to Utrecht, 247. his speeches at the Congress there, 248. is sent for to England, 253. goes to the Hague, and presses the States to come into the Queen's measures, 255. declares her intentions, and has a conference with Prince Eugene, ibid. his speech in Parliament about the negotiations at Gertrudenberg, 262. and on the plan of peace, 269. sent to the Hague to induce the States to accept the offers of France, 277. insists that the States should withdraw their forces from Spain and Portugal, ibid. goes to the D. of Ormond's army, 378. goes incognito to the French camp, to concert measures with Marshal Villars, 282. makes himself obnoxious to the Dutch by his haughty carriage, 290. the mob break his windows, and set up a wheel before his house, ibid. his letter to Mr Prior, 291. refuses to sign the treaty of Utrecht, without the cession of Tournoy to the States, 293. comes to England, 295. various conjectures about his coming, ibid. returns to Holland, 300. proposes a new plan of peace to the States, ibid. &c. goes incognito to Amsterdam, and has several conferences with the leading Magistrates, 301. scruples to sign a separate peace, 309. signs it at last, 310. infallible Knight of the Garter, 328. speaks to the Deputies of the States about the conferences of Radstadt, 337. and about the barrier in the Netherlands, 338. was First Commissioner of the Admiralty, 394. notifies to the States the Queen's death, and the accession of K. George to the Throne, 399. accompanies the Princes of Wales to Rotterdam, 406. returns to England, and has his papers seized, 415. is impeached, 429. the articles against him carried up to the House of Lords, 434. his speech in the debate about the Mutiny-bill, 557, 558. about an address, 576

Strasbourg; the French offer to restore that place, IV. 126, 129, 163. was to be restored to the Emperor, 302, 310

Strickland, Sir William, proposes to attain the E. of Oxford, IV. 545

Stuart Family, descended from King Robert II, by his concubine Elizabeth Mure, III. 2

Subsidy to Sweden, IV. 647

Succession in the House of Hanover; K. William's speech about it, III. 438. address of the Lords thereupon, 441. the first vote about it, 442. heads of the bill of Succession, 443. that bill passed, 445. protested against by the Dukes of Savoy, ibid. a clause in a bill making it high-treason to endeavour to defeat the Succession, 583. the same enacted in Ireland, 610. declared in Scotland, 648. debates about it, 650, 689, &c. address of thanks from the Commons about the Succession, 719

Sugar Islands belonging to the English ravaged by the French, IV. 293

Sunderland, Robert Spencer E. of, embraces Popery, III. 20. persuades K. James to use gentle methods, ibid. advises him not to accept an army offered him by the French King, 21. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132. gains credit with K. William, 237. is the cause of L. Sommers and Sir John Trenchard's promotion, ibid. is a great confidant of the King, and persuades him to change his Ministry, 252. brings about a reconciliation between the King and Prince Anne, 263. was for the Land-Bank, 322. made Lord Chamberlain, and Privy-Counsellor, 350. resigns his places and retires from business, 368. his wife Administration, ibid. his order against Play-houses, 391. sent Envoy extraordinary to the Emperor Joseph, 704, 705. made Secretary of State, but against Queen Anne's will, 702, 793. some of his letters to the E. of Manchester, about the expedition to Naples, IV. 21, 24. his letter to General Stanhope, 97. supports the Dukes of Hamilton, Montros, and Roxburgh, 110. speaks at Dr Sacheverel's trial, 161. dismissed from his place of Secretary, 163, 189. his removal inserted in the French Gazette, 190. his letters to General Stanhope about the war in Spain, 197, 198, 200. his speech in Parliament about the preliminaries of peace, 228. his Countess resigns her place of Lady of the Bed-chamber, 234. his speech about the Union, 318. moves for a second address about removing the Pretender out of Lorraine, 323, 348. his speech about the Catalans, 347. and on the Schism-bill, 362. received with great favour by K. George, 402. made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 404. insulses jealousies in the King of the L. Townshend, and R. Walpole, 503. appointed sole Treasurer of Ireland, 504

Sunderland, Charles Spencer E. of, made Secretary of State, IV. 525. appointed President of the Council, and First Commissioner of the Treasury, 562. was against repealing the Test, 578. had promoted the difference in the Royal Family, 609. stock given him, 637. the House of Commons take that affair into consideration, 640, &c. resigns the place of First Commissioner of the Treasury, 641. his death and character, 657

Supplies granted for the war, III. 92. a supply of two millions voted, 112. of four millions, 160. of above three millions for the fleet and army, 190, &c. of above five millions, 226, &c. 231. of five millions and a half, 249. of almost five millions, 259. of above seven millions for the year 1709, IV. 108

Surman, Robert, Deputy-Cashier of the South-Sea, examined by the Lords, IV. 633. his papers seized, and himself ordered to be taken into custody, 634. the allowance made him, 643, 644

Suspension of arms between England and France, IV. 265. articles for it signed, 266. another suspension proclaimed at Paris, 687.

Sutherland, John Sutherland E. of, elected one of the sixteen Peers of Scotland, IV. 415. his speech in Parliament, 431. shews his zeal against the Rebellion, 438. advances to attack the E. of Seaford, 418. the Marquis of Huntly, and the E. of Seaford capitulate with him, 468

Suza taken, III. 154

Sweden, Charles XI. and XII. King of, III. 352. alliance between Sweden and France, 385. a league formed against K. Charles XII. 410. peace between him and Denmark, 411. makes a descent in Zealand, ibid. defeats the Muskovites at Narva, 438. routs the Poles and becomes master of their camp, 486. See Charles XII. attacked by the Czar, IV. 183. a manifesto published there against Denmark, 184. the Swedes land in Rügen, 214. defeat the Danes, 308, &c. enter Mecklenburg, ibid. are defeated, 309. bill to prohibit commerce with Sweden, 519. Treaty between England and that Kingdom, 522. the British ships confiscated there, ibid. supply against Sweden, ibid. and 525. debate in the House of Commons about the trade with Sweden, 561. peace between Sweden and England, and a treaty of alliance, 588. gives up Bremen and Verden to the Elector of Hanover, 614. guarantee the succession to the Crown of Great-Britain, ibid. gives up some places to the King of Prussia, 615. has some restored by Denmark, ibid. subsidy to that Court, 647. peace between Sweden and Muscovy, 650, and 674. accedes to the treaty of Hanover, 699, 795

Swift, Jonathan, account of him, IV. 221. goes over to the Tories, ibid. his Fable of the Widow and her Cat, 240. writes against the Barrier-Treaty, 241. his band-box plot, 297. made Dean of St Patrick's, 325. writes The publick spirit of the Whigs, 340. censured by the Lord-Treasurer, 341, 342. reflected upon, 362. a packet directed to him, seized, for which he absconds, 425. his verses about Wood's half-pence, 676

Sword-Blade Company stop payments, IV. 627

Synods of Glasgow, Air, &c. animate persons of all ranks to the defence of K. George and the Constitution, IV. 448

Syracuse blocked up by the Spaniards, IV. 570. Admiral Bing put in there, ibid.

T.

TAFFE, alias Thomas O Mullen, discovers the Lancashire plotters, III. 265, 266. his character, 266. disguised and turns against the Court, ibid.

Tajniere's, battle of, Blaregnies, or Malplaque, IV. 136, &c.

Talbot, William, made Dean of Worcester, III. 173. Bishop of Oxford; his speech at Dr Sacheverel's trial, IV. 157. translated to Salisbury, 419

Tallard, Count, comes Ambassador from France to England, III. 380. waits upon K. William in Holland, 383. formed a party in England against the Partition-Treaty, 471

Tallard, Marshal de, his presumption at the battle of Hochstet, III. 658. taken prisoner, 659. brought to England, and sent to Nottingham, 677. corresponds with France, IV. 47. obtains leave to go to France, 223

Talmash, Thomas, General, at the siege of Athlone, III. 175. and battle of Aughrim, 178. his resolute behaviour, 179. at the siege of Limerick, 180. made Lieutenant-General of the foot, 195. commands the regiments of foot, that were sent over from Holland, 200. of the Court-Marshal to try Grandvaux, 210. named by the House of Commons as a person fit to command the foot, 223. his bravery at the battle of Landen, 240. wounded at the attempt upon Brest, and dies, 254

Tankerville, Ford Grey, Lord, made Lord Privy-Seal, III. 437

Tarbot, George Mackenzie, Lord, Viscount, made Secretary of State, III. 595. created Earl of Cremarty, 604

Tariff, IV. 295, 302, 303, 307, 314, 320

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

- Tax* on marriages, births, and burials, III. 259
- Temple*, Sir Richard, moves to pay the forces abroad by fending over English manufactures, III. 225. defeats the French guards, and takes their baggage, IV. 72. his regiment attacks a party of French, 82. removed from his command of a regiment of Dragoons, 311. created Baron of Cobham, and appointed Envoy to the Court of Vienna, 407
- Tennison*, Thomas, made Bishop of Lincoln, III. 194. translated to Canterbury, 260. preaches Q. Mary's Funeral Sermon, 264. made one of the Lords-Judices, 280. attends K. William in his last moments, 306. dispute between him and the Lower House of Convocation, about the power of adjourning, 525, &c. his speech in the Convocation, 646. refuses to receive the form of addresses, sent up by the Lower House of Convocation, 733. prorogues the Convocation, 734. brings in a bill for the security of the Church of England, 782. receives two letters from the Queen, ordering him to prorogue the Convocation, 793, 795. a protestation prepared against him by the Convocation, ibid.
- Teffe*, Marshal de, the French King's Ambassador-Extraordinary to the Pope, IV. 100
- Teffe*, Sacramental, K. William endeavours to have it taken away, III. 45, 512. offered in 1673, 519. a letter against it passed to be burnt, by the Commons, IV. 120
- Telf* and Corporation acts, remarks on them made in Parliament, IV. 578, 579
- Thanel*, Thomas Tufton, Earl of, made a Privy-Counsellor, III. 590. his speech in the debates about the Union, 786
- Thaun*, Count, conquers Naples, IV. 22, &c. prepares to march over Mount Cenis, and takes Anunci, 140. takes upon him the command of the Confederates, 175
- Thelfe*, Marshal de, at the siege of Barcelona, III. 752. sent to cover France on the side of Toulon, IV. 4
- Thifflie*, order of the, revived, III. 604
- Thomand*, Henry Obrian, Earl of, created Viscount Tadcaster, IV. 407
- Thomson*, Sir John, created Baron of Harwicham, III. 326, 327
- Thompson*, Sir William, Recorder of London, tries the Rebels, IV. 489. speech for the Septennial-bill, 495. added to the Secret Committee, 541. his speech at the Earl of Oxford's trial, 543. and on the repeal of the schism act, 581. quarrel between him and Mr Lechmere, 610
- Thorn*; account of the persecution there, IV. 682
- Tillofsen*, J. J. J., employed in the review of the Liturgy, III. 107. designed for Prolocutor of the Convocation, but not chosen, 109. made Archbishop of Canterbury, 173. his character, ibid. and 260. dies, ibid. pension granted to his widow, ibid.
- Tilly*, Count, plunders Picardy, IV. 80. becomes Commander in Chief of the Dutch troops, 87. passes the Scheld to relieve Brussels, 89. all the confederate troops are left under his command, 93. at the battle of Malplaquet, 137. at the taking of Doway, 170, &c.
- Tindol*, Dr Matthew, his 'Rights of the Christian Church' burnt, IV. 161
- Tircinnal*, Richard Talbot, Earl of, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, promotes Popery in that Kingdom, III. 77. turns all the Protestant Officers out of the army, and puts Papists in their room, ibid. gives out Commissions for levying thirty thousand men, ibid. uses the Protestants with great severity, 80. made a Duke, ibid. fails from Ireland into France with K. James, 138, 145. his papers taken, and treasonable practices found there, 146. returns to Ireland and goes back to France, 152. returns to Ireland with some provisions, 174. dies in Limerick, 179
- Tythes*; act for the more easy recovery of small tythes, III. 323
- Toland*, John, his Christianity not myftrict censured, III. 527. his Dunkirk or Dover, IV. 327. his Art of restoring, 336. formerly employed by the Lord-Treasurer, ibid. his Reasons and Necessities of the Duke of Cambridge's coming over, 357
- Toleration*; the Presbyterians irreconcilable enemies to it, III. 11. bill of Tolera-
- tion presented to the Parliament, 44. passed, 48. one passed by K. James in Ireland, 88. the Independents for it, and the Presbyterians against it, 515. hated by many of the Clergy, 524
- Torcy*, Marquis de, comes to Holland to negotiate a peace, IV. 120, 123. desires passes for some Ministers from France to Holland, but is refused, 144, 145. writes some letters to the D. of Marlborough, 145, 146. his papers sent by Petkum, 146. sends another project to Petkum for a peace, 163. transmits to England new proposals of peace, 219, 221. his memorial, 252. his answer to Gaultier's memorial, 263. letters between Mr St John about the King of Spain's renunciation, 264, &c. his answer to Lord Bolingbroke's memorial, 303. his letter to d'Iverville, 398. his paper to Mr Prior about the Pretender, 411
- Tongerens* described, III. 618. taken by the French, ibid. they abandon it, ibid.
- Tories*; beginning of that name and party, III. 15. were for passive obedience, &c. 17. did not favour Popery nor Arbitrary Power, ibid. depart from the doctrine of passive obedience, 20. in some respects become Whigs, ibid. join with the Whigs in inviting over the Prince of Orange, 21. adhere to the divine unalienable Hereditary Right of Kings, 25. moderate and rigid Tories, 26. beget in K. William jealousies of the Whigs, 52. displaced, and were against carrying on the war, 252. press hard upon the E. of Sunderland, 368. the old East-India Company falls into their hands, 370. in the Administration, 398. endeavour the removal of Lord Somers and others of the Ministry, 403. send a proposal to K. James to have the Pretender put into the Succession, 421. seem zealous for the bill of Succession, 442, &c. find fault with the Partition-Treaty, 447. are against the Abjuration act, 501. pretend great zeal for the Princess of Denmark, 502. were greatly in Q. Anne's favour, 538. oppose the taking away the first-fruits, and tenths, 642. were for inviting over the Princess Sophia, 719. oppose the act of Regency, 721. are against Pensioners and Place-men sitting in the House of Commons, 722. gain great advantage by Dr Sacheverel's trial, IV. 185. reflect upon the Emperor and the Dutch for interposing in the Duke of Marlborough's favour, 190. a new combination among them, 201. many of them dislike the peace, 273. propose a million for the Civil-List for K. George, 396. afraid of being turned out of their places, 402. were engaged in dangerous practices, ibid. why disliked by K. George, 404. sacrificed to his resentment, and that of the Allies, ibid. pretend that the Pretender's manifesto was a contrivance of the Whigs, 411. publish a circular letter about the election of the sixteen Scotch Peers, 415. about a third part of them in the House of Commons, 1714-15, 419. their debates about the Civil-List, 422. about pensions, 423. and regulating the land-forces, ibid. endeavour to put off the consideration of the report of the Committee of Secrecy, 426
- Torrington*, Arthur Herbert, E. of, accused of treachery and cowardice, at the battle off Beachy-head, III. 139, 141. is sent to the Tower, 142. tried and acquitted, 144. the King is offended at his acquittal, and takes away his Commission, 145
- Torrington*, Edward Herbert, Earl of, his reflections on the E. of Nottingham's account of the conspiracy, III. 638
- Torrington*, Arthur Herbert, Lord, made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, IV. 525
- Torrington*, George Dyng, Lord Viscount, motion for an address to have his instructions laid before the House of Lords, IV. 654
- Toulon*, besieged by the Allies, IV. 21, 25. the siege raised, 26. remarks upon that expedition, 27, &c.
- Toulusse*, Count of, blocks up Barcelona by sea, III. 752. leaves it, ibid.
- Tourney*; a description of that place, IV. 133. besieged, ibid. taken, 134, &c. the French King refuses to ratify the articles for the surrender of the Citadel, 135. it surrenders at last, ibid. the French demand the restitution of it, 291, &c. made part of the barrier, 501
- Tourville*, Monsieur de, ordered by King Louis to seek out and engage the English fleet, III. 201. defeated at la Hogue, ibid. commands the French fleet, 242
- Townshend*, Charles, Lord Viscount, attends the D. of Marlborough to Holland, IV. 121. as Ambassador-Extraordinary, 124. his character, ibid. has a conference with the Dutch Ambassadors, 165, 168. delivers a memorial to the States, 169. makes the Barrier-Treaty with the States, 240, 242. his speeches about the Union, 318. and against the Schism-bill, 362. received with great favour by K. George, 402. made one of the Principal Secretaries of State, 404. his message to the Duke of Lorraine's Minister, 410. entertains Mr Prior with several Noblemen at dinner, 418. a letter of his to the D. of Argyle intercepted by the Rebels, 449. removed from the office of Secretary of State, 503. resigns his place of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 523. is against the Peerage-bill, 586. admitted to kiss the King's hand, 317. made President of the Council, and one of the Lords-Judices in the King's absence, ibid. appointed Secretary of State, 649. his letter to the Lord Mayor of London about the plot, 659
- Townshend*, Charles, created Baron of Lynn-Regis, IV. 637
- Trade*, Council of, voted, III. 310. endeavours to retlecte the trade between England and France, 380
- Traerbach*; the French imagined the D. of Marlborough intended to besiege that place, III. 654. besieged and taken by the Allies, 662
- Trant*, Sir Patrick, Commissioner of the Irish revenues, IV. 135
- Treaty*; a private one between K. James and the K. of France, III. 13. another secret treaty between them, 80. between England and Holland for a joint-fleet, 91. another treaty between them, 102. between England and Denmark, ibid. of peace at Ryswick, 351, &c. between France and the Emperor, 363. of Partition, 384. the second treaty of Partition, 407. See Partition. Treaties of the Grand Alliance laid before the Commons, 501. treaty between England, Portugal and Holland, 623, &c. between England and Prussia, 678. draught of an act for a treaty between England and Scotland, 692, 695. of peace between England and Spain signed, IV. 339. taken into consideration by the House of Lords, 352, 365. extracts of it, 391, 408. of peace between Spain and Portugal, 400. barrier-treaty, 408. treaty between Great-Britain and Denmark, 424. between England, Spain, and the D. of Orleans, 499. between England, Holland, and the same Duke, 505. with the Emperor, 508
- Treaty of Commerce* between K. Charles and England, IV. 12. how discovered to the Dutch, 13. treaties of peace and commerce brought to England, and ratified by Q. Anne, 311. motion in the House of Commons to address her to communicate them to that House, 313. laid before the Parliament, 314. the substance of them, ibid. and 390. taken into consideration by the House of Lords, 345, 352. debates thereupon, 352. account of these treaties laid before the Commons, 353. new treaty of commerce between England and Spain, 508
- Treaty* between the Emperor and the King of Sicily, IV. 563. between England and Sweden, 588, 614. between Sweden and Prussia, 615. between England and Denmark, 617, 618
- Treaty* of peace between Great-Britain and Spain, IV. 649. between the Moor and England, 651. private treaty between the Emperor and Spain, which alarms K. George, 660. of Hanover, ibid. debates in Parliament about it, 692. of Seville, 711. of Vienna, ibid.
- Treby*, Sir George, made Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas, III. 193
- Trelawny*, Sir Jonathan, Bishop of Exeter, opposes the rest of the Bishops in Convocation, III. 529. translated to Winchester, IV. 36
- Trenchard*, Sir John, made Secretary of State, III. 237. his character, ibid. dies, 280. author of an argument against Standing Armies, 365
- Trenchard*,

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Trenchard, John, one of the Trustees for the forfeited estates in Ireland, III. 607
Treves taken by the French, III. 565
Trevoir, Sir John, chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, III. 126. his character, ibid. made Fifth Commissioner of the Great Seal, 132. made a Privy-Counsellor, 163. and Master of the Rolls, 236. concerned in corrupting the Members of the House of Commons, 268. expelled the House of Commons for corruption, 269, &c. 276. the Commons design to impeach him, 280
Trevoir, Sir Thomas, made Solicitor-General, III. 236. made a Baron, IV. 254. his speech about the Union, 318. speaks against setting a price on the Pretender's head, 350. not sent for into K. George's Bed-chamber, 401. removed, 412. is against the Septennial-bill, 490, 491. presents the Earl of Oxford's petition, 541. was for the bill against Blasphemy, 647. made Lord Privy-Seal, 646
Triennial Parliaments; act for them repealed, IV. 499, &c.
Triers; the fortifications of it blown up by the Imperialists, III. 699. seized by the French, ibid.
Trimmel, Charles, made Bishop of Norwich, IV. 37, 38. his speech at Dr Sacheverel's trial, 158
Trinidad taken and burnt by the English, III. 532
Trinity; complaint of books against it, III. 374. disputes about it, IV. 412. directions given by the King concerning it, 413, &c. dispute between the Dissenters about it, 607. K. George's directions about it, 646
Trinity College, Dublin; five thousand pounds given for building a library there, IV. 216
Triple Alliance, IV. 508
Tripoli and Tunis, the peace between those places and England renewed, III. 613
Trumbull, Sir William, advises K. William to send a fleet into the Mediterranean, to ruin the French trade with Turkey, III. 214. made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, 253. made Secretary of State, 280. his character, ibid. &c. chosen one of the representatives for the University of Oxford, 302. one of the Lords of the Treasury, 310
Tullibardine, William Murray Marquis of, engaged in the Pretender's service, IV. 437. joins the rest of the Rebels, 446. at the battle of Dumbarton, 460. forced to leave the E. of Mary, in order to cover his own Country, 464. bill to attain him, 483. lands in Scotland, 584. escapes, ibid.
Tumult in Edinburgh and other places on account of the Union, III. 774
Turkme, Prince of, killed at the battle of Stenkirke, III. 209
Turin threatened with a siege by the French, III. 705. besieged by the French, 75, &c. description of that place, ibid. the siege raised, 759
Turks defeated by the Imperialists, III. 187, 188, &c. and at Zenta, 363. peace between them and the Emperor, 385. a Revolution among them, and a new Sultan set up, 669. promise the Emperor not to assist the Hungarians, ibid. declare war against Moscow, IV. 184. peace between them, 214. Charles XII. endeavours to kindle a new war between them and the Czar, 309. defeated before Corfu, 502. defeated by Pr. Eugene, 548. invade the Venetian territories, ibid. peace between them and the Emperor, 565. the Emperor complains that the Courts of Great-Britain and France had endeavoured to stir up the Turks against him, 705
Turner, Francis, Bp of Elm, enters into a plot to restore K. James, III. 166. proclamation for apprehending him, 171
Turner, Sir Charles, made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, IV. 617
Tuscan Dominions; pretensions of the Imperial and Spanish Courts to them, IV. 504
Tuscany, Parma, and Placentia, to be settled on the Q. of Spain's eldest son, IV. 549, 563, 605 Tweedale, John Hay Marquis of, made Lord-Chancellor of Scotland, III. 194, 245.

the King's Commissioner there, 281. his character, ibid. his speech to the Parliament, 282. dismissed, 309. one of the Leaders of the Country-party in Scotland, 596. made High-Commissioner, 648. his speech in Parliament about the Succession, 649, &c. on passing the act of Supply, 651, &c. is made Lord-Chancellor, 652. excuses himself from serving as High-Commissioner, 676. removed from being Lord-Chancellor, 689. presents to Parliament the draught of an answer to the Queen's letter, 692. was for the Union, 771
Two and a half per cent. allowed to the D. of Mariborough, by the Princes who had troops in Q. Anne's service, censured by the Commons, IV. 239, 240

V.

Valencia, campaign there, III. 711, &c. most of the towns there declare for K. Charles, 712. in a Council of war held there, it is resolved to act offensively, IV. 4
Vanbrugh, Sir John, draws the plan of Blenheim-House, III. 678
Vanderbeck, Major-General, commands the Dutch forces sent against the Rebels, IV. 418
Vanderdussen, Monsieur, Pensioner of Gouda, has conferences with the French Commissioners about a peace, IV. 122, &c. 164. one of the Dutch Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, 247. his smart saying to Polignac, about the French Protestants in the Low-Countries, 251
Vane, William, created Baron and Viscount, IV. 617
Vaudemont, Prince of, Commander in Chief of the Confederates infantry, III. 288. his famous retreat, 291. he is thanked by K. William for it, 292. burns the French magazines at Givet, 326
Vaudois; their transactions in Savoy, III. 152, 185, 187. restored, 217. (217.) establishes a fund for maintaining Preschers and Schoolmasters among them, ibid.
Venant, St. taken, IV. 175
Vendôme, D. of, relieves Mantua, III. 566. sent to join the Elector of Bavaria in Tirol, is forced to return back, 620. takes several places in Savoy, 668. has an engagement with Prince Eugene, 705. sent to command in Flanders, 751. fixes himself in a strong camp, ibid. the D. of Mariborough follows him, but cannot bring him to an engagement, IV. 19. appointed to serve under the D. of Burgundy, 68. at variance with him, 74, 79. defeated at the battle of Oudenard, but makes a good retreat, 74, 76. takes Liffingham, 86. surprises a body of English at Brihuega, 180. defeated at Villavieja, ibid. takes possession of Sarragozza, 182. attacks several places in Spain, but to no purpose, 213
Venice; Ambassadors from thence have an audience, III. 792. forbid the Court, IV. 65. their Dominions invaded by the Turks, 548
Vento taken, III. 563
Vernon, James, made Secretary of State, III. 378. the E. of Portland's letter to him about the Partition-Treaty, 383. he sends to the Lord Sommers, ibid. lays before the House of Commons all the papers relating to the Partition-Treaty, 457. made one of the Tellers of the Exchequer, 545
Vernon, George, Lord Willoughby, brings in a bill for suppressing blasphemy and profaneness, IV. 646
Vienna, Court of, proceeds with its usual slowness, III. 624. IV. 46. influenced by jesuitical Councils, and French money, 371
Vigo; Spanish Gallies and French fleet destroyed there, III. 570
Villars, Marshall, sent to reduce the Cevennois, III. 668. made a Duke, and the chief dependance of Louis XIV. 697. retires at the D. of Mariborough's approach, 698. takes part of the garrison of Croon Wessenberg prisoners, 703. demolishes the walls of that town, ibid. passes the Rhine, and makes a great progress in Germany, IV. 13. designs to restore the Elector of Bavaria to his Dominions, 14. repasses the Rhine, ibid. called the fortunate General, and commands in

Dauphiné, 193. sent to command in Flanders, 133. wounded at the battle of Malplaquet, 148. unadvisedly weakens the garrison of Tournay, 133. endeavours to raise the siege of Doway, 171. attacks the foragers of the Allies, 174, 175. baffled that his lines were impregnable, 210. and yet they are surprised by the D. of Mariborough, ibid. Villars reflected upon for it, 211. a favourite of Madam de Maintenon, 212. declares a suspension of arms, 282. forms the design of passing himself or the camp of Denain, 283. his letter to the D. of Ormond about the action there, 287
Villa-Franca taken by the French, III. 184
Villavieja, battle of, IV. 181
Villeroi Marthal de, General of the French, bombards Brussels, III. 295. taken prisoner by Prince Eugene at Cremona, 486. ordered to march into Wirttemberg, and destroy that country, 657. approaches near Landau, but does nothing, 662. hinders the Elector of Bavaria from surprising General Aurququerque, 663. besieges Liege, 698. receives positive orders from the French King to fight the Allies, 744. flies to Louvain after the defeat at Ramillies, 749. sent to command in Dauphiné, IV. 68
Villers, Charlotte, afterwards Lady Orkney, an enemy to the Countess of Mariborough, III. 196
Villars, Edward, Viscount, one of the Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Ryswick, III. 350. made one of the Lords-Justices of Ireland, ibid. and E. of Jersey, and sent Ambassador to France, 379. See Jersey.
Vindication of the Bishop of Exeter, IV. 556
Viviani, Marquis of, passes the Rhine, and defeats the Germans, IV. 13. defeated by them, 14
Vivica Elisavira, Queen of Sweden, makes peace with England, IV. 588. gets her husband, Fredrick Prince of Hesse-Cassel, elected K. of Sweden, 619
Vunderdown, Captain, his expedition to the West-Indies, IV. 30
Union of England and Scotland, bill for it, III. 550. Commissioners to treat about it, 555, &c. their proceedings, 558. the Commission made void by Parliament, 603. the beginning of that Union, 689, &c. treaty for that Union, 692, 695. a clause offered by the D. of Hamilton about it, 695. he moves that the nomination of officers should not be left wholly to the Queen, 696. the Union recommended by the Queen in her speech, 718. address of the Commons thereupon, 719. proceedings about the Union, 734. Commissioners appointed for it, 737, &c. the articles of the Union, 741, &c. presented to the Queen, 739. the Cavaliers in Scotland resolve to oppose the ratification of it, 776. the Nobility there suffered a great diminution by it, ibid. a powerful party in Scotland against it, 770. promoted by the Nobility, ibid. and by the Squadrons, ibid. and 771. debates about it, 771, &c. protests against it, ibid. and 772, &c. addresses against it, 774. tumults in Edinburgh and other places, on account of the same, ibid. it is completed, 777. Commissioners for it rewarded, ibid. debates in the House of Lords concerning it, 781. the Queen's speech concerning the Union, ibid. &c. the articles of it presented to the House of Commons, 782. debates there about the Union, ibid. and again in the House of Lords, 783. bill for enacting it, 787. passed, 788. protests against it, ibid. ill use designed to be made of the 4th and 6th articles of the Union, ibid. &c. congratulatory addresses upon the Union, 791. and IV. 33. resolution of the Commons, for making the Union more complete, 43. which articles of the Union are alterable, 238. the Scots move for an act to dissolve it, 317, &c. petition signed at Edinburgh for that purpose, 328. attacked in the public spirit of the Whigs, 341. the great good of it, and why so earnestly desired by K. William, 394. addresses set on foot in Scotland for dissolving the Union, 412. endeavours for a Remonstrance against the Union, 416, 422

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

- United Provinces*; account of their Government, III. 31, &c. barrier for them, 766
- Universities* for the prerogative, and passive obedience, III. 2, 16. act for vesting in them the presentations to Papists Livings, 98. the leading men there jealous of K. William, 105. the Universities propagate the notion of the Church's being in danger, 715
- University of Dublin*, the Fellows and Scholars of it ejected by K. James, III. 88
- Voltaire*, Monsieur de, his account of the D. of Marlborough's negotiations with Baron Gortz, IV. 15. his account of the D. of Marlborough's and the K. of Sweden's interview, 16
- Votes of Credit*, wherein different from clauses of appropriation, IV. 707
- Urfini* Princes, her interest espoused by the British Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, IV. 310. the States regard for her, 337. Q. Anne obliges herself to procure Limberg for her, 392. to be put in possession of that Duchy, ibid. account of her, ibid.
- Uloom* Island given to the K. of Prussia, IV. 615
- Utrecht*; Conferences for a peace there, IV. 224. the treaty there opened, 247. See Treaty, Peace, and France. Summary of the proceedings there, 253, &c. 302, &c. the treaty signed, 310, &c. See Treaties and Peace.
- W.
- Wade*, Captain Cooper, his cowardice, III. 593. tried and shot for it, ibid. and 594
- Wade*, Brigadier, assists at the conquest of Minorca, IV. 95, &c. acts in Spain, 178, &c. marches to Bath with some forces, 442. puts a guard upon Count Gyllenberg, and seizes his papers, 507. in the expedition to Fige, 604. quells the riot at Glasgow, 687. disarms the Highlanders, 688
- Wager*, Charles, destroys some Spanish galleons, IV. 101. made Rear-Admiral of the Red, 143. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 562. fails with a Squadron to Russia, 697. returns to England, 698. fails to the relief of Gibraltar, 709
- Wagery*; bill to prevent them, IV. 118
- Wake*, Dr William, his state of the Church and Clergy of England, III. 646. made Bp of Lincoln, 687. made Lord Almoner, IV. 452. Archbishop of Canterbury, is against repealing the Schism-act, 579. had protested against passing that same act, 581. presents an address to the King upon his return, 605, 606. is against the Quakers-bill, 655
- Walcouris*, battle of, III. 103
- Waldeck*, Prince, defeated at the battle of Florus, III. 155, &c. commands the Confederate army in Flanders, 182, &c.
- Walden*, Henry Howard Lord, made Com-missary-General of the Musters, III. 572. created Baron of Chylerford and E. of Bindon, 780, 781
- Wales*, Court of Marches there abolished, III. 98
- Walker*, Sir Houenden, commands the Squadron in the Canada expedition, IV. 215
- Wallop*, John, made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, IV. 525. created Baron Wallop and Viscount Lymington, 617
- Walmsley*, Mr, his house the head quarters for the plotters against K. William, III. 199
- Walpole*, Robert, moves for a resumption of the grants made in K. James's Reign, III. 587. made Secretary at war, IV. 67. censured, on account of the forage, 239. writes and speaks against the treaty of peace, 315. in behalf of R. Steele, 343, 344. his speech to prove the Succession in danger, 354. speaks against the Schism-bill, 360. proposes to have the Toleration act extended to Ireland, 363. moves for making good to K. George all Parliamentary funds, 395. made Receiver and Pay-Master-General of the guards and garrisons, and other forces in Great-Britain, and Pay-Master to Chelsea Hospital, and Privy-Counsellor, 404. chosen Chairman of the Committee of Secrecy, 421. draws up the Report, 426. carries up to the House of Lords the articles of impeachment against the L. Bolingbroke, 434.
- Vol. IV.
- the E. of Sunderland infuses jealousies of him into the King, 503. thought to be in a good disposition for the Swedish invasion, 518. resigns his places, 523. a quarrel had like to arise between him and Mr Stanhope, 534. was against allowing more than 12000 men for a standing army, 553. votes for the Mutiny-bill, 557. brings about a reconciliation between the King and the Prince of Wales, 617. taken again into favour, ibid. made Pay-Master-General of the forces, ibid. how far concerned in the Bank-Contract, 625. his scheme for restoring the public credit, 631. made First Commissioner of the Treasury, 641, 649. one of the Lords-Justices, and acts as Secretary of State, 673. opposes the L. Bolingbroke's pardon, 674, 685. created Knight of the Bath and of the Garter, 687. negotiates a Convention between England and Spain, 710, &c.
- Walpole*, Robert, junior, son of the preceding, created a Peer, IV. 673
- Walpole*, Horace, speaks in favour of R. Steele, IV. 344. moves for the payment of the arrears due to the Hanover troops, 396. made Secretary of the Treasury, 649. sent Ambassador to France, 679. had orders to interpose in favour of the Protestants, 681
- Walsh*, Mr, some lines of his golden age, III. 574
- Walton*, Sir George, fails to the Ballick, IV. 697
- War* declared against France by the diet of Ratisbon, the United-Provinces, Spain, England, &c. III. 88, 90. declared against France and Spain, by England, the Emperor, and the States-General, 541, &c. the expenses of it for the twelve last years before the peace of Utrecht amounted to above sixty-eight millions and a half, IV. 353. war declared against Spain, 581
- Warnton* seized by the French and abandoned again, IV. 133
- Warwick*, Edward Rich E. of, tried for murders, III. 391
- Waterford* surrenders to K. William, III. 147
- Watson*, Thomas, Bp of St David's, against the Court, III. 224. unwilling to sign the Association, 322. deprived of simony, 522, 687
- Waugh*, John, made Bp of Carlisle, IV. 673
- Webb*, Major-General, his bravery at the battle of Oudenard, IV. 75. he and others put Picardy under contribution, 79. preserves a convoy from Ostend to Lisle, 84. beats the French at Wynendale, ibid. &c. thanked for it by the House of Commons, and honoured with the order of generosity by the King of Prussia, 86, and 116. made Governor of the Isle of Wight, 192. ordered to sell his regiment, 433
- Welsh* Copper and Lead Company, open their books, IV. 622, 623
- Wilwood*, Dr James, taken into custody for the Mercerius Reformatus, III. 192. made one of the Physicians in ordinary to K. William, ibid.
- Wems*, David Wems, E. of, chosen one of the sixteen Peers, IV. 64. whence defended, 450
- Westmoreland*, Thomas Fane, E. of, made First Commissioner of trade, IV. 617
- Wymouth*, Henry Frederic Thynne, Lord Viscount, made a Privy-Counsellor, III. 545. resigns his place of Commissioner of trade, 792
- Wharton*, Mary, carried away by Colonel Campbell, III. 161
- Wharton*, Thomas, one of the Commissioners to inspect the books of the Chamberlain of London, and of the East-India Company, III. 269. Comptroller of the King's Household, 274. his report about the East-India affair, ibid. and 277. carries the Duke of Leeds's impeachment up to the House of Lords, 278
- Wharton*, Thomas Lord, moves for an addition to the Lord's address, III. 452. is against the Occasional Conformity-bill, 628. his petition about the honour of Richmond, and the proceedings of the Lords thereupon, 641. supplies and manages the Aylesbury men, 682. opens the debate for the act of Regency, 720. his speech about the danger of the Church, 726. was born a dissenter, ibid.
- created Viscount Winchendon and E. of Wharton, 780. speaks in behalf of the Union, 781. another speech of his in the debate about it, 786. his speech about the decay of trade, IV. 40. the D. of Marlborough expostulates with him, ibid. made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 104. holds a Parliament there, 148. returns to England, 149. his speech at Dr Sacheverell's trial, 157. resigns the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 191. held a Parliament in that Kingdom, ibid. &c. turned out of his place of Chief-Justice in Eyre, 195. moves for the Lords entering their protests, 198. speaks against the peace, 227, 228. and against the resumption of K. William's grants, 245. his speech on occasion of the D. of Ormond's refusing to fight, 261. upon the Queen's communicating the plan of peace to the Parliament, 269, &c. attempt in the House of Commons to fasten a misdemeanor on him, 313. moves for an address that the Pretender should be removed out of Lorrain, 322, 349. makes a complaint against the public spirit of the Whigs, 340. represents the danger that threatened the Protestant Succession, 345, 348. his speech about the Catalan, 347, &c. and about the peace, 353. speaks against the Schism-bill, 361. complains of some being lifted in the Pretender's service, 364. his speech on account of the Pretender's not being removed out of Lorrain, 365. about the Spanish trade, 366. moves for an address to the Queen about the Assiento, ibid. received with great favour by K. George, 402. made Lord Privy-Seal, 404. his speech about the address to the Kings, 467. his death and character, 421
- Wharton*, Philip, Duke of, his speech about the South-Sea Scheme, IV. 611. one of the hell-fire club, 646. goes to Vienna, Rome, and Madrid, 691. receives orders to return to England, ibid.
- Wheeler*, Admiral, cast away, III. 252
- Whigs*; beginning of that name and party, III. 15. their character and principles, 17. K. William jealous of them, 40. loses his good opinion of them, 116. they grant him his revenues only from year to year, ibid. and 51, 52. promote the bill for taking the militia from the King and the Lords-Lieutenants, 54. make the King great promises, if he would pass the Corporation-act, 119. republican and moderate Whigs, 27. discontent at the preferring of some men, 195. join against the Court, 231. are again brought into the Administration, 252. disliked Bishop Stillingfleet's being made Archbishop, 260. jealous of the E. of Sunderland, 268. lose their credit in the nation, being charged with robbing the public, 370. grow unpopular, and were for continuing the taxes and army, 437. Q. Anne prejudiced against them, 538. had charged the nation with taxes, of which a large share had been devoured by themselves, 572. have the majority in the House of Commons, 716. join in opposing the inviting over the Princess Sophia, 719, &c. in a state of war with the Tories, IV. 108. alarmed at the E. of Sunderland's removal, 190. removed from the Lieutenantancy of London, 192. uneasy at the doctrine of passive obedience, 195. dislike the peace, 273. hated the Lord-Treasurer for having done too much, 328. The publick Spirit of the Whigs, a pamphlet, 340. take all imaginable care to secure the Protestant Succession, 346, &c. sign an association, 347. Whig Lords hold a consultation at the E. of Halifax's, 351. try to inflame the animosity between the E. of Oxford and the L. Bolingbroke, 368. elated at K. George's accession, 402. he was fond of them, 404. enemies of France, 405. have the majority in the Parliament, 415. laid to intend to give the King a larger revenue than his predecessors had enjoyed, 422. divided, 522, 536. exclaimed against the creation of Peers in Q. Anne's reign, 585
- Whiston*, William, his character and odd notions, IV. 207. the censure passed on him not confirmed by Q. Anne, 254
- Whitaker*, Sir Edward, Admiral, assists in the conquest of Minorca, IV. 96. reduces Port-Fornelli, 97. brings forces from Naples to Spain, 141. made Vice-Admiral of the white, 143
- g C
- White,

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

White-Friers ceased to be a privileged-place, III. 349

Whitehall; part of it burnt down, III. 371.

burnt almost entirely, 378

Whitehall preachers appointed by K. George, IV. 680

Whitebeck, Sir William, his saying upon the motion for adding Q. Anne to have the Pretender removed out of Lorrain, IV. 323

Whitehead, William, made Chief-Justice of Ireland, IV. 404

Whiddrington, William Lord, discharged, IV. 547

Wight, Captain, his letter about the D. of Ormond, IV. 425

Wightman, Major-General, his account of the battle of Dumbblain, IV. 461, &c. defeats the Rebels in Scotland, 584

K. WILLIAM III. and Q. MARY are declared King and Queen, III. 25. uneasy at the provision required for the Princess of Denmark, 52. proclaimed King and Queen of Scotland, 70, 72. acknowledged by an act rightful and lawful Sovereigns, 129

K. WILLIAM settles a Privy-Council and appoints a Ministry, III. 38. grows jealous of the Whigs, 40. his speech to his first Parliament, 41. attempts to have the Sacramental-Test taken away, 45. uneasy at the revenue being granted him only from year to year, 52. his letter to the Dutch, 54. his speech to the Scotch Lords, 62. his letter to the Convention in Scotland, 67. declares war against France, 90. goes to Portsmouth, and distributes rewards to the officers, and sailors who were at the fight of Bantry-Bay, 92. buys Kenington Palace, ibid. dines with the Lord-Mayor, 104. promotes a comprehension, and gives a Commission to some Divines for that purpose, 106, 109. his speech of his own compulsion, to the Parliament, 111. displeased with the Whigs, by reason of their closeness in his interest, and their granting him the Civil List but for one year, 116. a conspiracy against him, 117. the King, not knowing how to trust the Tories, and being determined not to trust the Whigs any more, resolves to go to Holland, and leave the Government in the Queen's hands, but alters his design, and goes to Ireland, 119. the customs settled upon him for four years, and the hereditary excise for life, 128, 129. rejects a proposal made to him for seizing K. James, 133. lands in Ireland, 133. forbids any violence on the country people, 134. orders his whole army to move towards the Boyne, 135. receives a slight wound, from whence a rumour of his being killed spreads as far as Paris, 135. defeats K. James at the battle of the Boyne, and behaves with great bravery during the whole action, 136, &c. some thought he would not have hazarded a battle, 145. publishes a Declaration promising pardon and protection to the Irish, ibid. a design formed to assassinate him, 146. issues out a Proclamation for crying down King James's brass money, ibid. catches a soldier who was robbing a poor woman, and causes him and some others to be hanged, ibid. publishes a second pardon, 147. sets out for Holland and is in great danger on the coast there, 163. his speech at the Congress at the Hague, 164, &c. plot against him by Lord Preston, 166. returns to England, ibid. goes to Holland again to command the confederate army, 174. escapes narrowly being killed, 183. the Spaniards offer to deliver the Government of Flanders to him, 188. comes back to England, ibid. party formed against him, 189. was thought to love the Dutch more than the English, and was naturally silent and morose, ibid. and 238. fond of his prerogative, 189. not pleased with the Presbyterians in Scotland, 195. goes to Holland, 196. a plot for assassinating him formed by Colonel Parker, &c. marches towards Namur intending to relieve that place, 206. blamed for not hazarding a battle to relieve so important a place, 207. his uneasiness at seeing the English not duly relieved at the battle of Steenkirk, 208. Grandvaux's and Dumont's plot to assassinate him, ibid. puts out a Proclamation against vice and immorality, 218. returns to England, 219. dines with the Lord-Mayor, &c. at Guild-Hall, ibid. is advised to send away all the foreign forces he had in England, 227. and to demand of the Dutch and Spaniards cautionary towns, 230 books, pretending to prove that he and Q. Mary came by way of conquest, burnt, 231.

refuses to pass the bill for the frequent calling and meeting of Parliaments, 233. jealous of his ministers, who are thought to betray him, 237. party formed against him, ibid. &c.

was not easy of access, 238. took no notice of the Clergy, and shewed no great regard for Religion or the Church, ibid. goes to Flanders, ibid. his bravery at the battle of Landen, 239. escapes narrowly being killed, 240. finds he had been too hasty in trusting foes in Scotland, 245. does not take due notice of that Kingdom, 246. returns to England, 247. refuses to pass the Place-bill, 250. makes an alteration in his Ministry, 252. goes to Holland, 253. commands the army, 255. returns to England, 259. in- comfortable for the loss of his Queen, 261, &c. reconciled with the Princess Anne, 263.

his declaration for the strict discipline of the army, 269. was apt sign papers in a hurry, 284. goes to Holland, 281. his letter to the Parliament of Scotland, 282. vindicated from being the author of the murder at Glencoe, 286. besieges Namur, 289. his letter of thanks to Prince Laudemont upon his famous retreat, 292. his reputation raised by the taking of Namur, 299. comes back to England, 300. takes a progress to Stamford, &c.

301. issues out a Proclamation for calling in the clipped money, 307. addresses presented to him about the Scotch East-India Company, 308, &c. disowns the act made for it, 309. his answer to the Commons address against the grant to the Earl of Portland, 312. not inclined to believe the reports about the assassination-plot, 313. the several ways contrived to assassinate him, 316. Pendergrafs and de la Rue give him an account of that plot, ibid. his speech to the Parliament on the discovery of the plot, 320. refuses the royal assent to a bill for regulating the elections of Members of Parliament, 323. gives the royal assent to Fenwick's attainder, 346. appoints regents, and goes to Holland, 350. gains great reputation by the peace of Ryswick, 364. returns to England, ibid. despised pagantry, ibid. his letters to the E. of Galway about disbanding the army, ibid. and 376, 389. was against disbanding the army, 364, &c. extremely uneasy at the resolution taken to do it, 367, 368. a revenue for life granted him, 369. goes to Holland, and leaves sealed orders behind him, 382. his letter to the Lord Sommers, 383. returns to England, 386. is so uneasy at disbanding his Dutch guards, that he resolves to leave the Government, 387. his message to the Commons about the Dutch guards, 388. goes to Holland, 392. chagrined at the proceedings of the Commons, ibid. his letters to the E. of Galway, ibid. and 402, 437. endeavours to prevent a breach between Sweden and Denmark, 394. returns to England, ibid. his answer to the Commons remonstrance, 395. the grants of lands, he had made in Ireland resumed by the Commons, 398, &c. his answer to the Commons address about them, 400. very much against it, and very uneasy, 401. his letter to the D. of Queensbury and Privy-Council of Scotland, 407. goes to Holland, 409. is weary of the nation, which is highly discontented, 410. through his mediation a peace is concluded between Denmark and Sweden, 411. highly reflected on by the Imperial and Spanish Courts, about the Partition-Treaty, 414. returns to England, 422. his letter to the Parliament of Scotland, ibid. &c. full of indignation at the French not observing the Treaty of Partition, 431. falls into an ill state of health, and his legs swell, 433. the Whigs complain of his conduct, 437. fees the necessity of a new war, 438. alarmed at the Preliminaries of the bill of Succession, 444. orders his Envoy at the Hague to enter into negotiations with the Ministers of France and Spain, for securing the tranquillity of Europe, 446. acquaints the Parliament with his negotiations for the mutual security of England and Holland, 447. his answer to the Commons address about the Partition-Treaty, ibid. and to the House of Lords about the same,

453. his message to the House of Commons about the French King's answer to the States-General, ibid. his answer to the Commons advice upon that message, ibid. owns the K. of Spain, ibid. his letter to him, 454. sends succours to the States, 455. his answer to the Commons address for removing the Lords Portland, Sommers, Orford, and Hullifax, 460. not pleased with the Tories, 471, &c. in a bad state of health, 480. goes to Holland, his speech to the States there, ibid. &c. goes to view the frontier garisons, 481. uneasy at the E. of Rachisther's temper, 488. orders the E. of Manchester to quit France upon the Pretender's being proclaimed there, 492. pleased with the addresses sent to him upon the proclaiming of that person, 495. falls ill at the Hague, and declares to the E. of Portland, that he found himself so weak, he did not expect to live long, 496. returns to England, ibid. his scheme to reduce the power of France, 504. his letter for an union with Scotland, 505. has a fall from his horse, and breaks his collar bone, ibid. dies, 507. his character, ibid. &c. his reserved behaviour to the Princess Anne, 538. his saying of the D. of Marborough, ibid. the funds fell upon his death, 539. the conformation in Holland upon the news of his death, 540. great rejoicings in France upon that account, 542. the disaffected greatly rejoice at the same, and vilify the deceased King with libels, verses, &c. 550. a report of some papers found in his strong box, for getting the Elector of Hanover declared his immediate Successor, ibid. &c. his papers visited upon that account, the report found to be false and malicious, and the spreaders of it ordered to be prosecuted, 551. clamours against his administration, and the management of the revenue in his reign, 584. a motion for refusing all the grants made in his reign, 587. one expelled for aspersing his memory, IV. 149. about drinking to his memory, ibid. his statue defaced, 192. design in the House of Commons to resume his grants, 203. the K. of Prussia presses the settling of his Succession, 214. had 50,000*l.* per annum for Contingencies, 239. bill to examine into the grants made by him, 245, &c. his birth-day solemnized by the Whigs, 297. a picture of his burnt, 425. debate about the conspirators against him, 426

William-Augustus, now Duke of Cumberland born, IV. 651

William's or Coehorn Fort, at Namur, III. 290

Williams, Sir William, his odd behaviour at the trial of the Lancashire Plotters, III. 266, 267. his speech against the grant made to the E. of Portland, 312. was against signing the Association, 322

Williamson, Captain, brings to England the news of the conclusion of the barrier-treaty, IV. 424

Wilks, Lieutenant-General, at the siege of Lisfe, IV. 80. detached to secure Warnton, 133

Willoughby, Sir Thomas, created Baron Widdowson, IV. 734

Willes, General, commands the garrison of Lerida, IV. 11. marches to Terragona, 12. serves in Spain, 177. taken prisoner at Brihuega, 180

Willes, John, now Lord Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas, writes an answer against Hereditary Right, IV. 334

Wilmore, — his paper against the Lieutenantcy of London, III. 233. taken up for it, 234

Window-Tax; bill for it, IV. 525

Winchester, Charles Poulet Marquis of, made one of the Lords-Justices of Ireland, III. 350

Winchelsea, William Finch E. of, made First Commissioner of Trade, IV. 219

Windsor, Captain Edward, dismissed for neglect of duty, IV. 102

Windsor, Thomas Lord, made Lieutenant-General, IV. 192. created Baron Monjoy, 234

Wines, French, a new impost of 8*l.* a tun upon them, III. 232. act for the importation of them into Scotland, 603

Winnington, Sir Francis, Chairman of a Committee, III. 225

Winter; see inter;

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

- Winter*; a severe one, IV. 93, 119
Wintoun, George Seaton E. of, takes arms for the Pretender, IV. 445. his character, 448. advises the Highlanders not to march into England, 454. goes off, but soon returns, however, he is never after called to any Council of War, 455. taken prisoner at Preston, 459. committed to the Tower, 465. impeached, 482. condemned, 484. escapes out of the Tower, 501
Wirtemberg, Prince of, led the vanguard at the battle of Steenkirk, III. 208. his pay settled according to the English Establishment, 226
Wirtemberg, Duchy of, laid under contributions by the French, IV. 14
Wirtemberg, D. of, taken prisoner by the French, III. 223. sends K. William notice of K. James's being come to Calais, 319. commands the Danish troops, and was well-affected to the Allies, 745
Wijnar taken by the Confederates, IV. 538
Wolfenbuttle, D. of, enters into the French interest, III. 487. levies troops for France, but is disarmed, 504. forced to quit the K. of France's party, 558
Wolfenbuttle, Princes of, embraces Pope-ry, and is married to K. Charles, afterwards Emperor, IV. 32
Wollin Island given to Prussia, IV. 615
Wood, Lieutenant-General, at the siege of Lijst, IV. 80. charges a party of French with two battalions only, 82
Wood, William, account of his half-pence, IV. 675
Woodstock granted to the D. of Marlborough, III. 677
Woodward, Dr., made Dean of Sorum, III. 173. chosen Prolocutor, 530. dies, 531
Wool, act against the exportation of it, III. 371. resolutions against the exporting it into Scotland, 675, 676
Woollen Manufacture; a bill for wearing it, III. 98. addresses against the woollen manufacture in Ireland, 376. woollen manufactures hurt by the treaty of commerce, IV. 315 Wratislaw, Count, presents a memorial to Q. Anne, III. 653. waits upon the D. of
- Marlborough*, and settles all things for his march, 654. adjusts all differences between the Emperor and the K. of Sweden, IV. 19. comes to Francofort, and to the Hague, 21
Wright, Sir Nathan, made Lord-Keeper, III. 406. and one of the Lords-Justices, 409. had put Justices of Peace in and out, 644. his character, ibid. compliments the D. of Marlborough, 676. dismissed from his office, and is despised even by the Tories, his character, 716
Worms burnt by the French, III. 103
Wyndham, Sir William, speaks in favour of the treaty of commerce, IV. 315. made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 328. and a Privy-Counsellor, 335. his speech about the peace, 344. moves for the Schism-bill, 359. speaks for it, 360, 363. is against an addition to an address against the Pretender, 364. designed for one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, 368. some move for making him Chairman of the Grand Committee of Subsidy, 396. his speech about the arrears to the Hanover troops, 397. objects against the King's proclamation for calling a new Parliament, 419. reprimanded for it by the Speaker, 420. taken into the custody of a messenger, 439. and committed to the Tower, 440, 497. discharged, and moves that Dr. Snape be appointed to preach before the Commons on K. Charles's Restoration, 536
Wynendale, battle of, IV. 84
Wynne, William, Bp of St Asaph, supports the motion for an address from Oxford, 516
- X.
Xativa, the English retire thither, IV. 10
- Y.
York, John Sharpe Archbp of, sworn a Privy-Counsellor, IV. 105. speaks in Dr. Sacheverell's behalf, 158. against Lay-Baptism, 255
Young, Robert, forms a plot against several persons, III. 218
Young, William, his speech for a Supply,
- IV. 525. made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, 679. his marriage with Mary Heathcoat dissolved, 686
Yule Vacance, IV. 244
- Z.
Zealand plundered by a body of French, IV. 276, &c.
Zell or Zell, George William D. of, made Knight of the Garter, III. 163. forces the D. of Wolfenbuttle to quit the interest of France, 558
Zenta; the Turks defeated there, III. 363.
Ziher; account of him, III. 699
Zinzendorf, Count, IV. 18, 22, 121. the Emperor's Plenipotentiary at the Hague, 127. has conferences with the Ministers, ibid. and 128, 130, 165, 168. is one of the Emperor's Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, 248. demands the restitution of the whole Spanish Monarchy, 250. sends expresses to the Emperor, upon the D. of Ormond's refusing to fight, 260. his memorial to the States upon the peace, 276. proposes a plan for the Empire, furnishing four millions of crowns, 295. sends Q. Anne's plan of peace to Vienna, 304. draws up some new proposals for a negotiation between the Imperial and French Ministers, 305, &c. communicates a second plan of peace, 307. endeavours to have the signing of the treaty of Utrecht put off, 310. disgusted at the offers of France, 311. insists upon preserving the privileges of the Catalans, 380. his letter to Mr de Palms published, 704
Zobor, Count, quarrels with Count Strahlenheim, IV. 17. delivered up to the K. of Sweden, 18. released, 19
Zumunggen, General, employed in Sicily, IV. 590, &c. complaint against him, 593. his sedate temper, ibid. goes and besieges Messina, 595. has a Conference with Admiral Byng, 599. advances to Palermo, 601
Zuysestein, William Henry de Nassau L. of, sent by the Prince of Orange to K. James, III. 22, 23. made Master of the Robes, 41. goes along with King William to Holland, 164

Directions for placing the Cuts, &c. in Mr Tindal's Continuation, in Two Volumes in Folio.

VOL. I.

✓ King William, to face the Title
✓ Queen Mary, after the Introduction
Sir William Temple Introduction xiv.
Earl of Nottingham (Finch) —	38
✓ Duke of Schomberg —	136
✓ Earl of Rochester —	190
✓ Robert Boyle, Esq; —	238
✓ General Talmash —	254
✓ Archbishop Tillotson —	260
✓ Marquis of Hallifax —	281
✓ John Docks, Esq; —	327
✓ Lord Sommers —	403
✓ Duke of Gloucester —	409
v. Vol III Queen Anne —	533
do Duke of Marlborough —	536
Earl of Peterborough —	706
✓ Earl of Godolphin —	792

M A P S of

England —	Introduction 1
Scotland —	Page 57
Ireland —	185
France, at the End of Vol. I.

VOL. II.

Prince of Denmark, to face the Title	Page.
Lord Carleton —	55 ✓
Earl of Orford, (Russell) —	143 ✓
Duchess of Marlborough —	187 ✓
Sir Richard Steele —	340 ✓
Earl of Orkney —	346 ✓
King George —	347 ✓
Dr Samuel Clarke —	415 ✓
Marquis of Wharton —	421 ✓
Sir William Wyndham —	440 ✓
Duke of Argyle —	443 ✓
Joseph Addison, Esq; —	525 ✓
Sir Isaac Newton —	552 ✓
Earl of Sunderland —	568 ✓
Lord Torrington —	630 ✓
Lord Talbot —	633 ✓
Earl of Orford, (Walpole) —	633 ✓
Sir Samuel Garth, } at the End of the Alexander Pope, Esq; } Reign of King
	George I. p. 706. ✓

M A P S of

Spain and Portugal.
Italy.
Holland.
Flanders.
North-East Germany.
North-West Germany.
South-East Germany.
South-West Germany.
North America.
South America.

C H A R T S of the Baltic Sea.

German Ocean.
Irish Sea.
English Channel.
Mediterranean Sea.
Bay of Biscay.
All at the End of the Volume.

Special folio 84-B 32764
v.2

